nishes us—at the rate of fifty dollars a man—with the sure means of reaching "the grand lodge above where the Supreme Architect of the universe forever presides, forever reigns." Had I never read a word in the Bible, the Masonic doctrine of the rite of Preparation would be abhorrent both to my reason and common sense, and hence I am at a loss to understand how any man professing to be a minister of the Gospel can support and defend an institution which thus attempts to subvert the religion of Christ and to "make the Word of God of no effect by their tradition." But our divine Redeemer expressly states, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." Now, which am I to believe, the Lord Jesus Christ, or Masonic tradition and the mouthings of Masonic authors and orators? Which, my reverend friend, are you bound to believe, the divine Master whom you profess to serve, or the Masonic lodge to whose behests you have sworn allegiance under the fearful penalty of having your body ruthlessly mutilated and consigned to an unknown and unhonored grave? If Freemasonry professes to "guide" the unregenerate and "point him to the path which leads to God," when the Saviour expressly declares that he alone is "the way, the truth, and the life," and that no man (Mason or Anti-mason) can approach the Father except through him, then I think my duty is plain and that I must obey God rather than man,—nay, more, that I must of necessity believe that Freemasonry is the anti-Christ, and hence that no man professing Christianity much less an ordained minister of the Gospel, should belong to any such institution. One or two passages more and I shall leave the Masonic cable-tow, hoodwink, etc., to those who delight in such ridiculous anti-Christian trash.

"I am the door; by me if any man enter in he shall be saved and he shall go in and out and find pasture." Not by the mystic power of Grand Lodge Masonry, not by the cable-tow, not by the everlasting ol1 drawers and hoodwind; but 'by Me if any man enter in he shall be saved;" for "by one Spirit we have access unto the Father." O what a fearful antagonism there is between Christianity and Freemasonry, and what a terrible account shall those ministers be called upon to render up who affiliate with this vile institution and become supporters of its paganism and infidelity. As the "sweet Psalmist of Israel" beautifully expresses it, "I would rather be a door keeper in the house of my God," than be a Worshipful Master or even the most Puissant Grand Master of a Masonic lodge. And let us fervently hope that the time is coming when no Christian, whether clergyman or layman, will have any connection with Freemasonry or any of its numerous offspring. Let us hope that Masonry has seen its best and brightest days, as I really believe it has, and that the time is fast approaching, if not already arrived, when no oath-bound office-seeker shall be elected to a position of trust or emolument under this free government. Let us all pray for this. Let us all work for it, and let every Christian man in the country firmly resolve never to pay one cent towards the support of a minister who has been cable-towed and hoodwinked in a Masonic lodge unless he renounces forever all allegiance to the craft. This is the sincere desire of one who has been a teacher, a lecturer in the lodge, and who now subscribes himself

Warning.

BY F. F. FRENCH.

But if the watchman see the sword coming, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand. ——Ez. xxxiii. 6.

All of God's people are watchmen, according to the light they have. If, therefore, the Lord's watchmen fail to warn the people of what they understand to be sin, according to their ability, they become traitors to the cause of Christ. Just as the sentinel who knowingly suffers an enemy to come upon a slumbering army without warning it of its danger, is a traitor to the trust committed to his keeping.

This is the principle by which it becomes a duty for me to make the following statements.

On the evening of the 6th of October, 1872, in a social meeting, I reproved the sin of Masonry, as existing in the membership of the M. E. church, Hardwick, Vt. I compared it to the "doctrine of Balaam," as condemned in the second chapter of Revelation, repeating verses 13 to 16.

At the close of the meeting, the pastor, and several of the members of the church said that I had disturbed the meeting. They professed not to be in sympathy with Masonry, but said the social meeting was not the place to reprove it. The pastor, the Rev. C. Tabor, said that I must desist, in the future, or he should take measures to stop me.

Accordingly, (feeling that I might be wrong in my convictions of duty), I desisted for a while from saying anything about it in social meetings. But again becoming satisfied that my convictions were right, I reproved not only the sin of Masonry, but other phases of worldly conformity, such as antiquarian, and other church festivals, or parties, for the avowed object of raising money for benevolent purposes.

During the time that intervened between my first and second reproofs, I explained, in private interview, my views and feelings in regard to these public church errors, or sins, to nearly all of the leading members of the church. Some of them agreed with me, but made no effort to right the wrong. I continued my public reproof of these sins, occasionally, according as I thought that circumstances and the spirit of God required.

On one occasion, the pastor ordered me to stop three or four times. I answered him by saying, "I shall not." Finding out my determination, he suffered me to finish my remarks without further disturbance. On several occasions he commenced singing while I was speaking. I invariably waited until he was done singing, and then proceeded with my remarks. He next threatened a civil suit against me for disturbing the peace.

As a preliminary move to the civil suit, he called a kind of church council, and this council chose a committee to visit me, and inform me of the consequences, if I continued longer to disturb their meetings, by introducing therein the subject of Masonry, and other things above mentioned. This committee consisted of Masons and their equals; only one of whom maintained even a form of godliness. One of the four members of the committee, a Mason, visited me. I could not, however, comply with his request.

As another preliminary step to the civil suit, he secured the approval of his presiding elder, the Rev. I. McAnn of the St. Johnsbury district, (and as I was informed, although I cannot vouch for its truthfulness) consulted the Rev. W. D. Malcom, of the St. Albans district. He also conferred with the preacher in charge, and some of the members of the Wolcott M. E. church, in an adjoining town, (of which church I was a member) and informed them against me.

Accordingly I received a visit from the Rev. J. C. Langford, a preacher in charge of the Wolcott church, and Mr. Harvey Taylor, a leading member of the church, and chaplain of the lodge, together with Mr. S. R. Norris, a leading member of the Hardwick church. As near as I could judge, they did not come to ascertain whether the reports against me were true or not, but to advise and urge me to repent, make proper acknowledgements and promise reformation in the future. I would not, however, give them the least encouragement in either particular.

The next day, the Rev. Mr. Langford called on me, and presented me with a bill of charges and specifications, covering three pages of foolscap. He read the bill in my hearing (I have never read it) and desired me to choose between two days that he mentioned, for the trial. I told him it would make no difference with me, as I thought it doubtful about my paying any attention to it. He selected the day, but I did not attend.

The trial was at Wolcott; and on the day apppointed the Hardwick witnesses went on in force, and how many more I know not. I have no doubt the trial was harmonious, and the finding of the committee a clear case, according to evidence; judging at least from a letter which I received from the Rev. Mr. Langford soon afterward.

I will make the following extracts from the letter:

WOLCOTT, Vt., Nov. 4, 1873.

F. F. French, Hardwick.

BRO. FRENCH:—It is my painful duty to inform you that the charges preferred against you, were fully sustained in every specification by a unanimous vote of the committee. As you was not, present either in person or by counsel, I did the best I could under the circumstances, and appointed the Rev. C. Wedgeworth of Hyde Park as your counsel. . . . . I am sorry you was not present. If you had been here, we should have heard you in your own defense, but you was not. And now I pray you suffer a word of advice from a Bro. in Christ, who, though younger in years than yourself, yet I think knows something of this religion of love, which teaches us to hide another's faults, and at the same time labor with them for their salvation. I did hope that you would have been willing to have taken back the language which you used toward Bro. Tabor, and have confessed it was unChristian conduct to speak of a man in his position, as the witnesses declare you did. And I still hope you will be willing to acknowledge your error in the matters charged against you. All that is required to hush the matter up forever, is an acknowledgement of the wrong in the matters with which you are charged, and a promise to abstain from all unprofitable discussion in social meetings in the future."

Signed, Yours cordially,
J. C. LANGFORD,
pastor M. E. church, Wolcott, Vt."

The language alluded to in the above extract, as being used by me, "towards Bro. Tabor," was the fourth and fifth verses of the third chapter of second Timothy; which language it was my very painful duty to repeat, and apply to the Rev. C. Tabor at the close of a social meeting.

After the reception of the letter from which the above extracts are made, I received a second letter from the Rev. Mr. Langford, informing me of my expulsion from the M. E. church at Wolcott, in accordance with the finding of the committee referred to in the above extracts.

The Responsibilities of the Present Century.

[From Geo. Wm. Curtis' oration at the Concord Centennial, Apr. 19th.]

Such was the vision and the exulting faith of 50 years ago. "Atlantis hath risen from the ocean," cried Edward Everett to applauding Harvard; and Daniel Webster answered from Bunker Hill, "If we fail popular governments are impossible." So far as they could see, they stood among the unchanged conditions of the early republic. But within the last half century causes then latent or wholly incalculable before, have radically changed those conditions, and we enter upon the second century of the republic with responsibilities which neither our fathers nor the men of 50 years ago could possibly foresee.

Think, for instance, of the change wrought by foreign immigration, with all its necessary consequences. In the State of Massachusetts to-day the number of citizens of foreign birth who have no traditional association with the story of Concord and Lexington is larger than the entire population of the State on the day of battle. The first 50 years after the battle brought to the whole country fewer immigrants than are now living in Massachusetts alone. At the end of that half century, when Mr. Everett stood here, less than 300,000 foreign immigrants had come to this country, but in the 50 years that have since elapsed that immigration has been more than 9,000,000 of persons. The aggregate population in the last 50 years has advanced somewhat more than three fold, the foreign immigration more than thirty fold, so that now immigrants and the children of immigrants are a quarter of the whole population. This enormous influx of foreigners has added an immense ignorance and entire unfamiliarity with republican ideas and habits to the voting class. It has brought other political traditions, other languages, and other religious faiths. It has introduced powerful and organized influences not friendly to the republican principle of freedom of thought and action. It is to the change produced by immigration that we owe the first serious questioning of the public school system, which was the nursery of the early republic, and which is to-day the palladium of free popular government.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not lamenting even in thought the boundless hospitality of America. I do not forget that the whole European race came hither but yesterday and has been domesticated here not yet 300 years. I am not insensible of the proud claim of America to be the refuge of the oppressed of every clime, nor do I doubt in her maturity her power, if duly directed, to assimilate whole nations, if need be, as in her infancy she achieved her independence, and in her prime maintained her unity. But if she has been the hope of the world, and is so still, it is because she has understood both the conditions and the perils of freedom, and watches carefully the changing conditions under which republican liberty is to be maintained. She will still welcome to her ample bosom all who choose to be called her children. But if she is to remain the mother of liberty, it will not be the result of those craven counsels whose type is the ostrich burying his head in the sand, but of that wise and heroic statesmanship whose symbol is her own heaven soaring eagle, gazing undazzled even at the spots upon the sun.

In New-England the characteristic village and local life of the last half century perishes in the age of steam. Meanwhile the enormous accumulation of capital engaged in great enterprises, with unscrupulous greed of power, constantly tends to make itself felt in corruption of the press which molds public opinion, and of the Legislature which makes the laws. Thus steam and the telegraph tend to the concentration of capital and the consolidation of political power, a tendency which threatens liberty, and which was wholly unknown when the Republic began, and was unsuspected fifty years ago.

But the most formidable problem for popular government which the opening of our second century presents, springs from a source which was unsuspected a hundred years ago, and which the orators of fifty years since forbore to name. This was the system of slave labor, which vanished in civil war. But slavery had not been the fatal evil that it was, if with its abolition its consequences had disappeared. It holds us still in mortmain. Its dead hand is strong, and its living power was terrible. Emancipation has left the Republic exposed to a new and extraordinary trial of the principles and practices of free government. A civilization resting upon slavery, as formerly in part of the country, however polished and ornate, is necessarily aristocratic, and hostile to republican equality, while the exigencies of such a society forbid that universal education which is indispensable to wise popular government. When war emancipates the slaves and makes them equal citizens, the ignorance and venality which are the fatal legacies of slavery to the subject class, whether white or black, and the natural alienation of the master class, which alone has political knowledge and experience, with all the secret conspiracies, the reckless corruption, the political knavery, springing naturally from such a situation, and ending often in menacing disorder that seems to invite the military interference and supervision of the government—all this accumulation of difficulty and danger lays a strain along the very fiber of free institutions.

* * * * * *

No royal governor, indeed, sits in yon stately capital, no hostile fleet for many a year has vexed the waters of our coasts, nor is any army but our own ever likely to tread our soil. Not such are our enemies to-day. They do not come proudly stepping to the drum-beat, with bayonets flashing in the morning sun. But wherever party spirit shall strain the ancient guarantees of freedom, or bigotry and ignorance shall lay their fatal hands upon education, or the arrogance of caste shall strike at equal rights, or corruption shall poison the very springs of national life, there, minute-men of liberty, are your Lexington Green and Concord Bridge, and as you love your country and your kind, and would have your children rise up and call you blessed, spare not the enemy! Over the hills, out of the earth, down from the clouds, pour in resistless might. Fire from every rock and tree, from door and window, from hearthstone and chamber; hang upon his flank and rear from noon to sunset, and so through a land blazing with holy indignation hurl the hordes of ignorance and corruption and injustice back, back, in utter defeat and ruin.

Temperance History.

Prof. Geo. W. Clark, who "leads the singing" latterly in our conventions, is as earnest for temperance as against the lodge or as he used to be against American slavery. Those who have heard his beautiful "Cold Water" song will never forget it. In an address lately given by him in Sparta, N. Y. are the following interesting historical passages. After describing the fearful prevalence of drunkenness in this country six years ago, when liquor taverns were thicker than school-houses, nearly every store sold liquors, and a score of distilleries, "Devil's Teakettles" as they were called, were in full blast in some counties, he continued:

"The nation was reeling and staggering to its fall with sottishness, but thoughtful men, statesmen and philanthropists began to take the alarm. Good and earnest men and ministers began to preach the necessity of "moderation," but moderation did not stay the sweeping tide. In 1804 came Rush's famous "inquiry" which began to tingle the slumbering eyelids of the nation. Next came the powerful appeal of the Rev. Mr. Porter of Ct., in 1806. Then followed the startling report of the committee of Lyme, Ct., on the terrible evils of intemperance. This was followed by the Rev. Lyman Beecher in those very able six sermons, which placed the crime of drink and drink selling clearly before the people; and in 1808 was born the first organized temperance society on the principle of abstinence from distilled liquors in America, at Moro in Saratoga county, in this State. The interest and the discussion as to the causes and the fearful consequences of intemperance spread throughout the country. The new reformers took this common sense view: The use of ardent spirits the cause, abstinence from ardent spirits the remedy. Stop the cause and the effects will cease. Cut off the fountain and the stream will dry up. . . .

Thus preached the early temperance pioneers, encountering everywhere the most powerful opposition. But the cause made progress. Many local societies were formed here and there through the country, and in 1813 came the Massachusetts State Temperance society. Then soon followed other States in the wake, until along up to 1830 and 1840, when the "reformed drunkard's movement" burst forth, the "Washingtonians" entered the field, and the tidal wave of temperance rolled over the land with great power. . .

When the news of our achievements in this cause reached Europe, the hearts of good men there were gladdened with hope, and they began a similar reform; but they found our "'alf and 'alf" pledge of abstinence from "distilled spirits" only, would not do, for the principal drinks there, especially among the lower classes, were their "ales;" so they were compelled to adopt the principle of "total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks." Immense and most enthusiastic meetings were held in London, Manchester, Preston, and many other places, and thousands were hopefully reclaimed, and joy and gladness was carried into many long wretched and hapless homes. The wives of these poor robbed and bloated victims of beer, while listening to the thrilling accounts of their husbands' abject slavery to the beer and gin sellers, their degradation and suffering in consequence, the misery of their families, the great change that came from signing the pledge, the fruit of their labor now carried home to their families, and the new gladness that now lit up their happy homes, would burst out into shouts "that's so John." "that's so," "Glory to God on High." One poor reformed man who stuttered, in closing the account of his experience thanked God that ever "te-te-te-total came to Bamber Bridge" —the place where he lived. From this circumstance originated the term "tee-total" as applied to total abstainers from intoxicating drinks. The work soon spread from England to Scotland and to Ireland, to Stockholm and other places in the old world, and ere long the wonderful "Father Matthew movement" succeeded in Ireland and many thousands were enrolled under his banner, and saved from the curse of drink. Though some of these who struggled so hard for freedom and sobriety and dear life—aided by the counsels and prayers of friends—were drawn back again to ruin and death by the liquor dealers, yet multitudes were enabled to overcome the morbid appetite for their accustomed drinks, and resisting temptation, became sober, Christian men. Alas! even the bonds of the church do not save all the members from the wiles of the devil."

The Infidel Bradlaugh a Freemason.

A few years since the lodges of the Pacific coast were in trouble over the theology of B. F. Underwood, an infidel lecturer and Freemason. They attempted to rule him out, but were met by facts and arguments they were unable to answer. Another case of more note is Charles Bradlaugh, the English iconoclast, whose hand is raised alike against the churches and government of Great Britain. The London correspondent of the New York Daily Graphic writes under date of April 3J:—

The American Freemasons are directly interested in a very pretty quarrel which has been going on between some of their English brethren and Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. It is the common boast of English Freemasons —and I think the same thing is said generally of American members of the mystic tie—that no one can be a Mason who does not believe in God. But when Mr. Bradlaugh, who does not believe in God, was in Boston he was received by the Masons there as a brother; he visited their lodges and made one or two speeches at their festivals. Upon news of this reaching England, a number of Masons rushed into print, declaring that the American Masons had been deceived; that Mr. Bradlaugh was not and could not be a Mason, but that he was, on the contrary, "a cowan and an intruder." They were all wrong, however. The other day Mr. Bradlaugh showed to me his diploma as Master Mason. It is a parchment dated May 11th, 1862, signed by the Grand Master of "Le Grand Orient de France," and by eleven other officials. Mr. Bradlaugh was an avowed atheist long before 1859, and on the 9th of March of that year he was initiated into the Masonic order, and was made Master Mason of the Grand Lodge of France on the date above given. More than this, he joined an English lodge—the Tottenham High Cross Lodge—and held his regular certificate from the Grand Lodge until September of last year, when in consequence of the Prince of Wales being made Grand Master, he returned his certificate canceled. Mr. Bradlaugh's status as a Mason cannot be questioned; and although the fact that he, an avowed atheist, has been a Mason for sixteen years, may embarrass those who boast of Masonry as a religious order, it cannot be denied. The fact is, I presume, that although in England and America the majority of Freemasons happen to be Christians, on the Continent the very reverse is the case, and there is really nothing in Masonry which renders belief in God a necessary condition of membership.

The old city of Troy, had but one gate. You would search in vain for a second through all its high walls in all their ample circumference. There was only one way, and no other could be found that led into the city. Nevertheless, the one gate was passable for all save an enemy.

Even so is the way into life eternal in the city of God. "I am the door," said Christ. "Strait is the gate," he also said; and again, "Enter ye in at the strait gate." Troy was, but Jerusalem the golden is. Its door is wide open, its gate ever accessible. The way there is narrow, but all the lowly can walk in it. The gate is difficult, but all may find it. There is room enough in the great heart of Jesus, room enough within the pearly gate of the ample city for the perishing millions. None need remain outside.

Reform News.

—Elder Barlow has charged his residence from Mulberry street to 65 Johnson street, Syracuse. He wrote on the 27th that Brn. Stratton and Rathbun were to take the train for Connecticut that evening with him.

—Bro. Hinman wrote on Saturday of good meetings at Paxton and Eldena, Ford county, Ill., last week. He speaks in Crawford county this week.

—Bro. Elzea does not find Wisconsin roses without thorns. But such opposition as he has met is a dangerous experiment for the lodge.

H. H. Hinman in Amboy, Lee Co., Ill.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Permit me to report to you very briefly that brother Hinman has paid us a visit, and given us three good lectures to good congregations. The first evening giving a general outline of the objectionable points in Masonry, and its evil tendency and effect on community, its false pretenses and how it falsifies history. The second lecture, showing how a man is prepared, and made a Mason; also showing their pretended charities to be nothing but sham and deception. The third evening he gave from their own standard works, the religion of Masonry, proving conclusively that it is nothing more nor less than naked paganism, devil worship. At the commencement of each lecture, he requested the Masons to notice his statements and if he said anything that was not substantially correct, to contradict it, and if they remained silent the congregation would take it for granted that all he had stated was true. But they all remained silent till after the congregation was dismissed, then among themselves they were saying that his statements were false, but would give no particulars. Before the close of the last lecture, brother Starks of Lee Center, a member of the M. E. church, a seceding Mason, publicly confirmed all that the speaker had said, that he had been made a Mason in the manner described, and also that when the compasses were pressed against his breast, he was told to remember the fate of Morgan, (as much as to say that Morgan was killed for revealing, and you shall share the same fate; that Morgan's book was true). The Masons generally behaved well, that is, like men and not like Masons; but some boys, or young gentlemen, prominent among whom was, as I am informed, a son of the M. E. minister, engaged in burning brimstone before their proper time, that is, they were firing off percussion matches, in the back part of the congregation.

On Sabbath, brother Hinman gave us an excellent sermon, from the text, "Ye are my witnesses," etc., showing that Christ and his Gospel was on trial before the world, as the jury; that Christians were the witnesses, and that they were obligated to tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth; that there always had been, and always would be till the end of this dispensation a vigorous charge by Satan made against Christ and his church under different forms of error, which he named; but that secrecy was that form of error by which Satan was now seeking to destroy the church; that Christians should testify not only by their words, but by their daily life, not going into places where Christ would not go, nor indulging in those amusements that Christ would not patronize, such as croquet, or the squandering of money for tobacco. It would be impossible for me to give a sketch of that sermon, that would do the subject justice. I will only add, every word was directly to the point. HIEL LEWIS.

From Washington County, Wis.—Lodge Rowdyism Foiled.

WAUKESHA, WIS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After the proceedings of the mob at West Bend, nothing was done publicly until Sunday when I preached in the Walter Schoolhouse, about three miles from the Bend, and announced a lecture for the next evening. There were a few secretists present who made some disturbance at the lecture. One Mason present said that "Masonry would put its foot on my neck." At the close there was considerable earnest talk. There were two persons that were evidently doing their best to get the roughs from the Bend to come and break up the lectures. These two belong only to the Good Templars and grangers. The second evening one or two began their rowdyism but were quieted, and on the whole all went off pleasantly. But on the third evening, there were more of the mobocrats on hand, with a doctor and preacher, and they doubtless meant to break up the meeting. I had proceeded but a little way with my lecture, before this doctor took the floor and began to talk; but I was determined not to be broken up, and I extended my hand toward him, and with a tone of authority said, "Sit down. Sit down. You shall not speak till my lecture is finished." Thus I continued perhaps fifty or a hundred times, in all—"Sit down. You shall not speak till I am through with my lecture." I so completely drowned his voice that he could not proceed, but said he would not sit down till I did, and I insisted that he should. Finally the friends began to say to him, "Sit down. Sit down," and soon there was a movement that was quite general through the house, and this would-be bully, by force of circumstances took his seat, squelched, but rebel-like not repentant, hung his head, and smothered his wrath, and with two or three exceptions, was quiet until the lecture was finished. When an opportunity was given, I was the object of his envenomed slang. He was coarse, vicious and false in his statements, worthy of his character and the cause he was there to defend of a mobocrat; and he is the postmaster of West Bend.

I replied to some of his talk, and then the rowdies called for Greely. This Greely is a German M. E. minister. He come to the defense of Good Templarism. His remarks were characterized by personalities, perversions and false statements. Some of these fellows of the baser sort proposed after this blatant doctor had interrupted me, that I should discuss with him, taking half an hour each, and this sapient "Rev." among other things blamed me for not doing so. So that I was under the necessity of informing him that when a lecture was to be given, a few roughs at their will could not change it into a debating club.

I do not like to ask so much space but can scarcely refrain from saying, that a young man, a teacher, by the name of Finnegan. spoke some earnest, eloquent words in condemnation of the course this "reverend" had taken. When asked what he thought of the course this doctor had taken, he said, "The doctor is my personal friend, but if I had been chairman, should have ruled him out of order. When asked about the debating question, he said they had no right to say a word until the close of the lecture, nor then without my permission. His choice of words and manner of delivery, shows him to be a young man of more than ordinary talent, and they had a good effect upon those that heard them. The good cause is greatly strengthened in that section. The advancement made is a glorious triumph, many fast friends have been added, and others set to thinking. The kindness with which I was treated by nearly the whole community will not soon be forgotten. For the war, P. ELZEA.

A Veteran Seceder Still Lecturing Against the Lodge.

CARTHAGE, Ind., April 16, 1875.

Editor of the Cynosure:

The undersigned has been reading your paper during the present year and finding it to be on the right track after the secret foes of God's moral government and our Christian liberty, I therefore want the Christian brotherhood throughout the land to know that I am with you heart and soul in the fight. I have been firing into their dark lodges and trying to rout them from their lurking places, but I have been working under great disadvantages during the last fifteen or twenty years. Our Democracy of the North began to fall in love with the Catholic tory Democracy of Calhoun; from that day forward the secret oaths by which they bound our young democracy throughout the land of free America was in substance just the same as the Jesuits took to destroy the Protestants and confiscate their property, for no sooner were the young knights organized than they began to show that the Christian brotherhood was the party to be persecuted, and all who stood up for "liberty and right" have been persecuted even unto death.

But I will not be more tedious. I am now an old man close to seventy-five years of age. I had long since thought that Freemasonry was literally dead, as we fought it from 1827 to 1833; but its "deadly wound is healed." I have been a teacher in the Christian church for forty three years; was very popular until a portion of our brethren justified slavery and whiskey, and ever since that they are not certain that I am sane. I have been engaged in a few debates on secrecy with its advocates and my proposition is "That a man cannot be a Christian and a Freemason;" I have also delivered some three or four lectures this spring and have generally received the ill-will of the craft. But I find the seed takes in good honest hearts and that is all the Lord would save if he was here. The only chance left is to spread their secrets before the American people. I am now in that service and while our Heavenly Father lets me stay I shall continue in the work. Please send me the worth of the enclosed in your best books and pamphlets to give light to the people, and if you will send me what books I can sell during the summer you shall have all the proceeds, also; if you have any tracts for distribution I will scatter them to the best advantage. From a Christian brother who was a Freemason for seven years previous to the abduction of Morgan.

ELDER DRURY HOLT.

Association Work in Harrison County, Ohio.

DEESVILLE, O., April 23, 1875.

[From a letter to the Corresponding Secretary we take the following interesting items.—ED.]

Our Association now numbers about fifty members. We are holding monthly meetings; subject for discussion at first meeting, "The relation secret societies sustain to civil government and the Christian religion:" a good attendance. The speaker used Masonic authority to substantiate his positions, at which there was some squirming, and some annoyance by the Masons or their "jacks." Subject for second meeting, "The origin of Freemasonry, its deceptive character and demoralizing tendency." Good attendance, all quiet; same subject continued for next meeting. The writer has an invitation to lecture in an adjoining township as soon as arrangements can be made.

We have a strong lodge of determined spirits in this village, but they are not strong enough to face the truth, and they must be overthrown sooner or later.

In reference to taking up annual collections for the reform, I will present the subject to my congregation at an early date and report resnlts. What we need most is an increase of subscribers for the Cynosure. We cannot get people to invest in an enterprise until they are enlightened. I shall do what I can in this direction. Our cause must be sustained, and it will be, for it is God's cause. Yours for the truth as it is in Jesus,

From Chautauqua County, N. Y.

FINDLEY'S LAKE, N. Y., April 23, 1875.

We are anxiously looking for Bro. Barlow in this county to show up some of the beauties of the "old handmaid," and to show some of the Patrons of Husbandry how to get along with that thumb. The secretists are making quite an effort to establish themselves here at Findley's Lake. The Masons say that all our writing and lecturing and circulating Anti-mason tracts and books is only helping on their cause, but I think they have a very poor way of showing their appreciation of such help in their treatment of Rev. J. Levington at Youngsville. The probability is, he was making the Sons of Hiram look a little too ridiculous before the public and they could not endure it any longer, and they raised a Masonic row just for the time being so Levington should not go on so swimmingly exposing the craft; but truth is mighty and must prevail. Your Bro. in Christ,

REV. J. S. AMIDON.

Correspondence.

The Lutheran Churches.

LEEDS, Wis., Apr. 10, 1875.

DEAR SIR:—In compliance with your request I herewith send you the testimony of the Norwegian Synod of the Lutheran church of America against secret societies. At the 11th annual meeting of said synod, at Lisbon, Ill., in July, 1870, the subject of secret societies was taken up for discussion, and the following resolutions, presented by Rev. Hoistendohl, were thoroughly discussed and unanimously adopted by the entire ministry and lay delagation of the synod:

I. The habitual secrecy of Masonry and kindred societies, is contrary to the Word of God.

II. The exaction of oaths by secret societies from their members, is, likewise, contrary to the Word of God.

III. Secret societies are adverse to Christianity: 1, because they design to establish a universal brotherhood between men of all creeds, on the broad basis of bare natural religion; and 2, because they propose to work out a moral reformation of mankind, while setting aside Christian faith and religion, especially the redemption through Christ and the operation of the Holy Spirit through the means of grace; and to practice true charity merely by the natural strength and abilities of man.

Our synod numbers at present about 110 ministers and 55,000 communicants.

Yours sincerely, A. BREDESEN.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, April 7, 1875.

DEAR SIR:—Grace and peace.

Some time ago I received a "Prospectus of the Christian Cynosure," a blank for a "Petition for all persons who believe Freemasonry to be at war with equal rights," etc. I should have written to you before and presented you with many names against these secret societies, but I have myself been engaged in a little trouble concerning these societies, which has prevented me from doing anything.

Our church, the Evangelical Lutheran church, especially the Swedish (to which I belong), German and Norwegian synods thereof, will have nothing to do with these anti-Christian societies. In the constitution of our churches (the Swedish) it is said: " . . . persons who belong to Freemasons or to other infidel societies cannot be members of our church." In the constitution of the German Lutheran church, Missouri Synod, it is said that no one can be a member of the church, who is a "Glied einer geheimen Gesellschaft."

Our church is therefore with you in your work against these societies and wishes you God's blessing to do the work according to the Word of God and the doctrine of the true Christian church.

Which is the true and real doctrine and constitution of Freemasonry? Can it be had? I have seen quotations from their constitution, but then some say, "No, that is not so, you cannot get the constitution," etc.,

I shall not, perhaps, stay here in Burlington during the summer, (I intend in July to go out West for my health and on a missionary tour through Colorado and Utah) and therefore it is not worth while to subscribe only for a few months for the Cynosure, although I think I would like the paper. At the same time with this letter I also send you a copy of the minutes of our last synodical meeting, where you will find all the addresses of our pastors. God be with you.

Humbly, yours in Christ,

C. P. RYDHOLM.

A Suggestion.

I venture a suggestion to the friends of our cause now which I wish I had presented sooner, that it might have been more thoroughly discussed before the Pittsburgh meeting than it can now be. It has long been a question in my mind whether it is not bad policy for us to hold our National meetings annually, which cost such an outlay of exertion and money, while our State and local organizations are so weak, and need all the aid that can be bestowed. I am now satisfied it is, and suggest a change. Let our National Association meet again in two years, and meantime let us apply the means and effort thus economized, to the more thorough organization of State and local societies.

With an executive committee fully authorized to transact its business, and an efficient General Agent, (such as we have), and an equally good Secretary, the National Association can, I am well satisfied, afford to hold its meeting biennially, while we all exert ourselves to hold such meetings as the Mansfield Convention as often as once a year in each State.

I believe the subject is at least worthy of careful consideration, which I hope it may receive. Sincerely,

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

GARDNER, Johnson Co., Kans., April 18, 1875.

I was made a Mason during the War. Since that time have been in twelve different States of the Union, and recognized in all of them, as they call it, as a bright Mason. In 1865 I worked my way into the lodge at the Masonic temple, Chicago, and was there told that I was as well posted a Mason as had visited that lodge for months. This I do not state as any recommendation, but that you may know that I speak from personal knowledge.

I have distributed 75 copies of Morgan's Revelation of Masonry in the last two years, with the offer that if any one could not pass as Masons (among strangers) by carefully studying the book, I would pay five dollars for each book. No books have been returned. For this the Masons charged me with lying, and slandered me in every manner possible, but I was enough for them on this point. I asked them if it was any violation of their obligation to correct a lie on the order. They said no. "Then," said I, "let us arbitrate the case and choose a committee of five for jury, and every lie that you will pick out in Morgan's Revelation of Masonry I will either pay five dollars each or prove them true, and will enter into bonds of $1,000 to perform according to contract." I made this offer about eighteen months ago; since that time they have kept their jewel, and I have had no more trouble from them openly. I have the obligations at my tongue's end and use them wherever I go whether it is at the post-office or elsewhere, none who know me daring to dispute. L. R. P. HALE.

An Old Man Pleads for Massachusetts.

While the Anti-masonic Convention was in session in Worcester, in 1871; I called on a native of Worcester and asked him if I could see the charter of the Morning Star Lodge, of which he was a member, and a Master Mason in it. He said unless I was a member of the institution I could not see it. I asked him if that was the kind of republican principle to suit him, but he did not answer my question. He did not know, he said, whether the Governor of the State signed the charter or not. Now here is something for young men to study. Take my neighbor to whom I have just now referred. I don't know at what age he joined the lodge, but when I put my question to him he was, I think, not less than sixty years old. Now to the young I would say, Don't sign many contracts, even in day-light, without knowing what you are signing; but when asked to go into dark places to do such things, refuse at once, and refer those who are trying to deceive you to Genesis xlix. 5th and 6th verses for an answer.

When I read what Mr. Booth, Father Chiniquy, and Rev. Mr. Vincent say upon different subjects, all affecting the welfare of our country, I wish to add my mite also. Here in Worcester we call ourselves the heart of the commonwealth, with daily and weekly papers not a few, not one that I know of raises its warning voice against secret, oath-bound societies, but all seem to be ready and willing to extol and magnify them; is not the heart indeed deceitful above all things; and when I see by your good paper, that my native State stands at No. 12 in seeking for light through the Christian Cynosure, I am ready to exclaim, "Men and brethren, what shall we do." The old Bay State must rally against the great Juggernaut of Freemasonry and put it down or we shall soon be ground in the dust by its ponderous wheels. My tongue must soon be silent, but it shall not be said truly that I was not opposed to secret societies, popery and dishonesty in every possible shape. Citizens of Massachusetts, let us try to come together somewhere soon and see if we can organize a State party, to oppose secret societies, to oppose the system of popery, and to strengthen the bands and lengthen the cords of patriotism, civil and religious liberty, and enlarge the area of Gospel freedom. NATHANIEL C. MOORE.

Our Neighbors.

[We insert the following from a highly respectable gentleman of Kane county, that the papers named may see that their neighbors think of them; and to show that the Cynosure represents the leading reform of the age, as its editors are blamed for every other. "Blanchard" knew nothing of the petitions in the cars till one was given him to sign.—ED. CYN.]

EDITOR OF THE CYNOSURE:—A communication appeared in the Geneva Republican and Saint Charles Leader, lately headed "Old Blanchard's Banditti on the Rampage," and signed, "True Temperance." The writer says:

"Last Saturday evening, as soon as the St. Charles train left the Wells St. Depot, several of President Blanchard's henchmen, with numerous petitions to the legislature not to change the existing temperance laws of the State, started on a raid through the cars. In violation of all laws of decency and common sense, they thrust their papers under the noses of the passengers, and insisted, in the most boorish manner upon obtaining the signatures of all. They even went so far as to tell several ladies, entire strangers to them, and who refused to take any notice of them, that if they did not sign the papers, they should set them down as rummies, or the friends of rummies."

I have given you only a part of the slanderous article. The writer goes on, in the same libelous strain throughout, using the terms "arrant hypocrites," "whited sepulchres," "saintly hypocrites," "devourers of widow's houses," etc.

Now I venture to say, that the creature who wrote that article is a tobacco user, and a whiskey bloat, as well as a Freemason. A man, who would talk of insulting ladies, by asking them to sign a temperance petition, would puff tobacco smoke in their faces, or squirt tobacco juice on the floor of the cars where ladies are obliged to sit.

These papers, the Republican and Leader, one of whose editors is a Mason and another an infidel, have been notorious for a long time in their abuse and slander of some of the best men in this county. Will consistent temperance men and Anti-masons continue any longer to take the libelous, infidel sheets. JUSTITIA.

NOTE.—The revilers of Christ's harbinger, John the Baptist, were called "a generation of vipers." We commend the study of that Scripture to the Geneva Republican and St. Charles Leader.

From Rev. S. Ranks.

ALGONA, Kossuth Co., Iowa, April 13, 1875.

BRO. KELLOGG:—Please receive thanks for the Cynosure. I am intending to make an effort for it soon. This is a region cursed by grasshoppers and the rule of Masons in the churches. So our cause makes but slow progress yet. Persecutions have appeared in various ways in this county as in Green county last year. I have been menaced with the warning that I had better not lecture in Kossuth county. I wish brother Hankins could be sent here to lecture against the vile institution. My health and circumstances hardly allow me to do much.

In answer to the request made of seceding Masons, I send the following:

1. I heartily endorse Bernard's Light on Masonry.

2. P. O. address, Algona.

3. I had taken three degrees.

4. Had been connected with the lodge about fourteen years.

5. Time of leaving the lodge, June or July, 1874.

6. I resided at Alfred, Maine.

As a Christian minister I was persuaded to join by the earnest solicitation of influential and older members of my church on the ground that it would add to my ministerial influence, but I soon became disgusted with it on looking it over, and never met in lodge more than five times in fourteen years, and I never would accept help from their hands. Since I have left them my history has been one of continual persecution both from ministers and people. After thirty-three years of church membership in the M. E. church, my church relation has been broken up and my family divided. But I am still preaching in the Free Methodist church. Yours in love,

SWANTON RANKS.

What Followed Daniel Dow's Sermon.

A letter from our veteran friend Greene gives the interesting accompaniment of the sermon on Free Inquiry just completed in the "Forty Years Ago" Department.

I notice in the last two Cynosures under the head "Forty Years Ago," Rev. Daniel Dow's sermon on Free Inquiry is published, to be continued. This was delivered the third day after my address in Faneuil Hall in Boston. On the 10th of September I arrived by stage at Thompson, Conn., at the house of the father of Herbert A. Reed of Leroy, and there heard that a sermon was to be preached at Woodstock. At Mr. Reed's, during the entire night of the 10th, I wrote my first lecture, breakfasted early, and got to Woodstock and entered the desk with my friend, Rev. Daniel Dow. Before the desk on the top of the pews was a stage spread with a carpet and all the paraphernalia of an open lodge, Jacob Allen of Braintree, presiding as Master, and all the officers in readiness to exhibit the three first degrees of Masonry. Mr. Dow delivered his exceedingly instructive discourse, and when he had closed with prayer he introduced me and spoke of his former acquaintance with me and of my discretion and undaunted courage in a case of discipline of an ugly pupil in my school in his town years ago, and "undoubtedly you will get the same impression now, for determined young men rarely loose their courage in after life." I bowed respect and delivered my first written Anti-masonic discourse and at the close I was requested by Mr. Allen to act as Senior Warden of his lodge. I consented, and having an only brother living in Woodstock the people were greatly excited to hear me and also to see the performance, and some of the windows were taken out and a plank platform made so as to get a sight of the performance, the stage taking up room and the house full of people.

Instead of going to Lexington in a cold day to join in the commemoration of our first battle, I busied myself in picking up and putting together the scattered leaves of this first address to see if it would add any strength to our cause and I concluded to write it off and send it to the Cynosure. I had company all day, but I gave my visitor Anti-masonic documents to read and did some considerable writing.

SAMUEL D. GREENE.

From the Pine Woods.

LELAND, Mich.

DEAR BRO:—I could wish I was able and I would put your paper on a firm basis, give you a good "home," and plenty of subscribers. My will is good. I preserve and circulate my copy of the Cynosure, but do not feel able to pay for it, nor can subscribers be gotten in this region. Those who are able, are not inclined, and those who would cannot from poverty.

Think of it! I labor incessantly, here and in out fields to a distance of seven miles; preach, lecture, sing, preach funeral sermons and marry, and probably do not receive $150 in a year; and I have nine in my family and much company. I work till I feel worn down, and yet I must continue to work with my hands, mind, pen and tongue, and trust in the Lord for food and clothing, etc. We receive sou's occasionally for the Master, but not much money.

I am invited to attend the State National anti-secret conventions, and I would rejoice greatly in the privilege, but cannot; first, for lack of means to travel, and, second, I am alone in my large field and cannot leave the work to stand still or go back while I go forth to other work. I can write occasionally and this I cheerfully do. But for the opposition of Masons, because I have dared to speak and write against them, I should receive a better support. They will not give and do what they can to prevent others. But blessed be God, I am able to show them that I am wholly independent of them; built a neat church without them, while they scoffed and sneered; sustain meetings without them and live without them by working with my own hands, and so can rebuke sin of all kinds without fear or favor. I rejoice in my position. They cannot shut my mouth in my church. With God's help and the aid of sympathizing friends, I built, hold the key, make the fires, light the lamps, sweep, etc., and so am perfectly free to preach a faithful Gospel. Will those who love the cause of Christ pray for me?

Yours for the good work,

GEORGE THOMPSON.

OUR MAIL.

(We have not room to put in the counties as a valued friend desires us to do).

S. W. Patterson, North Cedar, Kan., writes:

"Your paper is always a welcome messenger to our home, for it teaches us the Scriptures of truth. I give my papers away when we are done reading them; I also keep them laying on the counters, and those who may be disposed can read them. We have but few Masons in our community, but we are in the midst of grangers,—one member of the grange resigned,—saying he had enough of this organization. May God speed the day when these secret combinations and organizations of darkness shall be entirely rooted out of existence."

Benj Ulsh, Silver Lake, Ind., writes:

"There will be a Sunday-school convention and pentecostal meeting near our place in May, at which time I should like to have a good assortment of books and tracts. We are having a very cold backward spring. It snowed on the 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th of April. The ground is completely covered with snow and is still freezing."

Let all friends be prepared to promote this reform in the spring and summer meetings.

Martin C. Sallsbury, Warren, Ill., writes:

"I intend to take the paper for it suits my views better than any other I can get hold of. I have distributed all I have had and it is well liked."

M. Liscomb, Goodrich, Mich., writes:

"I want your valuable paper read by every one, for I am interested in having the people wake up in this reform. Even the Masons want to borrow my paper very often, and I am ready to lend it every time. On return of the paper they say: 'You have some pretty smart pieces in there.' One read the piece headed 'MORGAN'S JAILOR,' which spoke of Chesebro and Sawyer as dying near Kalamazoo, but that is a mistake on the part of Sawyer. Col. E. Sawyer is yet living in the town of Grand Blanc, Genesee Co., Mich., near the station, and is quite a wealthy farmer. He is over ninety years of age. His hair is white as snow, and I am informed he is quite smart for a man of his age. I have often spoken with him but not on the subject of Masonry, nor about Morgan. He has a very stern look with him. His neighbors sometimes call him Morgan; and strangers sometimes go there and call him Mr. Morgan to his face, being informed that that is his name. This makes the old gentleman angry, so much so that he sometimes takes his cane to them and says that he will not be so insulted, and they have to flee for their lives. I would say to those who are lecturing on Freemasonry that the people are waiting in the town of Davison, Genesee Co., Mich., for one to come and give them a lecture. I have been informed that the Baptist church is to be had at any time for the purpose. Where is Elder Rathbun or Elder Springstein? Can they not come this way?"

Will these gentlemen please answer?

J. B. Nessell, Ellington, N. Y., writes:

"It is one of the seven wonders of the world why there is so much apathy through the country on this subject when there is so much at stake. Our much beloved land is on the point of being engulfed in a votex of total ruin. Therefore I would advise that more of that kind of prayer that avails at the throne of God be earnestly offered that the nation may be saved from impending danger and prevent the sun of our hope from going down in blood and murder. Especially let the prayer of faith ascend in the name of Christ that our meeting at Pittsburgh be wonderfully successful and Christ's cause be greatly advanced."

Jacob Ackart, Schaghticoke, N. Y., writes:

"I have Finney's work on Masonry, 'The Broken Seal,' 'Bernard's Light on Masonry,' and several other Anti-masonic works which I keep in circulation. And best of all I have 'The True Masonic Guide' by Robert Macoy, one of their standard authors, which book I think is doing much in opening the eyes of intelligent, thinking people as to the religious character and claims of the order."

J. M. Bryant, Bethany, Mo, writes:

"An amusing incident happened in the Ancient, Free and Accepted Masonic lodge at Bethany, Mo., not long since. It was this: A meeting was called for the purpose of conferring the second degree on the wives and daughters of affiliating Masons. The anteroom being pretty well filled, they commenced operations in lodge which caused considerable fun and created a desire in those waiting to see. They then slipped the wicket, seized the saber, pushed away the inside guard, when those in the anteroom could get full view. The authorities then introduced the doctor's wife, and after they had proceeded to a certain point, they requested her to lay off some of her clothing which she refused to do; but being informed that she must conform to the rules or retire she accepted the latter, and left to the horror of the faithful and amusement of those in the ante-room. They, being informed by the retiring one of the performance within left pell mell, like so many frightened rats, denouncing the delusion. Among them were a number of the leading persons of the town. . . They have divulged the nonsense."

C. M. Preston, South Wright, Mich., writes:

"The Masons are trying to build up through the grange in this place. But the thing is running rather wild to promise permanency. The grangers seem to be running for fun and frolic, with the prospect of a little gain. The Masons, of course, have a deeper design."

Rev. C. Hepler, Mendon, Pa., writes:

"I think that there is no subject that we as Christians and Christian ministers should think more on than to save sinners from their sins and professed Christians and men from the lodge. I believe that if the Cynosure could be placed in every Christian family that there would be no Christians found in the lodge in a very few years."

M. H. Sly, Wadesburg, Mo., writes:

"I am travelling as a missionary for the United Brethren church, and am in full sympathy with her rules and doctrines. When I began to preach here there was no church in this part; but our principles were accepted by many honest hearts. Those who were wearing the chains of darkness bound to them by Masonic oaths began to cry perjury and lies; and tried to frighten me by threatening me. . . Last Sabbath one of the worshipers of the goddess 'Fides' also a Mason, when I took occasion according to our rules to read our law on secrecy, arose and forbid my proceeding, as I was in a grange hall. I had to stop, but told them to make an appointment in the grove and in June I would give them a lecture exposing the serpent to their gaze. Heretofore I have only opposed them as a church policy. But now I have declared war upon the Prince of darkness."

Wm. Millet, Springdale, Ia., writes:

"I believe the Lord is in this cause, hence it will prevail."

Wm. Cheetham, Lowell, Mich., writes:

"I wish to say I like your paper very much; and after I read it I give it to my neighbors to read. Rev. D. P. Rathbun was here a few weeks ago and I tryed to get our Baptist church for him to speak in but it was voted down, so went and hired Music Hall and paid for it myself. I then went ten miles to see brother Rathbun, told him I had secured a hall for him and wanted to know when he would give us a lecture. The time was set for Friday evening. I then spread the news far and near and the hall was full. Hiram Abiff (the M. E. preacher were there) and all his subordinates and he gave it to them hot and heavy; but they behaved very well until towards the close, when they all appeared like bees from an overturned hive, buzzing around with their stingers out ready to sting. They called the speaker a perjured wretch and a liar, and finally broke up the meeting. Such is Freemasonry."

H. T. Slaughenhaupt, Littletown, Pa., sends a new subscription, and writes:

"One year ago I procured this subscriber. The reform then was something new in that neighborhood, but by the aid of the Cynosure two young men of more than ordinary influence have been doing a noble work in defense of anti-secrecy, and would have done much more if some in their own congregation would not be against them. At one time they procured an appointment for an anti-secrecy meeting to be held by three of the most zealous ministers in the conference, J. M. Bishop being the principal lecturer. After all things had been arranged an element was brought about bordering on Masonic misrepresentations that closed the church doors on these good men; but I feel satisfied that the good Lord will ere long remove this unrighteous element. I consider the Cynosure a good paper. I have been a close reader of it for three years, and in all this time have not seen a single sentence in its columns that had the least spirit of levity connected with it. Where is another religious journal that can have as much said of it?"

Lesson for May 16, 1875.—A Praying Mother.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Samuel i. 21-28. Commit 21-28; Primary Verse, 27.

21 And the man Elkanah, and all his house, went up to offer unto the Lord the yearly sacrifice, and his vow.

22 But Hannah went not up; for she said unto her husband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, and then I will bring him, that he may appear before the Lord, and there abide forever.

23 And Elkanah her husband said unto her, Do what seemeth thee good; tarry until thou have weaned him; only the Lord establish his word. So the woman abode, and gave her son suck until she weaned him.

24 And when she had weaned him, she took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the house of the Lord in Shiloh: and the child was young.

25 And he slew a bullock and brought the child to Eli.

26 And he said, O my lord, as thy soul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that stood by thee here, praying unto the Lord.

27 For this child I prayed; and the Lord hath given me my petition which I asked of him:

28 Therefore also I have lent him to the Lord; as long as he liveth he shall be lent to the Lord. And he worshiped the Lord there.

LESSONS.

(1) "In everything . . . make your requests known unto God" (Phil. iv. 6). It is the best help against an enemy, the best way to peace (compare 1 Sam. i. 18, with Acts ii. 46, 47, and Phil. iv. 7).

(2) Pay your vows. Wicked men call on God in their trouble, and forget him when out of their straits (Job, xxvii. 10.) How many broken pledges are recorded against men concerning strong drink, gifts in money, if they grow rich, marriage, and the service of the Lord, in baptism and the supper!

(2) Particularly should vows regarding children be kept. They are given to God. Yet they are not treated as if the Lord's. If they die, there is often rebellious grief. If they live, they are allowed to go their own way, not taught, not restrained, not brought up for God, often committed to the care of teachers, who will mislead them, or for the sake of supposed temporary advantages, or showy attainments, they are put under influences that corrupt the soul.

(4) Children should be brought up to serve God from their infancy—in the nursery, in the infant school, and onward in the church. These are our Shiloh; and if mothers and fathers brought their children and visited them there, to see how they do, there would be blessing all around, for God is faithful and keeps that which is committed unto him (2 Tim. i. 12)

(5) Those mothers, whose early lack of children fixes their attention on their sons when born, may well shadow to us the church which in God's time shall have a multitude of sons innumerable (see Isa. xlix. 21, and Rev. vii. 9).

(6) And now, children, suppose your parents have given you to the Lord and desired that you should be his, are you holding back or giving yourselves to him?—S. S. World.

The Lodge Takes a new Departure.

IS FREEMASONRY AGGRESSIVE, OR SIMPLY ON THE DEFENSE?

The principles of Freemasonry are now systematically and unitedly attacked by the strongest societies of the age. It has stood the assault of ages past, but those warfares were waged by different men and from a different standpoint. To-day Freemasonry stands like a firm rock amidst the waves of hate and fanaticism, calm and serene, unmoved, and apparently immovable; but we must recollect that we live in an era of progress and revolution. While the giant mountain may stand unscathed in mid-ocean, yet the never-ceasing waves continually roll to the farthest shore, wearing away the rock-bound coast, or carrying on their crests the driftwood of ignorance and error. It will suffice nothing that the mountain stands firm and solid—the great ocean of thought still rolls on and bears its triumphs to parts of the world where the mountain cannot follow. To defend Freemasonry simply by name as the ideal of a beautiful thought, would be chivalry enough itself and beautiful in itself; but that accomplishes nothing. If defended at all, it must be in the name of its eternal and life-giving principles. We must change places with our enemies. We can no longer remain the mountain, and either be worn away or left standing harmlessly alone, high and dry. But let the fossil remains of an effete bigotry assume its normal condition as a sterile rock of unproductiveness, and we become the deep and silent rolling sea of regenerating thought, reaching every shore, and bathing the weary traveler in search of soul like and intellectual refreshment. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are annually spent by our enemies to crush us, and yet we remain silent and passive in our present security. We stand still while Anti-masons are marshalled by well-trained leaders, leading them on to the attack. We simply stand like a rock, while the storm passes over our heads and crushes our reputations and that of our families and friends behind us, so that when we look around for our support we find that those who should have been friends are turned either into enemies or cold and indifferent allies. Why is this? Simply because we have been indifferent to our own danger, and too self-confident of our own strength. Candidates may crowd the door by thousands, but are they made, and remain, "Masons" in the true sense of that word? Let the attendance at our own lodges, the interest felt by the craft, the number of Masonic students outside the lodge-room, the energy in good and noble works of love and truth, reply.

However, we will give our brethren a brief insight into the workings of our secret enemy, and let them see why the minds of their family have been poisoned and their friends turned away, and then let them decide if it is not time that they should awaken to their duties, in and out of the lodge-room, both in doing good Masonic work before God and enlightening their firesides by Masonic literature. Freemasons can no more ignore and despise the printing-press than could a great and once all-powerful church, which for nearly a hundred years damned the newspapers and forbid the publication of truths; but it had at last to surrender, and finally now becomes the greatest manipulator of the press, and uses it, too, under every name and guise. Knowing full well that Freemasonry could not be reached through an open course, as but few Protestant families would see it, it comes out in an apparently anti-Catholic and Protestant paper, on the Jesuit plan and at great expense, a weekly, Anti-masonic journal, called the Christian Cynosure, published in Chicago. . . . We have, heretofore, remained comparatively silent on this subject, expecting these fanatics to wear themselves out, but they have presumed upon the conservative apathy of the craft, and are now waging a silent, secret and bitter warfare against the Masonic fraternity, in particular, simply because it is the oldest, strongest, and most liberal of all in its views and actions, hence the most dangerous to narrow-minded and bigoted fanaticism.

If it were not for the many thousands of good and true men of all denominations, who belong to the order, and who are personally aware of the persistent lies of these Anti-masons, and that they are nothing but falsehoods out of the whole cloth, they would rise and crush us by force; but as it is, they resort to the means we have alluded to.

This is a strange aggregation of forces. Here we have churches, of directly opposite purposes, united against an order which recognized the good members of all of them. The Quakers are rather passive and conservative. The Episcopalians take no part in the fight, and so with some others; and only a certain portion of the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists. Judging from the Cynosure correspondence, it looks as though the United Brethren, Congregationalists, Roman Catholics, and a few fanatical sects, make Anti-masonry a test of membership; while a few leaders, who have been blackballed in the lodge, are trying to introduce the war into all the churches. Let us furnish the truth to them all, and let the pure light of love and morality shine before all men.

In another article on "The Roman Church and Public Schools" the Freemason says:—

How much the Christian Cynosure, Wheaton College of Illinois, Rev. Doctors Blanchard, Finney, and others, get from the secret fund of Rome to pay the expenses of their warfare, we know not, but they are surely entitled to much as the allies of the assassins of political and religious liberty.

Freemasonry has been the incarnation of long suffering and patience for centuries, on account of its cosmopolitan and universal character, but as the warfare against us has not ceased, notmonitions to that end, for the sake of peace, we must acknowledge the old adage, that patience has ceased to be a virtue; and now, at last, being driven withstanding repeated requests and ado the wall, we propose to strike back in the defense of pure Morality, Education, and Truth, against the well developed and organized phalanxes of the Church of Rome, which lets no opportunity pass to crush our public school system.

The clear sunlight of educated reason let into the dark recesses of dark bigotry and hierarchal power dissolves it like salt on a snail's back, hence the Pope in every allocution spurs on his bishops and people to shut out the light of free and generous knowledge.

We call the attention of the craft to this important matter, and ask them to well attend to their duties as the members of an universal fraternity, whose every step is accompanied by the God-like prayer of "more light." We regret that we have been called upon to call any church by name, and we would not do so now, but that that church has eternally damned our order by name, to the chagrin and mortification of many intelligent communicants of that church. We regret, also, that other churches have been drawn by a secret motive of their ministers to war against us; but none of those of the true Gospel of Christ can arraign us, and we intend now to fight out this fight on purely honorable and straightforward principles of investigation and comparison. "Time, the grand arbiter of events," will record in his own good time who shall be the victor—"Darkness" or "Light."

We shall fight against no church as a particular denomination, for we know that there are thousands of intelligent members of the Roman, the Congregational, the Presbyterian, and other churches, who are ashamed of their leaders on this anti-public school and Anti-masonic warfare. Many of them are our personal friends, and many of them are earnest and true members of our fraternity, and for such we sympathize; but they will well know when we tell the truth or not.

Again, in "A Word to our Christian Brethren and Sisters" (!) occurs the following:—

The gigantic Anti-masonic crusade, now thoroughly organized and at work—especially in the West—has its stronghold in an unscrupulous attempt to deceive our Christian women, on the ground that Freemasonry denies Christ and his teachings. Headed by fanatics of the type of Professor Blanchard, Finney & Co., they publish all sorts of reports in Anti-masonic tracts and papers, arguing solely on the basis that whatever does not preach Christ is of necessity anti-Christ; therefore they ignore works as teachers and themselves deny the living and practical teachings of the Saviour. . . Because Freemasonry does not teach Romanism we are damned by them; because we do not teach immersion, some Baptists condemn us; because we do not teach that all forms and ceremonies are useless, we are blamed by the plain folks; because we accept all religions and deny none, but teach a pure and exalted morality and friendship, we are damned by fanatics as being "anti-Christ." All we ask is, judge us by our works.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 6, 1875.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and the Association hopes to raise this sum by June 10th next; and $20,000 as soon thereafter as possible to secure the ownership. Send on contributions.

DISCUSSION WITH MASONS IN IOWA.—Our good brother Rev. Mr. Grinnell has sent us the numbers of the paper containing this discussion which we shall endeavor to notice at large next week. The lodge, like the brothel its symbol and type, can only lose by discussion. The success of both those institutions is by silent lures. When the inmates of the spiritual or literal brothel come out and plead, they are starving.

Our General Agent has at last left for Pittsburgh, and he will not let grass grow under his feet. But the time is so short that every one of us must watch and pray, and helps well the attendance and interest of our coming Anniversary and make the 8th of June, 1875, if possible, an epoch in our cause. Isaac Preston, Esq., of Lockpock, Ill., writes us he has arranged to attend. Hon. Samuel D. Greene, who like Mr. Preston is on the way from 80 to 90 years of age, wrote us he should attend at Hartford, Conn. These venerable octogenarians astonish, reprove, and comfort us. Surely God holds them in his right hand. And like John Quincy Adams, their faculties seem to brighten, while other men's decay. Is it because their intellects rejecting all that is spurious in religion, hold unobstructed converse with God? The Hebrew prophets tell us of a time when "The child shall die an hundred years old."

THEY WAR ON OUR CHARACTERS.—In 1836, Duff. Green in the U. S. Telegraph said of the Abolitionists:

"They could not if they would excite our slaves to insurrection. The war they wage is on our characters. Unless the Abolition societies are put down and suppressed, there will soon be springing up among ourselves the idea that slaveholding is sinful; and they will thus produce a state of sentiment in which a man's life will not be worth anything to him so long as he owns a slave."

This was precisely what happened; and the lodge raises now the same cry, as it nears the same fate. The new departure says:

"We simply stand like the rock, while the storm passes over our heads and crushes our reputations and that of our families and friends behind us, so that when we look around for our support, we find that those who should have been our friends are turned either into enemies or cold indifferent allies."

Well said Mr. St. Louis Freemason! This is just what is going to happen; what is even now taking place.

But we must never forget that Masonic lodges can die, as in several States they did die, and yet the system live under other names. Nothing will extinguish it but Christ; and the worship which takes men to God through him. Until we learn this we have'nt "found the seam."

OUR PITTSBURGH ANNIVERSARY.

Who is laboring, planning, and praying for our Anniversary? No great moral triumph issuing in the material benefit of mankind ever took place without two attending incidents: 1st, Truth asserted; and 2d, Earnest prayer. Methodism started in a series of prayer-meetings under the lime-trees of Oxford University. All Scotland, in the days of her Covenant, was on her knees in prayer; and her people, says Hume, during Cromwell's Protectorate, "gave their assent to the ideas of their preachers by groans and amens." Abolitionism succeeded by its "Monthly Concerts;" and the rebellion gave way to fasting, humiliation and prayer, such as Lincoln requested of his neighbors when he left Springfield for Washington. And Luther's "prayer at Worms" before he met the Diet is a more remarkable document than his famous speech to that body refusing to recant, ending "God help me. Amen."

Our chief danger is "forgetting God." Our General Agent and Lecturer, Mr. Stoddard, has been ordered by the Committee to Pittsburgh. The meeting is now suffering for the want of some one in that vicinity to arouse the people, make needed arrangements, and call public attention to the Anniversary. We are going to meet there, too, with nothing matured as to politics, and no general line of action laid out. These deficiencies are evils to be lamented and remedied as far as possible. But the greatest evil and danger is there is so little prayer and practical dependence on God 'without whom we can do nothing.'

GOD GIVES THE RAIN.

When Paul, by the power of Christ had healed the Lystra cripple, and the Lystrans and Lycaoanians got oxen and were about to sacrifice to him and his companion Barnabas; unlike his popish "successors," Paul refused the homage, and in his discourse attributed the rainfall to God. "Nevertheless, he left not himself without witness in that he did good, and gave us rain and fruitful seasons."

The Scotch Dr. Chalmers, (cited by McCosh) whose great mind resembled Paul's, immediate inspiration excepted, calls on us to notice that "we can follow no law back but a little way;" and argues that God can interpose in the weather back of and beyond our reach, so as to make a drought or a shower at a given time and place, in perfect keeping with his immutability. Yet many speak as though the weather was altogether beyond God, and ruled by laws inexorable as fate; and that cold and drought and natural pests may be about to make our prairies deserts. Our prairies may indeed become like Asiatic deserts, unpeopled where millions once lived and sinned and "worshipped other gods." And in the inimitable words of Byron:

——"Their decay
Has dried up realms to deserts."

But if our wells fail and our prairies become deserts, it will be because their inhabitants become Asiatics, practice conjuring tricks for religion, and cease to look to God for "rain and fruitful seasons."

THE NEW MASONIC DEPARTURE.

Our readers will share our delighted surprise at the last protean dodge of the lodge as seen in the article headed "The Lodge Takes a New Departure," in the present number. It is very significant. The Saint Louis Freemason, which gives the article, is a large stitched and covered monthly; and may be regarded as the lodge-organ for the Southwest, as Dr. Mackey's "Voice" aspires to be in the country represented by Chicago.

When Nehemiah and a handful of Asiatics who believed and trusted the true God, began to rebuild Jerusalem, and separate God's worship from the idolatries, which then as now cursed that continent and its enslaved and priest-ridden populations, the Samballats, and Geshems of that day first despised them; then plotted against; then prosecuted; then begged and plead to be taken into partnership and communion with them in restoring the ruins and re-establishing the pure worship of God.

The lodge-methods with us are the same. They first regarded our national movement as a curious joke. They made wide the mouth at us. They said, "If a fox go up he shall break down even their stone wall." The Chicago Journal & Co. called our first Anniversary in this city, a "convention of mustard pots and vinegar cruets." Then Grand Master Blair proposed to patronize Wheaton College, and the Wheaton lodge master subscribed a thousand dollars towards its debt, and one thousand more to a professorship; neither of which he paid, but betrayed and sunk us sixteen hundred dollars by inducing subscribers to repudiate. Then he prosecuted us in our Circuit and Supreme courts, to force us by mandamus to admit adhering secret society men to the College. They were beaten by both courts. Then they moved on the Wheaton church, to reverse our rule and force open the fellowship of the College church to lodgemen. They intimidated the members so that some declared that fifty would leave the church unless the rule excluding Freemasons was thrown out. They were again defeated, and a stronger rule adopted. Then Quint, Bacon and company moved on Oberlin by a "National Congregational Council" which is run by a Knight Templar and Past Grand Chaplain of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge. We exposed and assailed that measure, and the five hundred Cynosures, containing J. B. Walker's attack on that Masonic Congregational Council," were returned to us! The friends of our cause in Oberlin were offended by Dr. Walker's article; and Anti-masons voted for Grand Chaplain Quint to be Secretary and the only permanent officer of that Council, which office he still holds.

Now read the "New Departure" and behold the grand hailing sign of distress against—"The gigantic Anti-masonic crusade, thoroughly organized and at work, especially in the West." Now, they propose to break over their "ancient landmark," and defend the lodge by argument and appeal!

But be not deceived. Their wail is the cry of the crockodile to allure prey within its jaws. They cry "persecution" like the Pope. They appeal to their "Christian brethren and sisters." (!) And weak and foolish men and women will be deceived by them. Our own church members and ministers (see the United Brethren Tribune) will think them lovely, condemn our "bigotry," and send Peter's Pence to these popes! But their grapes are those of Sodom, and their apples those of Gormorrah! Read, read "The New Departure."

JEWS AS FREEMASONS.

The Hebrew Leader a large eight page weekly has been published in New York for a quarter of a century. The numbers we have seen contain not one word positively Jewish but only some small wrangling with the Grand Lodge of the State against the fag ends of the Christian religion tacked or woven into Freemasonry which, as our readers know, aims to be a compound of all religions and to form a mongrel religion for "the god of this world." The Leader has been waging a furious war against dedicating lodges to "The Holy Saints John," not because Saint-worship is devil-worship, but lest some Jewish conscience would be ensnared into worshipping Christian saints. Whereupon the (Maine) Masonic Token comes down on his Hebrew brethren in this wise:—

THE ISRAELITISH QUESTION.

"The Hebrew Leader asks, "Have Israelites any rights as Masons?"

We answer, "As Masons—yes! As Israelites—no!"

"You have joined a fraternity dedicated to the Holy Saints John, and you knew it when you joined. You knew that the prejudices, if not the fixed laws of that fraternity, were against any change in the ritual. You also know that although the traditions make it antedate the Christian Era, there is not the slightest evidence that it was ever anything but a Christian institution. Therefore, what right have you to claim that it shall be changed to meet your views?"

The learned Jew replies, showing by history that the immutability of the lodge like the semper eadem of popery, is mere dodge and imposition. Hear him:—

movable landmarks. We have shown that the oldest requisite for membership, viz., "to be true to the church," was removed by Anderson. "Moder Marybright," and the legend of the four holy martyrs were expunged from the rituals by the first Protestant operatives. It has further been demonstrated that the laws of the old operatives were repeatedly changed. And in modern times, Anderson changed both ritual and laws, and every peddling American lecturer, from Webb to Cross, altered again and again the Masonic ritual. And yet our luminaries talk of "ancient landmarks." How ancient are those landmarks? Do we not know that Anderson was the first to introduce the form of dedicating lodges? He, however, dedicated lodges to the Baptist only; and such appears to have been the fashion in England, up to 1813. From that time, for obvious reasons, the Grand Lodge of England expunged all allusion to the saints from the Masonic ritual But Webb, in America, began to dedicate lodges to both saints, and this you call a landmark! But even Webb did not know that the Evangelist became Grand Master when upwards of ninety. This Christian imposition was not introduced into the American lodges till some years after the Grand Lodge of England denuded the ritual of saints. And this is another of your landmarks! Dunckerly manufactured the symbol of the "Parallel Lines," with the two Saints John as parallels; and this is also an ancient landmark! Bosh!"

To all which we add, "Bosh" indeed. The whole concern is "Bosh;" like the bosh of paganism and all priestly inventions to humbug the masses into paying "dues."

"I thank thee, Jew, for teaching me that word." But is it not pitiful to see a Christian (?) editor brothering the Jew, whose hate of Christianity is so intense that he cannot brook the mockery of "the Holy Saints John;" because, in making up the Masonic swindle, a popish saint or two has been woven into the compound. And the meek Masonic Yankee, though claiming Masonry to be "Christian" in its origin, yet promises that if he will be patient the last fibre of Christianity shall soon be extirpated from the lodge and "the Holy Saints John" be dropped from theritual, thus:

"Therefore, we say, you have no right to demand it, but your request is entirely reasonable, is in accordance with the spirit of the fraternity, and with the universal brotherhood of man on which it pretends to be founded, and, if you wait a time with patience, your request will be granted."

"Herod and Pilot friends," Jew and Freemason brothers! And the Mason assures the Jew that "his request is entirely reasonable" to be rid in the lodge of the faintest remainder of Christianity! How long shall this foul thing pollute our pulpits and communion tables!

NOTES.

—The notice of last week that the railroad fare to Pittsburgh would be $16, there and return from Chicago, was given under a misunderstanding. The rate will be $18.50 each for ten tickets. We repeat that all who wish to take advantage of this arrangement should send their names to the Corresponding Secretary at this office before the close of the month if possible.

—A person signing himself "J. W. B." writes from Nineveh, Broome Co., N. Y., bitterly complaining of our course, which he says produces strife between Masonic preachers and their churches, and wants to know what good can result from it. He desires an answer, which will be cheerfully given when it is known who wants it. Meanwhile will friend "J. W. B." read Acts xvi. 16–22 and xvii. 1–8.

—Friend Washburn of Madison, Me., asks what were the charges filed by the Catholics against Freemasons that led the Grand Master of England, the Marquis of Ripon, to leave the lodge for the Romanists. No "charges" in particular that we know of, but the opposition of the Catholics led to an investigation of the principles underlying it whereby the Grand Master was brought to see the false position of the lodge. These principles as set forth by Romish authority were published in the Cynosure of September 17th last.

—Mr. Edmond Ronayne, whose contributions have added to the interest of our columns, will repeat on the evening of May 11th, the exposition of the three degrees of Masonry given a short time ago, in the hall of Bremer Street School. We expect to give a report this time without depending on the Masonic reporters of the daily press.

—During the absence of the Corresponding Secretary at the Michigan State Convention a list of annual members sent about that time was lost. The $5 accompanying it was received and paid to the Treasurer. Will the sender please renew the list and oblige.

—A correspondent of the United Presbyterian desires Rev. R. McAyeal of Des Moines, to prepare an article on the religious nature of the grange. Bro. McAyeal can contribute a valuable article on this subject, and we shall rejoice to learn that he has undertaken it.

—In remarking on Gen. Grant's attendance at a New York theater last week a sad blunder in the types made us charge the New York Witness with an unjust sentiment quite foreign to its character. The Witness did say of remarks on the evil propensities of pubic men, "We know not that the British people have anything to do with the private life of their Queen or the Prince of Wales, but if they have, much more have we to do with the private life of our President, seeing that they cannot change their chief ruler, but we can change ours. It is surely right to commend the private virtues and character of public men, and it is a poor rule that does not work both ways."

—The next session of the Iowa Masonic Grand Lodge in June will have the pleasure of looking over its resolutions of 1856 withdrawing Masonic sanction from dancing parties. Some Dubuque lodges wanted lately to help out the dedication of a new hall with the usual dance. Some "Methodist brothers" objected to such a use of Masonry. A quarrel ensued, and one or more lodges it is said have been put under ban and their symbols of office removed by the Grand Master, and an appeal has been taken. As the lodges include a large proportion of those who delight to revel in the indiscriminate pleasures of the ball room, the result of the appeal may be anticipated.

Another Veteran Fallen.

Brother George A. Tuttle of Fenton, Broom, Co., N. Y., died suddenly of heart disease on the evening of the 16th of April, aged 61 years. During a period of forty years or more brother Tuttle was known as a follower of Christ, an excellent neighbor, a good citizen, an active and consistent Christian; and although at first connected with the M. E. church, yet the fact that so large a proportion of that church, especially its ministry, are Masons, led him to leave that connection and unite with the Wesleyans. It may, we think, be truly said of him that he was willing to forsake all for Christ. He was very zealous and uncompromising in opposing the popular evils of the day, both in church and state, and was ready to have his name cast out as evil even among professing Christians for the sake of promoting the purity of the church and the integrity of our government. Hence, like his divine Master, he was often maligned and persecuted in consequence of his fidelity to the cause of truth and right. His opposition to secret societies made him a special object of hatred to the "ancient and honorable fraternity." The readers of the Cynosure may remember that some four or five years ago he was pursued by a Masonic mob, compelled to flee from his house and hide himself in a cornfield where he remained all night, hotly pursued by these myrmidons of the lodge, until the morning dawn compelled them to desist, and he barely escaped being discovered. But this was not all, he was called upon to suffer for his zeal and activity in the cause of reform. One of his daughters, a young lady of feeble health, was so distressed on account of this Masonic persecution that she told her father she could not survive it, and shortly after, in a state of mental aberration she committed suicide by throwing herself across the rail-road track and allowing herself to be run over by the cars. But even this severe trial did not have the effect to abate his zeal or cause him to cease from his endeavors to promote this great and much-needed reform, and save his fellow-men from the curse and slavery of secretism.

He was one of those noble men of God who felt called upon to stand for a righteous, unpopular cause, though they stand alone. Some two weeks before his death he remarked to a brother in the church that he had no desire to live, but to be prepared to die, adding, "I expect to go suddenly." In this his expectation was realized; he died almost without a moment's warning, but he died with his armor on, and we have the blessed assurance that our loss is his gain.

"Brother though from yonder sky
Cometh neither voice nor cry,
Yet we know from thee to-day,
Every pain has passed away."

"Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." —2nd Tim. iii. 12.

Binghamton, N. Y., April 22, 1875.

Notices.

The Seventh Anniversary of the National Christian Association will be held in the City of Pittsburgh, Pa., June 8th to 10th, 1875.

Western New York.

Elder Barlow, State Agent, is expected in Chautauqua and Cattaraugus counties, beginning about the first of May and continuing through the month. Friends in these counties wishing lectures will write to J. B. Nessell, Cor. Sec'y of the Chaut. county Association, and arrangements will be made to facilitate the work and save needless travel.

REV. H. H. HINMAN, the Illinois State Agent, is expecting to start about the twenty-fifth of May for the National meeting at Pittsburgh. He desires to accommodate friends on or near the route which he will take, probably the Pittsburgh and Ft. Wayne, with lectures, and by this means also to pay his expenses to and from Pittsburgh. Are there not friends in the counties of Lake, Marshall and Whitley in Indiana, and in VanWert, Allen, Crawford, Stark and Columbina counties in Ohio, who would be glad to secure the services of Mr. Hinman either on his way to the Convention or on his return. Consult with friends, see what arrangements can be made, and write to C. A. Blanchard, Cor. Sec'y N. C. A. 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Indiana, Attention!

The Executive Committee of the Indiana Association will meet at the residence of Jesse Small, in Marion, Grant Co., on Wednesday, the 19th of fifth month, (May) at 10. A. M. That committee consists of Rev. H. Floyd of Dublin, Geo. W. Champ of Van Buren, Isaac Elliott of Marion, Hon. Wm. Hall of Fairmount, and Wm. Small of Xenia. A full attendance is desired, as important business is to be transacted. The friends of the cause are invited to send information relative to what they think the times require of us, and the best way of accomplishing it. The State agent is to be present.

By order of the CHAIRMAN.

Address of Anti-masonic Lecturers.

General Agent and Lecturer, J. P. STODDARD, Christian Cynosure Office, Chicago.

The Home Circle.

Finish Thy Work.

Finish thy work; the time is short,
The sun is in the West.
The night is coming down; till then
Think not of rest.

Yes, finish all thy work, then rest;
Till then, rest never;
The rest prepared for thee by God
Is rest forever.

Finish thy work: then wipe thy brow,
Ungird thee from thy toil;
Take breath and from each weary limb
Shake off the soil.

Finish thy work; then sit thee down
On some celestial hill,
And of its strength-reviving air
Take thou thy fill.

Finish thy work! then go in peace,
Life's battle fought and won;
Hear from the throne the Master's voice,
"Well done! well done!"

Finish thy work, then take thy harp,
Give praise to God above;
Sing a new song of endless joy
And heavenly love.

Give thanks to Him who held thee up
In all thy path below,
Who made thee faithful unto death,
And crowns thee now.

The Christian Family.

The family is the germ of the state historically, and the family is the safeguard of the state ethically. Well-ordered families will make a well-ordered state. Man was put upon the earth, not in isolation, and not in promiscuous aggregation, but in families. The earliest commands of God recorded in Scripture have relation to family ties, and the New Testament exalts the family and pronounces it a normal element of the Christian church. The celibacy of the clergy was one of Satan's schemes for destroying the church. The higher sanctity of the unmarried state was a doctrine naturally following, and striking at the very heart of the Christian system. An unmarried man or woman is incomplete, to be blamed or pitied as the case may be. Pauline emergencies are but emergencies and only confirm the rule. In the family, piety admits of a natural cultivation, and grace spreads and descends through channels especially provided. ("Else were your children unclean, but now are they holy.")

If this true view of the family were held by every Christian man and woman, should we not see some present evil habits cease?

1. Could a father spend his day in business cares beyond what is necessary for the support of the family? Has a Christian a right to use his whole strength to make money, to become rich, leaving his family without his presence, care, teaching, and example? Christian men, worth hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars, are wont to use all the day hours and all their nervous energy in adding to their already more than sufficient wealth, as if making money were the one great duty of life. Instead of associating with their children, helping them in their studies, joining them in their plays and exercising a steadying influence over all their ways, they abandon them to evil surroundings and only teach them by their example that life is money-making. In many Christian homes of New York the father is a stranger or at least only a distant friend of the family. He is seen at dinner and then leave for an evening at a place of amusement, or a committee, or the club. One of God's grand designs in the family is thus completely thwarted.

2. Could a mother allow herself to touch even the edge of the fashionable vortex? Is it right to enter a system, which consumes time, money, and strength for hollow forms and tinselled display, and so deprive the children of the watchful attentions of a mother's experience and care? A fashionable woman must make up her character in "society" by deficiencies at home. She must be irregular in her times of rising and eating, family prayers must be neglected, the children will straggle to school as they may, the servants will take advantage of the chaos and become demoralized, and so home-life, which should have been the corrector of evil tendencies and the conservator of order and truth, becomes the very guide to laxity, waste, and frivolity. In Christian homes (so called) there are many fashionable, semi-fashionable mothers, and by them another of God's grand designs in the family is completely thwarted.

3. Could the education if children be committed to anybody without regard to moral qualifications? Is it right for Christian parents to send a child to school without a clear knowledge of the views of the teacher on the most momentous of all subjects and of his religious habits and influence? And yet how utterly thoughtless many Christian parents are on this point? They will patronize a school whose head is a bigoted Romanist or a pronounced infidel, where the seeds of error will not only be planted in their minds but will be vigorously nursed and established there, and so the parental counsel will be cancelled, and the parent's piety be reckoned as old fogyism, which means respectable ignorance and weakness. The school should be in all cases the parent's coadjutor, and not his substitute, and never, NEVER his counter actor. Unless this be the case another of God's designs in the family is completely thwarted.

One reason the church of Jesus grows so slowly, and, alas! grows so corruptly, is because the sacred ark of the family is violated, and the holy influences which should thence proceed are perverted at their source. Baalim and Ashtaroth are found where Jehovah Jesus alone should dwell.—Dr. Crosby in the Am. Messenger.

A Dry Rot.

The church was never more aggressive than now. Machinery was never better managed. There never was so much of it. The display of strength was never finer. But all this may be only equipped and organized weakness. The church is nothing if not pious. More than this, it is very little if not consistently pious. To be zealously affected in a good cause is good only on condition that it be "always." A church is an "ekklesia;" a company called out from the world. Its strength therefore is in its deliverance from the world. To be in it, yet not of it, is the double problem which our machinery and our spirit must combine to solve. Therefore we do not believe in those forms of worldliness in the church which excuse themselves on the ground that to get a leverage on the world we must in some sort stand on its level. Monks, we are told, cannot convert the world. Neither, we might reply, can the spirit of the world convert the world. The strength of a Christian's argument with men, is in the fact that his life has a standing place other than theirs. He must move them, if at all, from above. Our Christian Archimedes has a lever that is strong enough. He needs the standing of high religious principles not only, but religious living as well. The man in the water beating the waves cannot help his imperiled comrade. For that he must be planted on a rock. You lose your strength when you surrender the vantage ground of holy living, of a separate and uncompromising Christian calling. Are we not in some danger of having our sinews dissolved into powder dust under the dry rot of worldly compromise? Some churches we have heard of are only religious ways of encouraging the world. Is it money that is wanted? There are two ways of getting it. One is the Lord's money freely offered by the Lord's people, coming from the heart into the treasury, with no indirection. The other is to have lotteries and corners on fancy-work, and bringing all the world's scheming into the church, name it, by way of satire—a fair. Is literature wanted? Let the church be levied on to vie in poor measures with the lyceum, and give to a debating school the energy and time that are taken from a prayer-meeting. Is it social life that is the prize? Let us build our churches with dramatic club rooms and parlors arranged for dancing, and a plentiful supply of little stands to hold scolloped oysters or a pack of cards. This is what scientists might call a sap-rot, taking the life out of our religion and letting it powder down to dry and inefficient dust. Again, we say the strength of the church is in its piety.—The Interior.

Providing for Our Own Households.

We assume that there is no text or command in all the Scriptures which gets more attention and more willing obedience than that which requires men to provide for their own households. Christian and heathen alike overdo this branch of duty, and yet we apprehend there is no divine injunction more imperfectly understood. It is made to justify every expenditure, and it forgets altogether that severe denunciation against those who join field to field and add house to house. When God sent the daily manna for the nourishment of his people, it was found that when they had gathered more than was required for their daily necessities, the surplus stank on their hands, and bred worms and disease. Has God changed his dealings with us? The spirit of greed which showed itself then has been doing so ever since, to the detriment of our fellow-creatures and the dishonor of our Heavenly Father, to whom we pray for our daily bread. This prayer, by the way, appears strange on the lips of those who have already abundance of the world's goods, nearly all of which is held and administered for their own households. One of the reasons, no doubt, why Christianity has not overrun the world with Pentecostal speed, is because so many of Christ's followers trust their bank books more than their Bibles, and have little or nothing in common with their poor brothers.

Those who call themselves Christians are really as guilty in this matter as the veriest worldling. No doubt the command to provide for our families was rendered necessary by those idle loafers, found in every age, who will not work, and therefore should not eat. In every circle we see such men and women, who are wholly unproductive, and wasting their years in worthless living, while their families grow up without education, without religion, ill clad and half fed. These are the fellows who are worse than infidels. We see them in beer gardens and whisky dens. Here is a so-called disciple of the Lord with his name on the church roll, worth a hundred thousand, perhaps half a million, enjoying himself immensely, his personal expenditures for the year creeping up to many thousands of dollars. The family content themselves with giving their cast-off clothing to Christ! Is not the pulpit largely responsible for the prevalence of such grievous selfishness?

But whilst the wealthy few overdo providing for their own households, the poor many underdo it, and this latter is incalculably the greatest injury to society. Every man who spends a cent on useless and selfish indulgence in drink or tobacco, while his family is in any respect in want of comfortable food and clothing and suitable education, is neglecting to provide for his own household, and is in so far worse than an infidel. This is a grievous charge, but reason and experience fully bear it out. Were the seven thousand licensed and two thousand unlicensed dram shops, and thousands of tobacco shops of [New York], all of whose business is not only unnecessary but positively pernicious, left without customers, there would be few or no poor, and little or no crime amongst our population.—*N. "Take me on Shore."

A godly minister had a careless and idle son, who left his home and sailed to a foreign land. His sorrowful parents could only pray for him, and send him good advice. The ship which bore their boy reached a distant port, and was waiting to take in a fresh cargo, when the sailors went on shore and brought back with them a little native boy who could play some curious kind of music.

He amused them for a long time; but at last he said, "You must now take me on shore."

The sailors told him that he must not go yet.

"Oh, indeed, I cannot stay any longer," replied the little black boy.

"And I will tell you why. A kind Christian missionary has come near the village where I live. From him I have learned all I know about Jesus Christ. This is about the hour when he meets us under a tree to tell us more; I want to go and hear him."

The sailors were overcome by the boy's entreaties, and at once rowed him ashore.

The minister's thoughtless son was struck with the words of the little heathen boy. He felt condemned by them. "Here am I," said he to himself, "the son of a minister in England, knowing far more about Jesus than that poor boy, and yet caring far less for him! That little fellow is now earnestly listening to the Word of Life, while I am living quite careless about it!"

In great distress of mind he retired that night to his hammock. There his father's instructions came back to his thoughts, and reminded him how he might seek and find that salvation he so much needed. He became a sincere Christian; and great was the joy in his English home when the happy tidings reached his parents.—Foreign Missionary.

The Great Japanese Idol Daibutz.

We started from Yokohama at 5:30 in the morning, a party of six, in what is called here a traveling carriage—a hard-seated, stiff-springed vehicle, but one strong and well fitted for rough country roads. We jolted along for nine miles before stopping for breakfast, the road for that distance running through small villages that were so close together that they really formed one long straggling town, having districts bearing different names. The houses are mostly mean and dirty, and a state of almost complete nudity is the prevailing habit of both sexes. At Totska, one of these many villages, we halted at a tea-house to refresh ourselves for the long journey still before us. In making these country trips, it is necessary to go well provided with eatables, as the tea-houses only supply Japanese "chow," such as tea, rice, eggs, and fish, the last being served in such a state of decomposition as to disgust even the hungriest traveler. So we only accepted the plates and bowls offered us by the young girls of the house, and settled ourselves in comfort on the floor-mats, while our servant prepared and we ate a civilized meal. Then into our carriage again and on to Katase, beyond which the roads are too narrow and rough for carriages to pass. This ride brought us within a short distance of the object of our trip, namely, a sight of Daibutz, the largest and most famous of the many gods of Japan. This idol is in the midst of a plain, once the site of a large city. Now it is surrounded only by a thin grove of trees, which have outlived the more perishable temples and shrines once included in these sacred grounds, and of the city only the small, straggling village of Kamakura remains. The approach to the statue is by a broad walk of flagstones, and I almost dreaded the moment when it would be in full view, for fear of a disappointment with regard to its wonders, of which I had heard so much. But a single glance dispelled this idea, for its size and grandeur were far beyond what I had pictured in my mind. Daibutz, meaning the "Great Buddha," is about 70 feet in height, entirely of bronze, and represents the god in his usual state of profound repose, sitting cross-legged, the eyes closed, and hands clasped with thumb nails meeting. It rests upon a stone foundation, and in front of it, upon a stone altar, are two large bronze vases, each containing blossoms and leaves of the lotos, a sacred plant of the Buddhists, perfectly carved in bronze, and in front of both is the inevitable cash-box. Climbing up the folds of the god's garment, which form safe footholds for some distance, we sat down on his immense thumbs, and some idea may be formed of the size of this statue by the fact that three grown persons can sit comfortably on one thumb, between its end and second joint. This majestic idol, perfect in its proportions and sublime in its expression of an eternity of repose, was placed in its present position many centuries ago—so many that the exact date is unknown. Two wire-guarded windows are cut in the back near the shoulders, and a door cut on one side admits visitors. Here we found a good-sized room with images of various saints on two rough altars, and incense burning before them. Cut in the woodwork of the altars and written in Japanese ink anywhere and everywhere about this interior of the statue were innumerable names and addresses of visitors, most of them, I regret to say, of our countrymen. This name-writing propensity of Americans never appeared to me more obnoxious than on this occasion, when I saw an object that has been revered by generations of people desecrated by the puerile vanity of travelers.

Toys for Children.

The amount expended for toys and playthings for children is immense. Is this right, in accordance with Bible stewardship? Were children trained in the way they should go, nurtured from early infancy in the fear of the Lord, on gospel principles, would they delight, as they now do, in these trifling toys? Are not very many of these fancy articles, on which millions are lavished, worse than useless, of a pernicious tendency? Such is the opinion of not a few who are wise in things pertaining to the heavenly kingdom.

An intelligent writer, alluding to this unwise and extravagant expenditure, says: "Playthings that the children make for themselves are a great deal better than those which are bought for them. They employ them a much longer time, they exercise ingenuity, and they please them more. A little girl had better fashion her cups and saucers of acorns, than to have a set of earthen ones supplied. A boy takes ten times more pleasure in a little wooden cart he has pegged together, than he would in a painted and gilded carriage brought from the toy-shop; and we do not believe any expensive rocking-horse ever gave so much satisfaction as we have seen a child in the country take with a coacoanut husk, which he had bridled and placed on four sticks. There is a peculiar satisfaction in inventing things for one's self. No matter though the construction be clumsy and awkward, it employs time (which is a great object in childhood), and the pleasure the invention gives is the first impulse to ingenuity and skill. For this reason, the making of little boats and mechanical toys should not be discouraged; and when any difficulty occurs above the powers of a child assistance should be cheerfully given.—D. F. N.

Children's Corner.

Happy Children Love Each Other.

"Love is the golden clasp
That bindeth up the trust;
Oh, break it not, lest all the leaves
Shall scatter and be lost."

Little girls and boys, have you any brothers or sisters? If you have, love them a great deal, for you do not know how long you may be together. And even if you should live to be old men and women, do you not think it would make you very happy to remember when you were children you never quarrelled? And if you have lost a darling little brother, or a gentle, loving sister, there is nothing that makes you feel so sad as that sometimes you were unkind and angry.

"Children, do you love each other?
Are you always kind and true?
Do you always do to others
As you'd have them do to you?"

We heard of a brother and sister who loved one another very much. He was older, and was taken ill and died. They laid him out on his own little bed, and his mother took his little sister to look at him. I cannot tell what she felt and thought as she stood and looked at his sweet face, as white and cold as marble; but she wept very much. At last she said:

"Mother, may I take hold of his hand?"

After a little time she placed it in hers, when the dear child, lifting it up and stroking it gently, said:

"This little hand never struck me!"

Oh, how pleased she was to think of that! "Little children, love one another."

"Little children, love each other,
Never give another pain;
If your brother speak in anger,
Answer not in wrath again."

Just One.

While I was walking in the garden one bright morning, a breeze came through and set all the leaves and flowers fluttering. Now that is the way flowers talk; so I listened.

Presently an elder tree said, "Flowers, shake off your caterpillars!"

"Why," said a dozen altogether, for they were like some children who always say, "Why?" when they are told to do anything—bad children those!

The elder said, "If you don't they will eat you alive."

So the flowers went to shaking till the caterpillars were shaken off.

In one of the middle beds there was a beautiful rose who shook off all but one, and said to herself, "Oh! that's a beauty; I'll keep that one."

The elder overheard her, and called out, "One caterpillar is enough to spoil you."

"But," said the rose, "look at his brown and crimson fur, and his beautiful black eyes, and scores of little feet; I want to keep him; surely one won't hurt me."

A few mornings after I passed the rose again; there was not a whole leaf on her; her beauty was gone; she was almost killed, and had only life enough to weep over her folly, while the tears stood like dewdrops on her scattered leaves. "Alas! I didn't think one caterpillar would ruin me."

One sin will destroy a noble boy or beautiful girl as sure as the worm the rose.—Selected.

The Common Pump.

I think it is Herschel who somewhere says that if a man were confined from childhood in a prison he might be able to reason out all the truths of pure mathematics, but he never could tell, unless he saw it, what would become of a lump of sugar when thrown into water.

In illustration of this I will take as an instance the rise of water in a pump. It was a matter of common experience that the suction of the piston was followed by the rise of water in the well. How was it to be accounted for? The Greeks had sense enough to see that a vacuum was created above the water, and having established in their minds a theory that "Nature abhors a vacuum," they thought this a sufficient reason to explain the occurrence. As nature abhorred a vacuum, she testified her abhorrence by making the water fill it. Now, there is obviously no physical cause given to account for the physical effect. It is merely an imaginary reason unsupported by any mechanical proof. And yet this theory, that nature abhors a vacuum, was accepted as a sufficient explanation of every phenomenon, of a fluid, whether liquid or aeriform, rushing in to fill empty space, for more than two thousand years. At last in the middle of the seventeenth century, when some engineers were employed by the Duke of Tuscany to sink a well near Florence of an unusual depth, it was found that the pump would not work. They applied to Galileo, then an old man living at Fiesole, to explain the reason, and he, half in jest and half in earnest, told them that he supposed that nature did not abhor a vacuum above ten metres. But Torricelli, a pupil of Galileo, applied himself to the problem, and he soon satisfied himself that a column of water thirty-three feet high, which is the utmost height to which water can be raised in a pump, must be raised by some mechanical force equivalent to the weight of water supported. He made experiments, and found that this mechanical force was nothing else than the weight of the atmosphere. Here, then, was the discovery by scientific experiment of an unsuspected truth—that the air has definite weight, and a weight exactly equal to that of a column of water exactly thirty-three feet high. But men are slow to admit what shocks a long-cherished opinion or prejudice, and it was not until Pascal demonstrated the truth of Torriselli's theory by experimentally showing that mercury in the barometer (invented by Torricelli) sinks as it is carried up a mountain—where, of course, the higher it goes the weight of the air is less—that men were absolutely convinced that the atmospheric weight and pressure are the sole cause of the phenomenon. For, as Pascal observed, "we cannot suppose that nature abhors a vacuum at the foot of a mountain more than at the summit."—Fraser's Magazine.

Religious Intelligence.

Dr. Buchanan has been in the ministry over 50 years, having been ordained in the established church of Scotland in 1821.

—An incident connected with Mr. Hammond's work in San Francisco is thus related in the Herald and Presbyter: A few evenings since Mr. Hammond said: "If there is any infidel in the church, a man who says, 'I don't believe in the Bible or in Christianity,' let him rise up." A young man, a civil engineer, arose. Rev. Dr. Cox sought out this young man in the inquiry meeting, and finding him to be honest in his skepticism, he urged him to seek the solution of his doubts by prayer and the reading of the Bible. The young man finally promised the Doctor that he would go home and read the 51st Psalm on his knees. He kept his promise, and while reading he was convicted of sin. His skepticism vanished. He sought and found salvation through Christ, and last night stood up before the great congregation and told his experience. Dr. Cox says quaintly that the 51st Psalm is his favorite prescription in such cases.

The Grange proposes to do this. Thus it is a religion, but it is at variance with the Christian religion. It is a heathenish religion on Christian soil.

In the ceremonies of the degrees of the Patrons of Husbandry the reader will find good injunctions, pleasing sentiments with a few poetical sentences curiously mingled with customs which would benefit a party of innocent people who were concealing themselves from blood-thirsty persecutors. The fact that Freemasonry and other secret orders practice worse customs does not lessen the vicious nature of these now under consideration.

The unobjectionable parts of their ritual are evidently intended to make the application of the "iron" bondage gentle as that of a "silken thread" and to conceal the hideousness of the form of admitting members and of their solemn obligations never to reveal the secrets of the Order, in a country whose fundamental principle of action is, that all men have equal rights as regards life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

CLOSING CEREMONIES IN A SUBORDINATE GRANGE.

(These are the closing ceremonies of the evening and may occur after conferring any one of the four degrees. The Constitution forbids conferring more than one of the four degrees in one evening.)

Master to Overseer:—Worthy Overseer, are the labors of the day completed?

Overseer to Master:—They are, worthy Master.

Master to Patrons:—As there seems to be no more work for us to-day, the Steward will see that the implements* are properly secured for the night.

Steward to Master:—All is secure, Worthy Master (all having been collected and locked up).

Master to Patrons:—(Calls up, 3 raps) Brothers and Sisters: As we are again to separate and mingle once more with the world, let us not forget the precepts of our Order. Let us aim to add dignity to labor. In our dealing with our fellowmen, be honest, be just and fear not. Avoid intemperance in eating, drinking, and language; also in work and recreation. Whatever you attempt to do, strive to do well. Let us be quiet, peaceful citizens. Feed the hungry; help the fatherless and the widows and keep ourselves unspotted from the world.

CLOSING SONG.

Brothers and sisters, now we must
Give each the parting hand,
Beseeching God, in whom we trust
To freely bless our land;
To bless the Grange assembled here,
Our hearts to Him incline,
And make us pure as Patrons were
In the days of "Auld Lang Syne."

BENEDICTION BY CHAPLAIN.

May our Divine Master above protect and bless you all now and evermore.

All respond:—Amen.

Master to Steward:—Worthy Steward, inform the Gate Keeper that I now declare the labors of the day closed.

REMARKS ON CLOSING CEREMONIES.

It will be seen by the closing services that the initiated regard themselves as holy, elect or chosen in some way; the language is, "you are about to mingle with the world, the uninitiated, let us not forget the precepts of our Order;" i. e., be faithful to your pledges and obey the injunctions of the Order. But now comes the more fearful prostitution of God's Word to a profane use. They are exhorted in the language of the apostle James, to visit the fatherless and widows and to keep themselves unspotsed from the world. Certainly the uninitiated are the world; the members of the Grange are made up promiscuously of church members, adulterers, preachers, fornicators and so on; and now at dismission this conglomerate mass is exhorted to keep unspotted from the rest of mankind, evidently esteeming its members better than the members of the church of Christ. This is anti-Christ.

INSTALLATION OF OFFICERS IN A SUBORDINATE GRANGE.

Any member of a State Grange can install officers in a Subordinate Grange. It may be public if desired.

Master:—We have met on this occasion to install the officers of this Grange; let us first invoke the blessing of God. Calls up.

PRAYER BY CHAPLAIN.

Almighty Father, Maker of the universe and giver of every good to mankind, we beseech Thee, be with us on this occasion; bless those who shall at this time be installed officers of this Grange; endow them with prudence and wisdom. Be with all the officers of the State and National Grange, and all connected with our Order, and aid us in extending its benefits in all parts of our land. Be with all orders and associations having for their object the advancement of education and the moral welfare and happiness of mankind; we ask all in Thy name. Amen.

*The implements of the Lodge that are secured, are the regalia, aprons, etc.

Master calls down. The officers elect will please seat themselves at the left of the altar. When seated, he says: Patrons and friends, be pleased to give an attentive ear to our worthy brother, who has been authorized to install our officers.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER.

Since God created the earth, agriculture has existed; there is no occupation that precedes it, no order or association that can rank with the tillers of the soil. Before literature existed, before governments were known, agriculture was the first calling of man. The order of Patrons is the only association that originates, exists and works with its members in their daily associations. It is part of a farmer's life; it does not call him from his work to put his mind upon any other subject, but tends to recreation in his daily duties, and, by cheerful instruction to lighten and elevate his labor. Its teachings are the loftiest that man can seek. It does not interfere with his religious or political views. In morality it seeks the highest point; honesty is inculcated; education, nurtured; charity is a prominent characteristic; temperance is supported and brotherly love cultivated.

It is designed to bind the farmers together in fraternity and, by encouraging education, advance to a higher state of perfection in the science of agriculture. We aim to encourage the planting of fruits and flowars by which to enhance the value and increase the attractions of our homes, adorning them with those beauties so lavishly given us by the God of nature. And there is no calling more clevating to the mind than agriculture, when viewed as instructed in our Order. God in the beginning made it honorable and it is our duty to sustain it as such. Discarding the principles which shut out woman from a knowledge of the mysteries, we open wide the door and bid her welcome. In so doing, we claim a precedent, when God said "it is not good for man to be alone." Ours is a social Order. All can find herein something to enjoy and we believe there is nothing better for a man than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul enjoy good in his labor. It is from the hand of God. We ask none to join us who cannot see good in their fellow-beings; but to all those who have generous hearts and open hands to help the needy, raise the fallen and are willing to aid in making the labors of life cherful, we say, welcome to the Grange.

To the members:—Patrons, I am clothed with the power to install your officers.

To the officers elect:—Placing confidence in you that you will seek to add honor to your position by correct deportment, your companions have selected you as their leaders for the ensuing year.

To the Grange:—Patrons, is it your wish that Bro. ——— shall be installed as Master of this Grange?

Grange:—It is.

Installing Officer's assistant now conducts the Master elect to the altar.

Assistant to Installing Officer:—Worthy sire, I have the honor to introduce to you Bro. ———, who has been chosen Master of this Grahge- I believe him to be well skilled in our work and observant of the noble precepts of our Order and have no doubt that he will discharge the important duties of his office with fidelity.

Installing officer (Calls up) then administers the following

OBLIGATION.

I ———, having been elected Master of ——— Grange, I do solemnly pledge my honor that I will perform all the duties appertaining to the office as far as in my power, until my successor is duly installed. I will support the constitution of the National Grange, the by-laws of this Grange and I will inculcate a strict obedience to all laws and edicts emanating from the proper authority. I will not take advantage of the position to bias in any way, either directly or indirectly, the political or religious opinion of any member of the Order. (Calls down.)

Installing Officer:—Worthy brother, in performing this duty, I must impress upon your mind the importance of the position you hold. You will be foremost in advocating the principles and carrying out the objects of our Order. To you will not only those connected with your Grange look for example, but those outside the gate will scrutinize each act. Let me caution you that you keep the eye of the mind open among your members; encourage improvement; remember that nature's motto is onward. She never goes backward.

You may encounter difficulties; overcome them, remembering that difficulties are but opportunities to test our abilities. As Master of this Grange, your fellow-laborers will look to you to devise work; a judicious Master will take due care that no time is lost in useless labor. Encourage improvement. Your laborers may not at first comprehend the value of this, but it is your duty to instruct them, and in this you will come in contact with their minds; if those be left uncultivated, if neglect is allowed to sow itself, the moral weed crop will meet your eye to baffle and torment you.

It will be a prominent part of your duty both in and out of the Grange, to encourage the education of the children within the limits of your jurisdiction, to see that they are not banished at the tender age of childhood from the school of early instruction to the labors of the fields before the mind has received that gentle care and training which enlivens, explains, and dignifies labors. (Calls up.) I now decorate you with the sash and pouch of the Master of this Grange and present you with the Master's gavel; and in conducting you to the chair, I place in your hands the constitution of the Order and laws of the Grange. (Calls down.) Retiring Master greets the new one, and, if he sees proper, can make a retiring speech.

The other officers are now called up and receive the obligation after which Installing Officer's assistant then introduces Overseer.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO OVERSEER.

Brother, your duty is to see that the orders of the Master are faithfully transmitted to the laborers, and in his absence to take his place. The laborers come to you for instructions in their work and you are brought in contact with them; your influence is direct; exert that influence with due care. Of all the sweetness of human toil, of all the motive powers that give alacrity to hand or foot, readiness to the will, intelligence to the mind and purpose, the quickest and most enduring in results is the kind word spoken in season. In presenting you with the emblem of your rank I need not urge you to be faithful in the performance of your duties.

Assistant places sash and pouch upon him and conducts him to his seat and introduces Lecturer.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO LECTURER.

Brother, to you is assigned the important duty of imparting instruction to the members of the Grange. To this end you will be prepared at each meeting of the Grange, whenever the time will permit to deliver short addresses; to read, or cause to be read short articles containing uscful information and to suggest topics for discussion by the Grange. You will also see that all addresses, lectures and other information for the good of the Order, are promptly laid before the Grange, or distributed among the members. In selecting subjects, include the house and the home, as well as the farm and the field; for it is in the former that the rewards of labor upon the latter are finally enjoyed. A well ordered household is essential to a happy home. I now have the pleasure of investing you with the sash and pouch, and of decorating you with the emblem of your office.

Assistant conducts him to his seat and introduces Steward.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO STEWARD.

It is required in Stewards that they be found faithful. Your duty in the Grange is to set new laborers at work and to learn their qualifications, then to assign them their proper places. It requires good judgment on your part. You are also to see that each one is suitably rewarded for his labor. You will find many who will claim a thorough knowledge of the business of the farm, at the same time are ignorant of the first principles of the laws of nature; to these you will furnish every facility, by access to the library to improve their minds and use every effort to enable them to attain the highest rank in their calling. It is yours to guide your brother over the field and keep his feet from stumbling, until he is enabled to walk by himself; and herein it is necessary that you be faithful, having no respect to persons. It is also your duty to see that the property of the Grange is secured and all safely put in the hands of the gate keeper. Your emblem is the Spade, an ancient implement, used by Stewards in passing through the fields to eradicate weeds that may have escaped the notice of the laborers. Let it remind you of your duty as a faithful Steward, to check the growth of weeds in our Order.

Assistant places sash and pouch upon the Steward, conducts him to his seat and introduces Assistant Steward.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO ASSISTANT STEWARD.

Brother, your duty is to guard the inner gate and assist the Steward in his labors. Be cautious, be true. As the Assistant Steward there are labors also devolving upon you which require that you look carefully to the welfare of those consigned to your charge. Your associations with the Steward should be of the most amicable nature. Your emblem is the pruning-hook. The spear, beat into a pruning-hook, is emblematical of peace. May it always remind you of your duty, to strive in preserving peace in our Order.

Assistant Installing Officer places sash and pouch upon him and conducts him to his seat and introduces Chaplain.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO CHAPLAIN.

(Places sash and pouch upon him). Reverend brother, upon you devolves a labor that I trust will ever be a pleasant and cheerful task. In presenting you with the sacred volume, (calls up), a text-book in which all look for wisdom and instruction; I need not urge you to be faithful in your calling. As the medium of this Grange to hold converse with the Master of the Great Grange above. May you never intercede in vain. May the spiritual seed you shall sow fall on good soil and bring forth a hundred-fold. Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt gather it after many days. Remember the parable of the mustard seed. Brethren, behold your Chaplain. (Calls down.)

Assistant Installation Officer conducts him to his seat and introduces Treasurer.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO TREASURER.

Brother, confidence in your honesty and integrity prompts your companions to deposit in your keeping the keys of the treasury. Take the emblem of your office and may you prove to all that you are honorable and worthy of the trust.

Assistant Installation Officer places sash and pouch upon him; conducts him to his seat and introduces Secretary.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO SECRETARY.

Brother, the duties of your office are the most arduous of all, requiring judgment, promptness and efficiency. You become the organ of the Grange and through you communication is maintained with the Grange throughout the land. Let your correspondence at all times be courteous, brief, yet comprehensive. The record of the Grange will ever be held as a valuable memento of your labors. Let them be exact, and a faithful history of its work.

Assistant places sash and pouch upon him, conducts him to his seat and introduces Gate Keeper.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO GATE KEEPER.

Brother, in presenting you with the emblem of your rank, I caution you to be vigilant and watchful. Your position is a responsible one; neglect on your part might enable an enemy to enter, rob the orchard and vineyard, or sow the ground with tares. Being chosen by your fellow husbandmen is evidence that they hold you in high esteem. The jewels of the Grange are placed in your keeping, together with all its paraphernalia, see that the garments of the laborers are suitable and let none enter the fields except in proper attire.

Assistant places sash and pouch upon him, conducts him to a seat and introduces Ceres.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO CERES.

Worthy sisters, the ancients worshipped Ceres as the goddess of agriculture; but we, in a more enlightened age, give you the honored position metaphorically and to show our respect for woman. Let woman elevate her thoughts. As you have been chosen to grace this Grange and encourage your brothers by your presence to labor with diligence, I place this wreath upon your head and the sickle under your protection. Revere the one and guard the other; they are significant of the bounties of God, that can only properly be garnered by the labor of man.

Assistant Installation Officer seats Ceres and introduces Pomona.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO POMONA.

In placing upon your brow this wreath of fruit blossoms, it is to aid your associates in our Order and to encourage the association of women in our work. In placing in your hands this branch ladened with fruit blossoms, let us remember that no trees bear fruit in autumn which do not bloom in Spring. To the end that our age be profitable and laden with good fruit, let all endeavor that our youth may be studious and replete with the blossoms of observation and learning.

Assistant conducts Pomona to her seat and introduces Flora.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO FLORA.

Selected to personate Flora in this Grange, I cordially welcome you and trust the ardor you will evince in the culture of flowers, will prompt all your associates to beautify their homes with them. Their culture and study invariably elevates and never degrades. I crown you with this wreath, emblematical of every grace and virtue that should be found in woman.

Assistant conducts Flora to her seat and introduces Stewardess.

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO STEWARDESS.

Sister, as Stewardess of this Grange, I present you with the Shepherd's crook. It is emblematical of care and kindness, as well as innocence and purity. It is your duty to conduct your sister initiates and keep their feet from stumbling. At your hands alone are they enabled for the first time to see the interior of a working Grange and it is by you they are decorated as sisters in our Order. May the impressions made by you upon their minds be good, and so formed an honor to all.

Assistant seats Stewardess. (Calls up.)

ADDRESS OF INSTALLING OFFICER TO GRANGE.

I now declare the officers of this Grange duly installed; may your labors be pleasant and your duties faithfully performed to the satisfaction of all working under you. Be cheerful and united. Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. (Closing ode.)

And now, Patrons, removing from our hearts all jealousies and hatred and bitterness of feeling towards other orders and associations, let us strive with them, working with them hand in hand, for the good of our fellow-beings. Let us remember that amid all that is bright and beautiful in nature, there is nothing that blooms with such unfading colors, there is no perfume on earth so fraught with fragrance as the flowers of good works and the sweet-smelling savor of that pity which feels for the wants and relieves the distress of our sisters and brothers.

BENEDICTION.

And now, may He who has adorned this earth with never-ending beauties, bless your labors and crown them with abundant harvests.

FUNERAL CEREMONIES.

The badge of mourning consists one piece each of black and white ribbon, one inch wide, tied above the elbow on the left arm.

The male members meet at their Grange with the usual badge of mourning, form in order, four abreast, with or without music, and march to the residence of the deceased. Pall-bearers wear a white sash. Each member, male or female, carries a small boquet of flowers, either fresh or dried. The hearse is decked with evergreens, and, preceding the procession, move to the cemetery in the following order:—Pall-bearers on either side of the hearse.

Relatives of deceased, and sisters of the Order next, in carriages.

Music next.

Brothers of the Order next.

On reaching the cemetery gate, the hearse halts and brothers, two and two, open to the right and left, and pass on ahead to the grave, forming in two lines, facing inward. Pall-bearers now pass up the centre with the body and deposit it at the side of the grave. Relatives now follow and then the sisters and halt at the grave.

MASTER'S ADDRESS.

Worthy sisters and brothers, it becomes our duty to pay a last tribute of respect to a worthy (brother or sister). Let us remember that we must needs die and are as water spilt on the ground which cannot be gathered up again; neither does God respect any person, yet doth he devise means that his banished be not expelled from him.

Worthy Chaplain let us bow in prayer.

News of the Week.

The City.

The ninth annual encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic will be held here on the 12th inst. A grand reunion of the army and navy occurs at the same time; great preparations are being made for the reception.——The new superintending architect of the Custom House now building, has found the work and material so poor that a consultation was held last week with the Government architect on the advisability of taking down all the work and beginning from a new foundation. It was the "bad" (M)asons spoiled the job last June 24th.——In spite of the storm of last week an unusually large lumber fleet, numbering some forty vessels were waiting to be transferred to the yards on Monday morning.——Three fishermen were drowned in the Lake near the Chicago University in the Saturday's storm.

The Country.

On the 22d ult., a band of Cheyennes camped near Monument Station, 380 miles west of Kansas City. Information was sent to old Fort Lyon, and Lieutenant Henely, with two companies were ordered out. They followed the trail rapidly and came up with the Cheyennes next day who made a desperate fight. The engagement lasted for two hours, when the Indians broks and fled, leaving their baggage, poniee and tents on the field. Twenty-seven Indians and two soldiers were killed. Intense excitement prevails along the border.——Attorney General Williams has at last resigned and Judge Edwards Pierrepont of New York, a Republican who is believed to hold principle above-party, has been appointed to fill the vacancy.——A fire broke out in Oskosh, Wis., Apr. 28th, and was soon beyond control, enveloping over one-third of the city in flames, and totally destroying everything in its path. The fire started in Spaulding's saw-mill, on the river bank, and burned along Main street, destroying among other buildings, the Beckwith House, the First Congregational Church, the Harding Opera House, and several blocks in addition including many of the best dwellings in the city. The railroad buildings were uninjured. The burned district is one and a half miles long and half a mile wide. Nearly all of the business houses were burned, including all the banks, and on the north side there is not a dry-goods store standing. A high wind prevailed at the time the fire broke out, and the flames swept onward with irresis ible force. The portion of the city consumed embraces the leading business blocks and some of the finest residences in Oshkosh. The loss is estimated at $2,700,000; three hundred families were made homeless, and three persons were killed during the fire.

Foreign.

The Prince of Wales was formally installed as Grand Master of the Freemasons in England on the 28th of April. The ceremony took place at Albert Hall, London, which was filled by members of the order from all parts of Britain and from the continent. The display was one of unprecedented magnificence; but neither party is greatly honored by the selection.——A learned blacksmith in Canada, named Reiber, expressed his disbelief in the doctrine of a purgatory. For this, Father Renan, the town priest, warned his parishoners from the altar not to patronize the blacksmith under penalty of deprivation of the sacraments. Reiber sued to recover damages, and Mr. Justice Sicott, of the Circuit Court, a Catholic, dismissed the suit. Reiber appealed to the Court of Review, and has been granted $100 demages, a Catholic Judge giving the decision.

Home and Health Hints.

HEALTHY HOUSES.—Most persons in selecting a town site prefer a level plain, yet all know that the mountain is healthier than the valley. A elevated situation is less liable to disease than a flat; the difference in salubrity is less, from the fact that water tends downwards, leaving a dry soil; dampness and disease go hand in hand.

There is another reason. In flat localities all the accumulations of dirt and filth on the surface are rained upon, are dissolved, and the water is saturated with them. This water sinks into the ground a few feet, and there remains. It is this water which supplies the wells, which is mixed with our food and swallowed into our stomachs by the gallon every day. To have pure water, the source should be higher than the town, and if in the country, higher than any of the dwellings in the neighborhood; and yet, in most cases, the "spring" or the well has to be gone down to, is almost always at the bottom of the hill, or other elevation. In respect to the selection of a site for a family residence, especially in cities, it should either be an a sandy soil or on a natural hill, never over a filling. As this must be done, there should be a system of drain-pipes to carry the water abundantly and rapidly away. Many a family mansion has been built with the accumulations of the savings of half a life-time, to make the graves of half the household in a few months, from neglect of precautions for thorough draining and a proper water supply for drinking and cooking.

NEWSPAPERS VS. MOTHS.—Newspapers are better than cedar chests for keeping woolen clothing in over summer. The moths don't like to tackle the newspapers; they know better. Whip the coats, shawls, &c., thoroughly—particularly about the seams; then fold them snugly in a large printed sheet, and paste the paper tight—gum arabic mucilage is best. Then fasten it all tightly in a linen or cotton sheet. This, we are assured by those who have had years of experience at all kinds of preventives, is the most effectual protection of woolen clothing from the ravages of moths.

KEEP MIRRORS FROM THE SUN.—It does not seem to be generally understood that the amalgam of tin-foil with mercury, which is spread on glass plates to make looking glasses, is very readily crystalized by actinic solar rays. A mirror hung where the sun can shine on it is usually spoiled; it takes a granulated appearance familiar to housekeepers, though they may not be acquainted with the cause of the change. In such a state the article is nearly worthless, the continuity of the surface is destroyed, and it will not reflect outlines with any approach to precision.

TO REMOVE FRECKLES.—Pack so much knowledge into the head that it will shine out through the eyes and draw attention away from the skin, then cultivate amiability of temper, gentleness and sweetness of manner, so as to charm beholders into admiration. Eat wholesome food, exercise abundantly in the open air, keep the hair neatly combed, and the teeth pearly, and let the freckles take care of themselves. The cosmetics in use for their removal don't remove them in the first place, and, secondly, are deadly poisons. Who cares or asks whether Emily Faithfull or Florence Nightingale is freckled or not?

Farm and Garden.

ORCHARD GRASS flowers in dense clusters; stem is erect, about three feet high; leaves, linear, flat, dark green, rough on both sides; root perennial, and flowers in June and July. It blossoms earlier than timothy and about the time of red clover, and it makes an admirable mixture with that plant to cut in blossom and cure for hay. As a pasture grass it should be fed close, both to prevent it forming thick tufts and running to seed, when it loses a large percentage of its nutritive matter and becomes hard and wiry, but all kinds of stock eat it greedily when green. For cows it is one of the best grasses we have, and is probably better adapted to sow with clover and other seeds for a permanent pasture than any other forage plant. Five or six days' growth in summer suffices to give a good bite, and sheep will pass over everything else to eat it. It is less exhausting to the soil than rye grass or timothy, and will endure considerable shade, and in porous subsoils its roots extend to a great depth. The seed weighs about fourteen pounds to the bushel, and to sow alone about twenty-four pounds are required to the acre to make a good, sure crop—but half the quantity is required when sown with clover. It should be cut early for hay, and is worthy of an extended cultivation.—Inter-Ocean.

GRASS GARDEN WALKS.—After having been bothered for years by grass and weed-grown walks, I determined to conquer the enemy by a masterly surrender. I therefore spaded up all my walks, adding enough good soil to raise them to a level with the adjoining beds; raked and rolled them till they were firm and even, and then sowed them thickly with 'mixed lawn grass seed,' scratching it in with a rake, and giving a final going over with the roller, and awaited the result. In a very few days (not over three weeks), I had the pleasure of walking on green velvet instead of gritty gravel; and with the help of a lawn mower, and an occasional cutting down of the edges true with a sharp spade, have had no further trouble with my walks.—Country Gentleman.

KEEP THE SOIL MELLOW AROUND TREES.—Unless the surface of the ground is mulched around young trees over an area of six to ten feet in diameter, the ground should be kept clean and mellow. Every farmer knows that a hill of corn or potatoes will not amount to much unless cultivated, and yet there are many who will neglect to give the same care to a tree which is worth a hundred hills of either of the former. In rich soils, trees may grow rapidly without cultivation, and no amount of grass and weeds will retard them, but there are other things besides growth to be looked after. If the weeds and grass are allowed to grow up around the stems of apple, peach or quince trees, the bark will become soft near their base by being shaded, and thereby be in a suitable condition for the reception of the eggs which will eventually become peach or apple borers. Take any dozen young apple trees in sections where the apple borer is abundant, and allow a portion to be choked with weeds and the remainder well cultivated, and then watch the result. From the writer's own experience he believes that the chances are nine to one in favor of those cultivated being exempt from this pest.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal; or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages jnst issned by him, pnrporting to give a full and accnrate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made snch an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene, and have no donbt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;' "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan.

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abdncted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS, in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

Publishers' Department.

May is here; and in Chicago, decks herself with snow crystals. The weather is very cool. But we hope it does not symbolize the spirit which the workers in this reform will manifest, during the month but rather is in contrast with it. 287 subscriptions expire during the present month. Will you do your part toward having them renewed promptly?

If your time is not out until June will you secure one or more new subscriptions to forward with your renewal? It will be a pleasant thing for you to do, and you cannot tell how for it will go towards promoting this great reform. Its effects may even influence future generations.

Have you a ¼ on your label? If so, please send your renewal as this letter on the label indicates that you are in debt to the paper.

Extra copies of the Cynosure, circulars and subscription papers will be furnished free on application to all who canvass for the Cynosure.

Will you send in a club this month?

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

CLUB RATES, INCLUDING POSTAGE.

50 " " " " "	95.00

Twenty subscriptions for six months count the same as ten for a year.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING MAY 1st, from J S Amidon, Mary Andrus, S L Batchelder, T K Bufkin, H B Butts, E Beardslee, J C Bartholomew, Geo. Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Price $1.35.

Topics of the Time.

Prof. Marsh of Yale College made a successful search for fossils in Dakota, near the Black Hills region, last fall. It seems his opportunities for unearthing fossils not usual in college cabinets were not misimproved. His quest brought him among the Indians on Red Cloud's reservation and he brought back specimens of the rations furnished them by the government—flour so poor that ponies would not eat it, and coffee full of black beans. These samples of fossilized fraud he laid before the President and the Indian Commissioner with the opinion that the Indian agent at that reservation was unfit for the place. Fossil hunters of such a practical turn are rare and worth cultivating.

Abbot, editor of the Index, an infidel journal leading the opposition to the Constitutional reform movement, was, before renouncing Christianity, pastor of a Unitarian church in New Hampshire. His lapse from the "Christian" party divided the church and sent the factions bitterly into law. The Supreme Court of the State has decided against Abbot, forbidding the society to permit his preaching in said meeting-house, or "to employ, suffer, or permit to preach in said meeting-house any person who rejects Christianity altogether; or who teaches there, as a system of religion, Christianity is partly true and partly false; or who preaches and inculcates a disbelief in the doctrine of the Lordship and Messiahship of Jesus Christ as the great head of the church, or of his divine mission and authority as a religious teacher, as thus taught by him; or who preaches and inculcates a denial of the doctrine that the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments do contain a divine revelation given by inspiration of God, and containing a sufficient and perfect rule of faith and practice." This is a pretty sweeping verdict nobody will deny. Free-religionists so-called, with their infidel kin will protest in holy horror at its simple justice, which their loose logic will distort into fanaticism. But no one who has carefully compared the status of many popular churches with the Word of God, would be grieved if a like injunction were placed upon them.

Hon. Hugh McCulloch, ex-Secretary of the Treasury, is contributing a series of letters to the New York Tribune upon the financial and peace questions of the French Republic, which are justly receiving marked attention. The prompt payment of the war indemnity to Germany is justly regarded as one of the most wonderful financial achievments of any age. The amount of this indemnity was about one billion dollars, and was raised and paid within twenty-seven months (June 1st, 1871 to September 5th, 1873), "and not one serious difficulty or serious disorder was produced by it." Along with this vast amount were the war expenses of the French which were about half the amount of the indemnity. The French people have thus within three years extinguished a debt one-half as great as that of the United States and are ready to resume specie payments, while the gold premium has never risen above two and one-half per cent; our debt is reduced a little, while gold is now 15 per cent and specie payment a question of the future. This comparison is naturally the study of financiers. Why cannot we do as well as France with a greater population and equal resources? Partly because our country is yet new and while in process of development expenses will be greater for internal improvements. We are unable yet to store up a reserve capital to meet great emergencies. But it must be acknowledged that the greater drawback is the extravagant and spendthrift habits which have taken hold upon the private citizen and the general government alike. The panic began to school us in private economy, and the reform is slowly reaching the political center. When deficiencies are met, not by increasing the taxes, but by reducing the expenses of the government, on the policy lately begun by Secretary Bristow in the customs department, there is hope of a sounder finance.

On the present warlike aspect of Europe, Mr. McCulloch says it is the standing armies of France and other countries that menace the peace of Europe. "These armies are not created for the preservation of the peace; they are the preparations for war; they mean war and nothing else." A period of peace is especially needed by France and she would have that peace if she disbanded her army. 'The Empire is peace,' was the remark of the Third Napoleon. What a blessing it would be to France, and to civilization everywhere if she would now say, 'The Republic is peace,' and verify the saying by following the example of the United States at the close of the late civil war! If she should do so, she would shame every European nation into doing the same." These views recall the wise counsel of Charles Sumner, while yet the negotiations between France and Germany were pending, that the latter should require the disarmament of France instead of a war indemnity or the session of Alsace and Lorraine. Bitterly as such a measure would have been denounced in some quarters, it would have resulted in the peace of Europe and added a brighter glory to the fame of the conqueror.

Our Three-fold Indictment.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

There are three Divinely appointed institutions for the well being of man; the family, the church, and the state; and he who fills up the full measure of his duty in this three-fold relation will find little need or opportunity for any other sphere of activity. Now Masonry is antagonistic to each of these institutions. First, it brings a barrier between the husband and wife, binding him to withhold from her his plighted confidence, separating him from her influence and the society of his children, and bringing him into social relations which often are most pernicious in their tendency. God created us male and female,—counterparts to each other,—joined together for mutual help and guidance; but by an unchangable law of Masonry no woman can be a Mason; and those whom God has joined together man puts asunder. Masonry wars on the church of Christ by being a rival religion, offering salvation without Christ, and bringing the Christian Mason into intimate communion and fellowship with those who hate Him. It teaches men to pray to another than God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and in the Royal Arch degree, to worship the idols Baal and On as equal with Jehovah (see Mackey's Masonic Lexicon; Art. "Jehovah.") It wars on the state. It establishes a code of laws unknown to our Constitution, and contrary to our whole system of jurisprudence. It binds its members by these secret codes to conceal crimes against law, and to espouse the cause of a companion so far as to extricate him from any difficulty whether he be right or wrong. Such an institution is a conspiracy against God and man, and though many good men are involved in it, it is the enemy of every Christian and every citizen.

Dialogue on the Virtues of Masonry.

[S. is secretary of the lodge, member of Congregational church, Sabbath-school teacher, prominent business man, ready to aid in every good enterprise, but one, and usually occupying some important place in all public enterprises, an accommodating neighbor and respected citizen.

A. an anti-secret member of Congregational church.]

S.—What in the world have you against Freemasons? Freemasons never harm any one. The institution is a grand and noble one, relieving the afflicted, etc.

A.—Is it better than the church?

S.—It often does reach cases that would not be reached by the church.

A.—Would it not be better to do your good deeds in the name of Christ?

S.—But I do not see why you should object to Freemasonry.

A.—Christ is excluded. It is unmasonic to mention him in the services of the lodge.

S.—Christ's name is often used in our prayers, and while there are some things in this respect that I would like to change, yet the matter is no more essential than it would be in an insurance society. Freemasonry is not a religious creed, but simply a benevolent organization.

A.—It is a religion, as its highest standard authors abundantly prove, and multitudes expect to go to heaven solely on the merit of being good Masons.

S.—I know some hold that view, but I think they are wrong. Other good things are perverted. Uprightness and morality are good, and some men expect heaven by being moral. To me Freemasonry is not a religion, and I do not see why you are so set against us. If a man lives up to all the requirements and teachings of Freemasonry, he will live as a Christian ought to, better than many church-members do.

(Our secretary's spiritual perceptions are evidently so obfuscated by the high-sounding professions of Masonic lecturers, that Anti tries a new tack, in reply to his renewed request for light).

A.—It interferes with the cause of justice in the courts. (The Ellen Slade case is here narrated, with the decision of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, thus making Freemasonry responsible).

S.—Bad men get into all organizations, and will help each other inside or outside. I do not believe the Grand Lodge did or could make such a decision as you narrate in Whitney's case. We do not know what other circumstances may have entered into the case; quite likely Whitney was overbearing or tyrannical, or he may have been involved in some technical error which justified or compelled their adverse decision. Such a decision as you describe is contrary to the spirit and principles of Freemasonry.

A.—The trial was published just as

I have narrated it, and never denied. Moreover, the action of the sheriff in notifying his brother Mason murderer to escape was in accordance with the principles of Freemasonry, for the Master's oath requires you to help a brother Mason in distress, murder and treason alone accepted and they left to your election; while the Royal Arch degree requires a brother Mason to be assisted, murder and treason not accepted.

S.—My friend, you are deceived, there is no such thing in any degree or oath of Freemasonry.

A.—Have you ever taken the seventh degree?

S.—I decline to answer your questions; but I assure you, on my honor as a man, a Christian, and a Mason, that there is no such thing; the statement is false. I know it to be so. You are mistaken, deceived by those ranting opponents of our noble institution, and some perjured Masons who have been expelled.

A.—Either you have taken the seventh degree or you have not (as a matter of fact S. has only taken three degrees); if you have, you know that what I say is true; if you have not, how can you know what is contained in that fearful secret oath any better than I do? As to perjured Masons, etc., what is perjury? If they have told a lie, they are liars; if the truth, they may be perjurers; but their revelations are true.

S.—I know that you are wrong. I say I know it. You do not know what you are talking about.

A.—My friend, you are the mistaken one. With all due respect for your positive assertion, and for you as a gentleman and a Christian; with all regard for the friendship you have shown toward me, I must say that I have evidence of the truth of the revelations of Freemasonry that would overbear your statement in almost any court of justice; such evidence I am obliged to believe.

S.—(Walking off in an excited manner)—I won't talk any more with you. You are mistaken. (At a distance turning again). You had better be careful how you meddle with things that do not concern you. You will get into trouble.

Thus ended the conversation which, it will be noticed, was forced upon the Anti, who had good reasons for not wishing to be drawn into such a discussion just at that time.

Warning.

BY F. F. FRENCH.

As the civil law protecting religious worship, takes cognizance of innocence or guilt, irrespective of church relations, therefore my civil and religious liberties to expose and reprove sin in Hardwick, or anywhere else, remained intact.

After this farce, called a trial, was over, and my expulsion from the Wolcot church announced as aforesaid, the Rev. Mr. Tabor withdrew the social meetings entirely from the church, and held them in the parsonage. He knew that I had not attended the social meetings in the parsonage, for months previous. My reasons for not so doing were the following: First, they were not sufficiently public; only a few of the regular attendants being present. For the benefit of outsiders, who might possibly be benefited, I felt it a duty to expose the false light which this poor man, and his poor deceived followers were setting up before a benighted and perishing world of sinners about us, a light more cruel and dangerous than the false lights of the Florida wreckers. I had, therefore, no motive to attend, in the absence of those who might possibly be benefited.

Secondly, I wanted some one to bear testimony to what I said other than the clique and their leader, the pastor, who would be likely to consider themselves under church obligations to do God service by testifying against me.

There were a number of convenient pretexts for the removal of these meetings under which the real one might be hid, until the occasion of the quarterly meeting.

I made inquiry of nearly all of the regular attendants, to know why, and by whom, the meetings were removed. No one professed to know anything about it. Some were dissatisfied on account of their removal.

But on the occasion of the quarterly meeting, the social meetings must necessarily be in the church. Consequently, the quarterly meeting love feast gave me an opportunity to warn the people, in a few brief remarks, of the false light this enemy of souls was setting up in our midst for their destruction. This arroused the Rev. C. Tabor, apparently, to a high pitch. He had been obviously skulking since the trial to avoid my fire; and as this was the last quarterly meeting of his last year in H., he could dodge back again to the parsonage with his social meetings, until his year was out, and then leave the poor church, which he had half destroyed, to paddle out of the fight he had led them into, as best they could. But here he was foiled. He must now put in execution his loud and oft repeated threats of a civil suit against me for disturbing the peace, or else back out of the fight, and leave the field in my possession. He ordered me to stop, but in somewhat of a faint manner, compared with his former peremptory orders. Not being obeyed, he then informed me that I was disturbing the meeting. Now I doubt if any one present was so utterly void of common sense, as to have thought of any disorderly disturbance, as being occasioned by my remarks, (however much they might have differed with me in sentiment, time and manner of communication) had the Rev. Mr. Tabor been quiet, and not made all the disturbance himself, in trying to stop me. I bore substantially the same testimony in a camp-meeting love feast, at Lindonville, Vt., Aug. 29th, 1873; and being nobly sustained by a prominent member of the church, in a testimony immediately following, not the least disturbance occurred. Also, at the close of the love-feast, the presiding elder, Rev. J. McAnn, made this remark: "I am in hearty sympathy with all that has been said."

But to return. Being defeated in this attempt to stop me, he was under the painful necessity of remaining quiet until I had finished my testimony. He probably consoled himself, however, with this remark: "We will attend to his case to-morrow."

To-morrow came, and week after week came, and went, but I heard nothing from the civil suit until about the time the Rev. Mr. Tabor was to leave for the annual conference. A short time previous to this, the town grand juror notified me that a complaint had been made to him against me, for disturbing the social meetings. He also showed me a paper containing a list of names of those who were to appear as witnesses against me. The following is a true copy of the list: "Elder Church Tabor, Samuel Norris, Sullivan Wheatly, A. M. Ward, Ephriam Dutton, Willis Still, B. F. Chandler, George Smawley, H. D. Stone, Z. Huntley." He added, in substance, this remark: "I suppose I shall have to see the law executed." I advised him to proceed at once, if he had any good cause of action. About eight months have now passed since this notification, but I have heard nothing more from the civil suit, as yet.

The foregoing statements are a brief outline of the warfare, which, by the grace of God, I have been enabled to carry on against the powers of darkness, for the two years last past. This battle has not been waged with carnal weapons, or with 'confused noise, and garments rolled in blood, but with burning and fuel of fire.' It has been waged with the powers of darkness, in the form of that earthly, sensual, devilish monster, worldly conformity in the church of God—a beast more dreadful and terrible and strong exceedingly, above the one seen by Daniel, which was diverse from all the beasts that were before it, and which had great iron teeth, and devoured and break in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it, more strong and terrible, because more subtile.

A reigning characteristic of this beast is his wisdom, being diverse from the "wisdom which is from above," which is "first pure, and then peaceable." The wisdom of this beast consists in being first impure, and then peaceable. Impurity being the vital element of his being, he is never peaceable, except on the condition of this impurity.

The carnal mind is the den in which this beast lives, and every unclean bird is caged with him. With the carnal mind still alive in him, no professor of religion can live without worldly conformity, either in act or desire. The carnal mind knows of no other atmosphere than that of the world. Every professor of religion,—unless this carnal mind is taken out of him, is under its reign, and is a stranger to the purity, and consequent peace of the "mind that was in Christ;" for this carnal mind "is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." He is dependent on the beast, worldly conformity, for the breath which he breathes. Hence, this professor must have carnal enjoyment of some kind, or he is out of his element.

The National Grange—Rings within Rings.

[From the Chicago Times.]

According to gushing writers of the "Gath" type, "one dark and stormy night, in 1867, three men met in a Washington hotel, and one said to the others, 'Can we do nothing for the poor farmers?'" Of these "three men," two were William Saunders and O. H. Kelly, now the head engineers of the "National Grange."

Mr. Kelley was originally a farmer in Minnesota, where he was unable to make a living, and, being forced into insolvency, went to Washington, where he secured a government clerkship. In 1867, he had occasion, on business connected with the Freedmen's Bureau, to visit the Carolinas. Here he found a colony of Scotch immigrants who had, to keep green their memories of old Scotland, organized themselves into a semi-secret agricultural society, holding regular meetings partly devoted to social matters, partly to practical discussions. This gave brother Kelley the idea of the grange, though at times he has claimed to have invented it at the suggestion and by the advice of Andy Johnson. The latter story is not generally believed outside of Mr. O. H. Kelley, though, as Mr. Johnson is rather too much of a demagogue to deny it in view of the spread of the order, it is somewhat singular that he does not more generally publish the parentage of the grange.

Mr. William Saunders, "second conspirator," as Shakspeare would say, was an ex-English gardiner who had been pitchforked into the bureau of agriculture.

Rev. A. B. Grosh was a Universalist preacher and peripatetic organizer of lodges of Odd-fellows. To the same order Saunders also belonged, and these two men gave the grange its "ritual" and "secret features."

John Trimble, Jr., and T. R. Thompson, who also figures in the official list of "founders of the order," were also department clerks. The other two "founders" were F. M. McDowell of New York, now treasurer, and W. M. Ireland. Somehow or other, when they came to reconstruct the grange, they left out two "founders." One was Mr. D. S. Curtiss, who wrote the "preamble" of the constitution; the other a Mr. Bryan, who lent the grange the money wherewith to print its first supply of blanks, commissions, etc. Anyway these seven "founders" and their friends belonged to the Washington Grange that in 1873 suddenly blossomed out as the National Grange, and assumed despotic authority over 1,361 granges—that now controls 22,000 granges and 1,500,000 patrons. Precisely how these seven founders came to represent the American agricultural community, I cannot say; but there stands the fact that but two of them knew a turnip from a tomato, and of these two one was an insolvent farmer and the other an invalided gardener.

On the 8th of January, 1873, the

"National Grange" held its "sixth annual session" at Washington. There is no record surviving of the first five annual sessions, but we learn (see "Patron's Handbook," published officially in Kansas) that "nineteen States were represented." Inasmuch as, of the 1,362 granges, 3 were in Canada, and in three States State granges were not organized;" about 1,330 remain. Iowa, South Carolina, and Mississippi had 917 of these, so that the remaining 16 States had 413 granges.

THE FIRST NATIONAL GRANGE.

Taking a glance down the list of seventeen officers then elected, we find that the the District of Columbia, which has not a State Grange, a subordinate grange, or even a farmer, has Mr. Kelley as Secretary, Mr. Kelley's wife as Pomona, and Mr. Kelley's wife's sister as assistant steward, Mr. Kelly's friend, Mr. Grosh, as chaplain, and Mr. Grosh's friend, Mr. Saunders, as a member of the executive committee. Iowa sends Mr. D. W. Adams as Master, his wife as Ceres, Mrs. Abbott as Flora, and Mr. Shankland as a member of the executive committee. Now Mr. Adams never was master of a subordinate grange, and consequently never entitled to a seat in the State Grange, whence he stepped to the National Grange, being succeeded by Mr. Shankland. Further, Mr. Adams, master and supreme controller of 1,500,000 farmers, never was even a farmer. The Waukon Standard, published in the town where he lives, says plainly that he is the senior partner in the dry goods firm of Adams and Hale, from which the major part of his income is derived, thus rendering him ineligible even to membership according to the ruling of Master Golder of Illinois. Beyond this, he was a nurseryman, and during his residence in Waukon had not owned a horse or a cow. Evidently, this model Grand Master was sketching from life when he described several ineligible classes as "men who had indeed an interest in agriculture—such an interest as the sparrowhawk had in the sparrow."

Of course, Mr. Adams will assert, as he did to a suckling interviewer in St. Louis a year ago, that he "organized the second grange in Iowa in December, 1869." Postville Grange was No. 2; it was organized in November or October. The Waukon Grange, No. 3, was organized Jan. 6, 1870. Mr. Adams did not return to Waukon till Jan. 20, when he joined the grange, not having organized it, not being even an officer. Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus—I only want to put Master Adams out of court, as a falsifier of the record. Of the Adams-Shankland Iowa ring more anon. Let us "return to our sheep"—rather to our shearers.

South Carolina sends Thomas Taylor and D. W. Aikin. There is nothing particularly wrong about them. Mr. Aikin was put in charge of the Grange Crop Report Bureau last year—a sort of signal service, whereby he was to judge how much pork or corn would be produced in the year and order short signals for Minnesota on wheat or note a rising barometer in sugar-cane for Mississippi. They sent out a hydra-headed circular last May. Either they didn't get answers enough or they got too many, for right on its heels came a second, announcing the withdrawal of the "Bureau." Cost for stamps, circulars, and salaries about $4,000, equal to 13,000 bushels of corn.

Mississipi sends A. J. Vaughan. Next day he opened a great "grange commission house" at Memphis and proceeded to organize the Southwest. The Missourians did't get into the close corporation, being too late, but Mr. N. J. Colman, politician, publisher, commission merchant, and insurance agent, became general deputy, and the grange swelled his subscription list and made him Lieutenant-Governor. Mr. T. R. Allen, his friend, became Master, and was one of the organizers of the Boonville independent movement of 1874. Mr. Quensenberry, Treasurer, ran for office on the Reform ticket and ran away with $22,000 of its funds.

Minnesota sends T. A. Thompson. He is "Lecturer," with a salary of $1,000 and expenses, and last year got a "forward pay grab" of $1,000.

New Jersey—G. W. Thompson, Assistant Steward. Not in the ring.

New York—F. M. McDowell, Treasurer. Receives a salary.

Indiana—O. Dinwiddie, Gate-keeper. This man never was Master of a subordinate grange, never was Master of a State Grange, and so has no business in the National Grange. As the Agent of Messrs. Briggs & Enoch, Rockford, Ill., one of the ostracised plow companies, I don't see how Mr. Dinwiddie ever got into the order at all. It would be interesting to know whether Mrs. Dinwiddie's traveling expenses were borne by the National Grange in 1874, as she became Mrs. D. just before that body met, and the wedding trip was made to St. Louis.

This is the directory of the National Grange. If you examine it, you will see that the presence of whose members is by their own statutes a fraud, control the whole working machinery. Iowa has the Master, Washington the Secretary, and each has one of three members of the Executive Committee, and the third was given a salaried sinecure. Any mortal man would think that the ring had sufficient power to be content, but last year they tried to make themselves life members, and to swamp the grange by adding to it all past members.

Lying before me is the evidence of Mr. Charles W. Greene, formerly of The National Crop Reporter. He inveighs bitterly against the "special deputy" system, and declares that newspaper canvassers, insurance agents, small politicians, and commission dealers were bought up with "commissions" that gave them the liberty to travel on their own business, draw custom and attention to themselves, and "charge the grange $5 a day and expenses."

"It is well that all young men remember that nothing will do them so much injury as quick and easy success, and that nothing needs them so much good as a struggle which teaches them exactly what there is in them, educates them gradually to its use, instructs them in personal economy, drills them into a patient and persistent habit of work, and keeps them at the foot of the ladder until they become strong enough to hold every step they are enabled to gain. The first years of every man's business or professional life are years of education. They are intended to be, in the order of nature and providence. Doors do not open to a man until he is prepared to enter them.

A New Secret Political Society.—The H. L. P. A.

A special dispatch to the Chicago Tribune from New York, dated April 21st, states that no little excitement has been caused by a circular issued from a new secret order, "The Holy League of the Peers of America." This document of the Sovereign Royal Council, which is telegraphed in full, sets forth the intention of the society to enter the arena of politics and the principles on which it claims patronage.

H. L. P. A.—TEMPORARY HEADQUARTERS OF THE S. R. COUNCIL, March, A. D. 1875.—To the thinking part of the public generally, but more particularly to the enlightened press of this country, we respectfully submit the following address:

Although our society has existed for several generations, the fact that its membership has been secret and confined to comparatively few families in each State, has rendered its existence of no importance to the public; while its purely social character prevented it from attracting the attention of the press.

Now, however, that we are about to change the character of our league from a social to a political one, it is but reasonable to suppose that as we increase in strength and numbers we must, in the course of time, fall under the notice and be subjected to the criticism of the press, no matter how quietly we may proceed in our work.

We shall push our organization—as rapidly as is consistent with care and prudence—until it shall embrace such a portion of the ability, wealth, and character of the voting population as will place it beyond the power of any political party to govern without our consent.

A continued preservation of absolute secrecy will, of course, become impracticable; and, as we desire to be judged fairly and intelligently, whether by friends or opponents, we have deemed it best to unequivocally define our position in regard to some of the more important questions of government.

The following may be taken as a part of our platform of principles, and as indicating our sentiments and convictions concerning such subjects as are here touched upon.

1. We maintain that there are certain fundamental doctrines of government which are inherently, absolutely, and self-evidently right, and which cannot be rendered wrong by the adverse opinion or decision of any majority, however large; and that the converse of this proposition is also true. That the unity of this nation, and the supremacy of the National Government over all the Territorial subdivisions of the country (such as States, Territories, counties, and cities), is one of those doctrines which it would be the right and duty of a minority to defend against a majority, if necessary; even by force of arms. That the heresy of "State Sovereignty," or "State Rights," as opposed to national supremacy, is inconsistent with the welfare of the nation; and that all attempts to practically apply said heresy are to be crushed out by force, in the future as they have been in the past. That the claim of some of the older States, that they were at some period in the past independent governments, is not based upon fact, and if it were, it could not be allowed to effect the question at the present day.

2. Treason and rebellion against the Government should be punished by death and confiscation of property.

3. Absolute equality of all men before this law. Security to persons and property throughout the length and breadth of the land.

4. We advocate the "Monroe doctrine" in its external application. We deny the right of any European or other foreign government to exercise any jurisdiction whatever over the territory or the inhabitants of any portion of the Continent of North America or the neighboring islands; and we believe it to be the duty of this Government to assist any people of this Continent or its islands, that shall desire to establish its independence.

5. Opposition to all churches, religions, and sects acknowledging, in temporal matters, any authority outside of the limits of this country, or owing any allegiance not consistent with their allegiance to this Government. No creed should be in conflict with the laws of the land. Beyond this, unlimited religious liberty and toleration for every form of divine worship.

6. "In time of peace prepare for war." We want the army and navy placed on such a footing, numerically and otherwise, as will render them an ever-ready and formidable menace to foreign foes and domestic disturbers. We are opposed to any further reduction of the army, and regard with contempt and indignation the mustering out of competent officers, from considerations of petty economy.

7. Eternal enmity to communism and all kindred anarchial abominations.

8. Disfranchisement of ignorance, incapacity, vice, and pauperism. There is no such thing as a natural right to cast a ballot. The privilege of voting at the polls, like that of voting in a representative assembly or holding a public office, is one which the people may impose as a duty on whomsoever they deem fit to exercise it properly; and which they may withhold at pleasure, or limit and restrict at their discretion.

9. There is an excess of legislation. The country is too old and too far advanced to require a ceaseless assembling of the people for the purpose of tinkering the laws. Changes in existing laws, before they have had time to be fully tested, are far too frequent. Legislative assemblies meet entirely too often. We doubt the wisdom of giving pay to lawmakers.

10. Swift and unfailing punishment to crime. No abolition of capital punishment. Criminal laws to be so constructed and applied as to be a terror to criminals, and not a protection.

11. No elective judiciary. The administration of justice should be unembarrassed by any dependence upon popular favor.

12. While we shall, in the main, always act with that political party which we deem to be nearest right, we shall arrogate to ourselves dictation to this extent only, to-wit: That we will review all party nominations, and will invariably and inflexibly vote against all candidates whose personal and private character, record, or reputation is bad; and this regardless of their fitness in other respects. And to this rule we shall firmly adhere, even when its enforcement shall bring defeat or disaster to the party.

13. Incidentally we seek mutual improvement, and the best possible mental, moral, and physical development of our members.

SOME EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

We shall not, at first, solicit the membership of persons prominently connected with the conduct of any important newspaper: realizing that their position requires them to be independent, and unembarrassed by connections with secret societies. When our plans shall be fully developed, those who favor us will join of their own accord. To a certain extent this applies equally to public men in high station.

We choose to build on the foundation of the old League, in preference to establishing a new one, because its peculiar nature and constitution are particularly well adapted to our purpose, and furnish strong safeguards against the intrusion of undesirable elements.

That many persons will object to the secrecy of our organization and proceedings is highly probable. There are many reasons why a secret organization can, under certain circumstances, work to better advantage than an open one, not the least of which is that all open organizations are certain, sooner or later, to be entered and controlled by demagogues and persons of questionable character, seeking their personal advancement. The plain fact is that there are too many persons who, being thoroughly ignorant of the first principles of government, and possessing neither self-respect nor a sense of responsibility, are yet continually intruding themselves into politics, solely for the purpose of getting some public office for which they are not fitted. We prefer the enmity of all such to their co-operation. Hence secrecy.

We maintain the hereditary principle within the league because it is an element of strength. We aim at a permanent membership of loyal families with fixed principles and sentiments. Families are longer-lived than individuals; and they cast more votes.

We adhere to our aristocratic institutions and designations because they are attractive. They harm no one, and they serve as a bond of fellowship, and stimulate a spirit of emulation.

With those who abhor any application of the hereditary principle, or who have conscientious scruples against the use of titles, we have no quarrel. Membership of the league is not compulsory, and we have not the slightest inclination to extend our peculiar institutions beyond our own ranks. We use them merely for purposes of cohesion among ourselves.

The first national or general convention of this league will be held in 1876, preparatory to the Presidential election of that year, and subsequent to the conventions of the Republican and Democratic parties. Its object will be to decide upon the attitude to be taken by the league in that great struggle, the far-reaching importance of which can even now be plainly seen.

We do not now furnish the address of the Council of the league, because there is no present occasion to communicate with it. As soon as practicable, trustworthy agents will be appointed in the different States, who will be furnished with credentials, and through whom all those desirous of corresponding with us may do so as openly or as secretly as their tastes or interests may seem to dictate.

Witness the Red Seal of the Council; and the Herald of the League is hereby directed to cause copies of this address to be printed, and to certify the same by attaching this official seal.

Political.

From Brother Cogswell.

MANSFIELD, O., May 6, 2875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

In your issue of the 22d April, Mr. Needles gave us a very important and valuable letter on politics, which accorded with my views; yet you will pardon me for an opinion on the subject, though not a politician.

In the first place, your valuable paper should not be the battle-ground of political controversy, at least not for the present, as I think the time has not come for that. This paper came before the public as contending with moral evils, and proposed to deal with them in their civil, judicial, and religious aspect. After our Convention here a warm and earnest Christian, but a staunch Democrat, called on me and said, "Bro. Cogswell, there is politics at the bottom of all this, it is to make a third party." I am well aware that will be the result, and praise God for it.

In the issue of March 11th, a political platform was presented which accords with many views here, and which should be brought out often in the Cynosure, thereby keeping it before the people, and in this way preparing the way for its adoption.

My reason for writing thus, is to keep the idea before the masses, that this was not the primary object of this movement. For I am assured, that if Masons are led to believe it was commenced for that object, under the guise of religious reform, its usefulness in a measure would be retarded. I wish to see both prosper, but it must be cautiously introduced or Masons will say, "They made Masonry a pretext to further politics."

Politics of a sound nature must spring from the advocacy of the first principles, (as an inevitable result), that we are assured of; but when we move, we wish to do so with effect, and to do this, it appears to me we are not yet ready. It requires some more of the invincible work of Bro. Stoddard, with the co-operation of the other agents, flanked by the whole brotherhood. Mr. Needles will please pardon my review of this very valuable letter.

HENRY COGSWELL.

Convention in Bremer County, Iowa.

The undersigned, citizens of Bremer Co., believing that secret societies are destructive of civil liberty and subversive of good government, and that a united action should be taken to counteract and destroy their evil designs, do hereby call for a convention of all friends of this cause to meet at 10 o'clock, Wednesday, June 2d, 1875, in the Presbyterian church in Waverly, Iowa, and continuing two days, for the discussion of secret societies and their tendency; and to take such measures as shall be deemed advisable. Able speakers are expected from abroad.

Reform News.

The Seventh Anniversary of the National Christian Association will be held in Library Hall in the City of Pittsburgh, Pa., June 8th to 10th, 1875.

—Attention should be given immediately to several items in connection with the Anniversary: 1, Get notices as far as possible into the local papers everywhere; 2, Be sure that all friendly churches and auxiliary associations appoint delegates, and if their expenses are to be paid have the money raised. Blank certificates for delegates will be sent on application.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard delivered a series of lectures in Streator, beginning on Friday evening last.

—George Heaton, a seceding Mason, spoke in the Free Methodist church in Salem, Jefferson county, Iowa, last week.

—J. T. Kiggins has appointments at Whitley, Wabash Co., Ind., this week. Read the announcement of work planned for Indiana. Let all take hold with the Ex. Committee and State Agent. Bro. Kiggins has removed to Portland, Jay Co., where he should hereafter be addressed.

—A letter from Bro. Hamlyn on the meetings and disturbance in West Bend, Wis., is published, although the main facts have appeared before. "By the mouth of two or three witnesses," etc.

—Bro. Needels of Sparta, Ohio, writes that Rev. John Levington has organized a campaign in Morrow Co., O., beginning at Chesterville, May 23d, then at Sparta on the 27th, at Marengo on the 30th, then at Morton's Corners; three days at each place. He will then go to the Pittsburgh Convention.

The Connecticut State Meeting—Letter from Bro. Stratton.

HARTFORD, Conn., Apr. 29, 1875.

MY DEAR PRESIDENT:—I am sitting in Central Hall, across from the State House, in the midst of an enthusiastic meeting of the convention of the Connecticut Christian Association opposed to secret societies. Leonidas and his band were not more true and brave than these; clear-eyed, and gifted with tongues and pens and generous hearts. I never have seen a company of men better fitted to open the revolution destined to sweep every one of the New England States than these. A grander centennial than Concord and Lexington celebrated the other day awaits them.

The meeting commands the respect of the city press, which declares that there is a strong religious feeling in the sessions, and that a good class of men compose the convention. We have drawn the fire of the enemy, found their ambush, though a running fire was kept up for half an hour while I was speaking, and participated in at the close of my address by D. P. Rathbun; though shrewdly framed, we were familiar with such sham breast works and they were routed amidst the cheers of the audience.

These Connecticut Anti-masons are in earnest. J. A. Conant, once a Wesleyan, and one of our and your faithful subscribers, gives not less than $100 for the support of this meeting. The expenses have been heavy. Brethren Barlow and Rathbun are both here, and have done splendidly. The former is now speaking. The Masons are out; but there are many friends and sympathizers who can be detected by the enthusiastic clapping which echoes occasionally throughout the hall.

Rev. A. L. Dearing, a popular and scholarly pastor of the M. E. church, was awakened by Bro. Levington's lectures, and has been investigating for six months, and proposes to act faithfully. The decided purpose of the brother to investigate has resulted in his being branded and injured by his own brethren. But his purpose is settled. He made a fine impression on the convention. Then there is Ellsworth (the secretary) Bacon, (Vice-president) Collins, Mitchelson, Russel, Beckwith, the Rhodeses, Loomis, Perry, Trenton, Williams, Murray, and others, with whom one could wish to live and die.

That old veteran, S. D. Greene, sits on the platform, and has made some new and excellent hits. Prof. Browne of New Hampshire, a new man, is also here and takes an active interest.

But I cannot detail to you the facts and incidents which have encouraged me so much. I send you herewith clippings from the Daily Courant and Daily Times of this city.

May the battle speed on. Yours truly, L. N. STRATTON.

The Courant's Report of the first day's meeting is as follows:

An association was organized in this city last February under the name of "The Connecticut Christian Assocation," for the purpose of exposing the evil effects of secret societies, but more particularly directed against the Masonic order. This association opened a two-days' convention in Central Hall yesterday morning. A small number was present at the opening of the meeting, but more dropped in gradually, till there was a fair audience. The moving spirit of the meeting seems to be a religious one—Masonry being opposed on this ground entirely. Mr. J. A. Conant of Willimantic, President; D. G. Ellsworth of Windsor, Secretary; and C. F. Collins of Windsor, Treasurer; and there is a Vice-president for every county in the State. Mr. Samuel Greene an old man of 87, is present at the convention. He was connected with Anti-masonic movement in New York many years ago at the time of Morgan's murder. As Mr. Greene is deaf, he stands by the side of each speaker in order to hear. . . .

After the reading of the secretary's report, Mr. Collins of Windsor, was called upon. He said Mr. John Levington lectured at Windsor, last winter, bringing out the Anti-masonic element. Mr. Collins said he was formerly an active member of the Methodist church, holding various offices, but had resigned, as he found the Masonic lodges controlled the church. When he opened his mouth against the diabolical system it stirred up animosity, and at the last official meeting of the board of trustees they left him out, as he supposed they would, though he had already made up his mind to withdraw.

Mr. Perry of Thompson, Windham county, next spoke, testifying to the iniquities of Freemasonry. He said a Master Mason once told him that he didn't believe in hanging, but he replied that he (the Mason) was under oath to do worse things than hanging. There are just two things in regard to Masonry—it is anti-Christian and anti-republican. No Mason can give the oath of a free man in a court room. His Masonic oath takes precedence of all others. This means something. A criminal—if a Mason—is cleared by his order.

Mr. Russell of Waterbury, spoke in reference to some Anti-mason tracts which had been circulated in a church there. It had been charged that it was done in a clandestine manner, but it was not so. There was nothing clandestine about it. Masonry had a strong hold in Waterbury, and presents a bold front and a bad one. It is hard to oppose, because so many of such fair character and known honesty have been connected with it so many years. The Anti-masons scattered a few tracts in the Methodist church, and they intend to scatter more.

The Rev. D. P. Ratabun of Lisbon Centre, N. Y., a former Mason, next spoke. He said: I am opposed to Masonry because it gives so much credit to the Bible and at the same time doesn't believe it to be the revealed word of God. In 1856, in a lodge in Ohio, a resolution acknowledging a belief in the Bible was rejected and referred to a committee, who reported that the resolution was all wrong, as Jews, Chinese, Mohammedans would be excluded under it, and there is no reason why they should not be made Masons. Masonry is not founded on the Bible. It is an institution founded upon tradition. Solomon, our first Grand Master, never heard of the New Testament Scriptures. The position which Christians assign to the Bible is very natural, but is not good Masonry. God never ordered men, like blind mules, to seek light in a lodge-room.

The Rev. Mr. Barlow of Syracuse, said the members of this convention are not working against Masonry in a spirit of spite, but in a spirit of love. No one can win a victory except in a spirit of love. We are not here because we hate Masons as men, but their principles and institutions. Masonry has been turned inside out; we know it thoroughly. Many say that no one can know it who is not a Mason himself; but hundreds have seceded, and its secrets have been turned inside out. After the murder of Morgan it was exposed throughout the country; 45,000 left the institution entirely, and entered their testimony against it. Mr. Samuel Greene here was one of the number who left. Masons have destroyed all the Anti-masons writings they could, but we are reviving them again. We have now eleven States organized. It is a Christian movement entirely. We initiate women in our order; they don't in Masons. We want them to join us; why should we exclude them? They go to heaven the same way we do. Seven years ago we started our national organ, the Christian Cynosure, published in Chicago. It has 5,000 subscribers. There are some other religious papers which speak out on this subject, so that we have papers reaching nearly 100,000 families a week, besides books and tracts. They say we are only driving men into the lodge, but all I have to say of those who are driven into such a place, that that is the place for them. But while they are opening the front door and taking in new members, the back door opens and lets out a better class.

EFFINGHAM, Ill., May 3, 1875.

DEAR BRO. K:—I left home April 22d, and on reaching Amboy in the evening found a good audience in the United Brethren church which amidst abounding opposition is holding up the light of a pure Christianity. On the two following evenings the house was well filled, but none of the ministers of the place were at any time present except those connected with the U. B. church. On the last evening at the close of my lecture Bro. Starks of Lee Center, gave his experience as a seceding Mason. Many persons who knew him well were convinced by his testimony, though they had not been by my arguments.

I enjoyed the hospitalities of Bro. H., and Rev. M. Lewis, who have been specially active in this reform. On the Sabbath I preached in the U. B. church to an interesting congregation. On Monday and Tuesday evenings I spoke to good audiences in the Union church in Eldena. An extensive revival had prepared the way for a candid reception of the truth, and I trust that some young men will be saved to Christ, and from the influences of the lodge.

From here I took passage at three o'clock A. M. for Paxton, Ford Co. On reaching Amboy I had the agreeable surprise of meeting Bro. Stoddard, who is hard at work on the Carpenter donation fund, with cheering hopes of success. On reaching Paxton on the evening of the 28th, I found my lectures announced for the evenings of the 30th and May 1st, and accordingly visited Rankin, Loda and Ludlow, and made arrangements for future work.

We had fair audiences at Paxton, with a fair proportion of Masons. Rev. Geo. Schlosser, ex-Mayor of Paxton, presided at our first meeting, and Rev. Wm. M. Ritchie, pastor of the United Presbyterian church manifested, not by words alone, his warm interest in this cause. Rev. Wm. Blanchard, brother of the President, is an earnest and faithful worker, nor should I forget Dea. S. P. Bushnell, who shows his faith by his works. The young men connected with the Swedish College attended in a body, and manifested a warm interest, buying nearly all my books. Some high Masons, whose breath was full of whiskey, made themselves quite conspicuous on Saturday evening, but did not seriously disturb us.

On Sabbath morning I walked nine miles to Rankin, over a very muddy road and arrived quite weary, in time to attend service in the United Presbyterian church. By invitation of the pastor I spoke in the evening to a full, and in the main, attentive audience. The M. E. minister gave notice of my meeting expressing a hope that his people would not attend, and to prevent this he appointed services in his own church, but no services were held there, and he and his people were present at my lecture. He told me he was not a Mason, but should be at the earliest opportunity; that nearly all good men were Masons, and that Pres. Finney and other seceders were liars. But on the other hand a young man who has recently joined the Rankin lodge was glad to buy Morgan's Expose in order to be better posted in lodge work.

From here I go to Crawford county to spend a week and then stop on my return at other points on the Central railroad. Yours for Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

BRO. KELLOGG:—Seeing a notice in the Cynosure from brother Elzea in regard to lectures, I wrote, and he came at my house on the 10th of April. I secured the use of the Baptist church, and he gave his first lecture there on the evening of the 12th to a crowded house, and every thing went off well. Expecting the audience would be much larger the next evening, I got the use of the court-house and that was crowded, and a goodly number of Masons, Odd-fellows, grangers, and Good-Templars were out. As Bro. Elzea felt somewhat pleased with the good behavior of the past evening, he went into the work in good earnest, and stirred up the blood of the secret parties, and roused quite an earnest spirit in the other part of the audience; everything went well. We got the court-house for the third lecture, and Bro. Elzea opened his lecture with singing and prayer as usual. He had not got fairly started when up rose a Mason and asked the speaker if he was a Mason or not, and a great many insisted on an answer. Bro. Elzea did not gratify the gentlemen, but went on showing that Masonry was the same as it was in Morgan's time, and how the Masons murdered Morgan. But that, with other things spoken in previous lectures, was too much for the mystic tie; and as they had prepared themselves through the day, they now commenced their disturbance. They choose a chairman and two secretaries, and commenced interrupting the speaker. Bro. Elzea held the floor for some time, until he saw it was useless; he told them he saw that their object was to break up the meeting, but he gave them to understand that they had done more for the anti-secret cause than he could if he had spoken for two hours. A motion was put by Bro. Holt that we quietly withdraw from the court-house, which was gladly accepted by the Masons. So much for the first chapter.

The anti-secret friends, not willing to give up the field to the Masons so easily, secured the use of a school-house three miles from the Bend, and held three good lectures in it. The first and second were given to a full house, and the third to a crowded house. The Masons hired a "bus" and drove up from the Bend designing to break up or stop the lecture, but they failed this time. The "anti" spirit was too strong for them. One Mason, a Doctor, got up to say something, but Bro. Elzea talked him down. We think Bro. Elzea is just the man for the work, as he is not easily bluffed off and always ready for discussion. We are much pleased with him.

Yours truly, WM. HAMLYN.

Anti-Grange Work in Crawford County, Ohio.

BUCYRUS, O., Apr. 29 1845.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

I wish to say that Rev. D. S. Caldwell and myself are still stirring at the grangers. They have made only one attempt to reply and then they chased the women from the house. . . . The grangers here got a box of garden seeds and are doing a large business selling the seed to grangers at five cents a paper and to outsiders at eight cents, making 60 per cent profit. There is one very poor family in the neighborhood. They sold to them for six cents. Some of the grangers are worth $10,000, they got their seed at the cheaper rate. This poor man cannot join the grange; he has not the money to pay the $5 initiation fee. What has become of the Golden Rule? Not many nights ago I heard an old granger abuse Bro Caldwell for preaching the truth. Liberty Grange got on a bad spell, and they thought they wanted Caldwell to speak before them on the question of secrecy. But after a while they changed their minds. The following is their note of invitation:

LIBERTY GRANGE, No. 1822, March 4, 1075.

To the Rev. D. S. Caldwell:

At a meeting of this grange held this 4th day of March, the following resolution was adopted, viz: "Resolved, That this grange extend to the Reverend Caldwell an invitation to deliver a lecture in Liberty Hall, in Liberty township, on secret societies."

A. R. BRIGGS, Master.
John Cox, Sec'y pro tem.

P. S.—If you favor us with a lecture, the meeting will be at the Advent church, near Parcher's Corners.

J. C.

When Mr. Caldwell received this letter the evenings of the 22d and 23d of March were set for himself and Mr. Parks to accept their invitation, but when the evening arrived Mr Caldwell was sick, and Mr. Parks started alone to fill the engagement; but, reaching Bucyrus, it was so stormy he thought the people would, of course, give up all thoughts of the lecture, so he sent word by Mr. Wingart, postponing the engagement until some future evening, when Mr. Caldwell could also attend.

On the 14th, Mr. Caldwell sent a letter agreeing to be present on the 20th and 21st, to which the following answer was received:

BUCYRUS, O., April 16, 1875.

MR. D. S. CALDWELL—Dear Sir: Your note has come to hand. Would say that we had set a time for you to lecture and kill all secret societies, but you did not come to time, therefore we are all alive yet, so I shall not try again to get a church for your lecture.

Yours with respect,

A. R. BRIGGS.

P. S.—I am not in the habit of receiving my letters in the care J. N. McCurdy.

On the evening of the 20th, Messrs. Caldwell and Parks were present at the Advent church, near Parcher's Corners, and waited until eight o'clock, and no one being present, nor the church even lit up, they returned home.

On the evening of the 26th I spoke in the Albright School-house, two miles east of Bucyrus. The grangers kept their peace. My subject, "Grange Pretention." Rev. D. S. Caldwell had an appointment for Tuesday night.

G. W. PARK.

Anti-masonry in South Creek, Pa.

Last summer, Rev. John Levington gave a number of telling lectures on secret societies, and now, April 6th and 7th., Rev. D. P. Rathbun has given two lectures on the same subject; first at Gillet's, the second at Fassett's in the town of South Creek. The first lecture the house was full. The speaker had just begun his lecture when disturbance was commenced, and continued until a peace-officer present demanded order. Among the important points made by the speaker we produce the following:—That Masonry teaches a religion because it has altars, priests, high priests, prayers, &c., and claims to "fit men for heaven," in fact to do "all that the soul of man requires. Second, that it is a false religion, because it teaches salvation in a way different from the Bible. Third, Masonry is antagonistic to free government. Other points were made, after which the speaker gave some of his experience in Masonry. He showed that a bad oath is better broken than kept. He gave some of the ceremonies and oaths of the three first degrees. The lecturer produced a profound sensation, and we think good will result from it.

The second lecture was similar to the first, because so requested. Yet many new points were made. There was much disturbance, so much so that the peace officer was required to keep order. The speaknr gave an account of the Morgan times, and of personal abuse that himself and others have suffered. When he gave the ceremonies and oaths of the first three degrees, some of the craft became excited and lost their "jewel," "a silent tongue." One attempted to reply, but before he got through, virtually acknowledged that what had been said was true.—S. Bedford in the Wesleyan.

Correspondence.

Listen, Ministers!

POMEROY, O.

I assume the position that the principle which justifies the existence of Masonry in the churches, is morally wrong, or, in other words, it is a sin. The principle, I contend, aside from all circumstances, is evil, and that continually! No hand can sanctify it, no circumstances can change it from bad to good. It is a reprobate; too bad to be converted, not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. If any circumstances could justify the right of Masonry to exist in either church or state then we have only to change some of those circumstances with which Masonry is connected, and it becomes universally right, so that in that case the sin would be in the circumstances.

But, say the good clergy, we must keep quiet on this subject, Anti-masonic discussion is not conducive to the peace of the church. Suppose this were admitted, are there no interests to be consulted beside the peace of the church? It may not, perhaps, be always best, that the church be at peace. There may be "ease in Zion," connected with a "wedge of gold and a Babylonish garment." The church has an unholy alliance with Masonry; she ought not therefore, to give herself any peace till she cleanses the skirts of her garments from "blood guiltiness!" Shall the dearest interests of undying millions be sacrificed on the altar of the peace of the church, when the nation is bleeding at every pore from the dire effects of this hydra-headed monster?

But the church will be divided! What will divide it? The church is built upon a rock, and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. If, therefore, Masonry is from beneath, of which I have not the least doubt, the church is safe; for the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. But keep cool, say the pious clergy, for fear of offending brothers A. and B. who are wealthy and influential men in the church. We will not listen to these fanatics who are blinded by prejudice and working in the dark. Thus they talk. But ah! let me say to you, kind sirs, blind though we be, aye, blind as Samson in the temple of Dagon, like him, if we can do no more, we will grope our way along, feeling for the pillars of that temple which has been consecrated to the bloody rites of the Moloch Masonry; grasping their base we will bend forward, nerved by the omnipotence of truth, and upheave the entire fabric, whose undistinguishable ruins shall mark the spot where our grandest moral victory was proudly won.

Yours for a just cause.

MR. EDITOR:—Perhaps you would like to know how the opposition to the power of darkness prospers here in the south-west. I am traveling as a missionary for the United Brethren church, and am in full sympathy with her rules and doctrine. When I began to preach here there was no church in this section, but our principles were accepted by many honest hearts. Those who were wearing the chains of darkness bound to them by Masonic oaths, soon began to cry perjury, lies, etc., and tried to frighten me by threatening to assault me, but I headed them not. They have not dared to make any personal assaults or remonstrance until last Sabbath, when I took occasion acccording to our church rules to read our law on secrecy, one of the worshipers of the goddess Fides, also a Mason, got up in the congregation and forbid my proceeding, as I was in a grange hall. I had to quit, but told them to make an appointment in the grove and in June I would give them a lecture exposing the serpent to their gaze. Heretofore I have only opposed them as a church policy, but now I have declared war upon the Prince of darkness. I shall need your excellent paper and what other documents you can furnish.

Yours truly, M. H. SLY.

Morgan's Book Certified.

MANSFIELD, O., April 30, 1875.

Editor of the Cynosure:

In your issue of the 22d of April a brother H. I. Limbocker requested that myself with others give him, or the public at large, satisfactory assurance that the penalties attached to the first three degrees in Masonry are correct, as given by Morgan and others.

I beg to say I never saw Morgan's statement until since making my recantation in February, but have examined those oaths, and find them substantially correct.

I would observe (here) that the wording of the Masonic ritual varies at different periods, and in different States, in the grammatical use of words, etc., which is governed by the different grand lecturers of each State, but the essential meaning is the same everywhere. It is the duty of the grand lecturer to visit the lodges wherever he may be called, and drill the officers in the uses of Masonic language, as all systems will in time become corrupt. This may in some part account for these Masons saying, "You know nothing about it."

I was raised to the "sublime degree" of Master Mason (as termed by the fraternity) the last of October. On December 27th occurred the annual election of officers. As I had a good voice and other qualifications, as they thought, I was elected Senior Warden, or second officer in the lodge, over all other aspirants. I objected to taking it, but was overruled by the ring existing that lodge, and filled the chair for two years. Of course, I had to qualify myself at once to fill this important station. The duty devolved on me to give the obligations, whenever the Master requested me, and in his absence to act as Master.

But to be brief, as that is the life of all correspondence, I give you the penalties as used by myself, in one of the oldest and most respectable lodges in New York State, and which could boast of having had one Grand Master. And now to the question.

1. The Entered Apprentice penalty. After the obligation is given closes as follows: "To all of which I do most solemnly and sincerely promise and swear without the least equivocation, menial reservation, or self-evasion of mind in me whatever. Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tongue torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows in twenty-four hours, should I knowingly or wilfully violate this my solemn obligation of Entered Apprentice. So help me God and keep me steadfast in the due performance of the same."

2. Fellow craft penalty: Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my left breast torn open, and my heart and vitals taken from thence, thrown over my left shoulder and carried to the valley of Jehosaphat, there to become a prey to the wild beasts of the field and vultures of the air, if ever I should prove wilfully guilty of violating any part of this my oath or obligation of a Fellow Craft Mason."

3. Master Mason's penalty: "To all of which I do most solemnly promise and swear, with a fixed and steady purpose of mind in me to keep and perform the same. Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my body severed in two in the midst, and divided to the North and South, my bowels burnt to ashes, scattered to the four winds of heaven; that there might not remain the least track, trace, or remembrance among men and Masons of so vile and perjured a wretch as I should be, were I ever to prove wilfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a Master Mason. So help me God, and keep me steadfast to do, and perform the same." HENRY COGSWELL.

MASON CITY, Ia., April 26, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BRO.—In a late number of your paper I am requested, in connection with others, to tell over my own signature whether or not the penalties of the first three degrees of Freemasonry as administered, in my experience, are the some as in Morgan's exposure. I answer, Yes, word for word; and the exposures of others in the higher degrees are correct as far as I have gone; that is, to the seventh or Royal Arch degree. One of the charges I bring against the fraternity is the crime of obtaining money under false pretenses, by their falsehoods in denying these exposures, and I have heard men say when they had gone through those degrees that they knew just as well what was going to be done before as afterwards. JAMES HANKINS.

The Symbolism of Rome and the Lodge.

Editor of the Christian Cynosure:

In an article on this caricature in Harper's Magazine for March, the writer quotes from a catechism coming down from the Middle Ages and still taught to children in western France. The catechism turns upon the sacred character of that lowly animal, the ass. Aside from the great moral lesson inculcated, it seems to me every intelligent reader must admit that it might well be used as a Masonic lecture. Permit me through the columns of the Cynosure to recommend it to the consideration of the craft. I quote:

Priest.—"What signify the two ears of the ass?"

Child.—"The two ears of the ass signify the two great patron saints of our city."

Priest.—"What signifies the head of the ass?"

Child.—"The head of the ass signifies the great bell and the halter; the clapper of the great bell which is in the tower of the cathedral of the patron saints of our city."

Priest.—"What signifies the ass's mouth?"

Child.—"The ass's mouth signifies the great door of the cathedral of the patron saints of our city."

Priest.—"What signifiy the four feet of the ass?"

Child.—"The four feet of the ass signify the four great pillars of the cathedral of the patron saints of our city."

Priest.—"What signifies the paunch of the ass?"

Child.—"The paunch of the ass signifies the great chest wherein Christians put their offerings to the patron saints of our cathedral."

Priest.—"What signifies the tail of the ass?"

Child.—"The tail of the ass signifies the holy-water brush of the good dean of the cathedral of the patron saints of our city."

The priest does not stop at the tail, but pursues the symbolism with a simplicity and innocence which do not bear translating into our blunt English words.

Now, Mr. Editor, how much better are the stale platitudes taught in the lectures of speculative Freemasonry, than the utter nonsense contained in the above. W. H. PARKER.

OUR MAIL.

John D. Kerr, Worthington, Pa., writes:

"The Masons are plenty out here, and there are very few to oppose them. All the churches in this neighborhood have Masons in full communion, except the United Presbyterians."

P. Taylor, Freedom, Ill., writes:

"God bless you and the cause you represent."

Geo. W. Champ, VanBuren, Ind., writes:

"I hope to do something for the Publishing House this season. Would like to see from time to time a report in the Cynosure of what is being done in that direction. May God bless and prosper those in the van of our noble reform."

D. L. Jones, Hawkeye, Neb., writes:

"I have been quite out of health and have not been able to do much in regard to circulating your paper, but shall endeavor to do so as soon as I can; for it speaks my sentiments better than I can write them. I have given several copies to some of the prominent members of the grange and Sons of Temperance. One good Methodist brother and sister think the paper must be wrong; for if secret societies were not a good thing, so many of their beloved preachers would not belong to them."

A. Mayn, Stout's City, O., writes:

"I have lectured twice in this county, and lecture again to-night (April 27th)." We are glad to hear reports of lectures delivered.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrus, Lenox, O., writes: We love the Cynosure. We have been constant readers of the same for a year; and scatter the papers and Honeywell's tracts broadcast. We also keep all the Anti-masonic books we can get, in circulation, and do a good deal of talking. Have waked up the people considerable. We will not—nay, cannot fellowship Masonry in the church. . . There are a good many Anti-masons about here; also, some Masons. We hope in the course of a few months to send a donation for that Publishing House. . . Onward to victory, and may God bless you."

James Young, Council Bluffs, Ia., writes:

"I will do what I can to help on the blessed cause."

Leander Fowler, Brookfield, Vt., writes:

Dear Cynosure: I like you very much and have done the best I could for you, by introducing you to some extent, together with some books and tracts. Lately, I have been out and searched Jerusalem through all the streets thereof to see if I could find a man . . that seeketh the truth. (See Jeremiah 5th Chap., 1st ver.) . . . The fact is there are but few families but some of its members belong to one or more secret societies, and a man's foes are they of his own house."

We are authorized to thank you for your efforts in behalf of the Cynosure; and our faith is strong that God will use such efforts as you have been putting forth for the overthrow of the works of darkness. "Be of good courage."

Rev. A. Musselman, Sacramento City, Cal., writes:

"I have a very hard field to work in, a great deal of opposition. I am distributing papers, and also many tracts, gratuitously; and find many people even afraid to read them. But I am not discouraged, for the cause is a good one. We intend to try to organize a State Association immediately after the United Brethren Conference of California."

Another friend in California writes that the grangers are having trouble among themselves, and that those opposed to secret societies in that State should make a general rally. If the State is organized as proposed on May 10th, we hope that its work will be vigorously prosecuted.

Have you found your place? Then stick to it. Work there though it be in the humblest corner of the most out-of-the way vineyard. An idle man in the church is a monster. And you cannot give a cup of Gospel water to a beggar's child without receiving Christ's smile in return for it. "Neglect not the gift that is in thee," and whatever thou doest for the Lord, "do it heartily."

Lesson for May 23, 1875.—The Child Samuel.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Samuel iii. 1-10; Commit 1-10; Primary Verse, 10.

1 And the child Samuel ministered unto the Lord before Eli. And the word of the Lord was precious in those days; there was no open vision.

2 And it came to pass at that time, when Eli was laid down in his place, and his eyes began to wax dim, that he could not see;

3 And ere the lamp of God went out in the temple of the Lord, where the ark of God was, and Samuel was laid down to sleep;

4 That the Lord called Samuel: and he answered, Here am I.

5 And he ran unto Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou callest me. And he said, I called not; lie down again. And he went and lay down.

6 And the Lord called yet again, Samuel. And Samuel arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And he answered, I called not, my son; lie down again.

7 Now Samuel did not yet know the Lord, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him.

8 And the Lord called Samuel again the third time. And he arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I; for thou didst call me. And Eli perceived that the Lord had called the child.

9 Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down: and it shall be, if he call thee that thou shalt say, Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went and lay down in his place.

10 And the Lord came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak; for thy servant heareth.

3.—The more in favor we are with God the more in favor we will be with men. For then the spirit of God in us will attract men—the spirit of Him who said of himself: "And I if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me." Prov. 3: 3, 4; Is. 42: 1; John 12: 26; Rom. 14: 17, 18; 16: 17.

4.—Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice and at mine offering? God is jealous of his ordinances. He looks not at the number of our observances but at the spirit of them. Lev. 22: 19–21; 1 Sam. 15: 22; Ps. 4: 5; 51: 17–19; Is. 1: 13, 16, 17; Mal. 3: 3; Rom 12: 1; 1 Pet. 2: 5.

5.—Esau and Eli—representatives of the class who find no place of repentance though they seek it carefully with tears. There may be for us a "Too late." Prov. 1: 28, 29; Is. 1: 15; Matt. 25: 1–13; Luke 13; 24, 25; John 8: 21; Rev. 16: 15; 22: 11; Luke 21: 34–36.

6.—A faith that lives only in sunshine is worthless. It is the dark days that test it and show whether or not it is good for anything. 2 K. 20: 16–19; Job. 1: 21; 2: 10; Ps. 39: 9; John 18: 11; Heb. 12: 9; Jas. 5: 10, 11; 1 Pet. 4: 19.—Nat'l. S. S. Teacher.

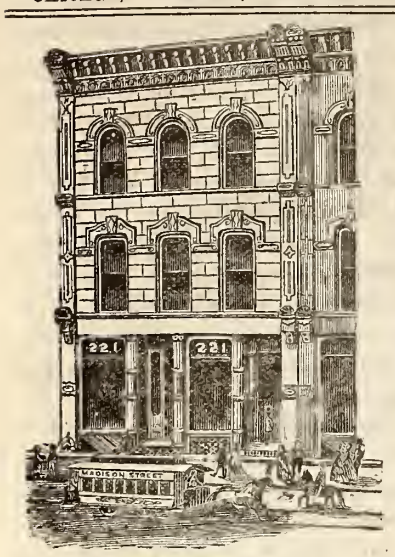
The atmosphere of the class is quite as important as the amount of truth that is brought in by the teacher. Sunshine gives the children appetite. They will take pains to understand and digest the words of the teacher, because it is natural for them to do so. They can hardly help it. By sunshiny, I do not mean a smiling teacher, especially one of those smirks, who conceive that their chief duty is palaver. The young understand these things by instinct. So much the other way may it be, that I think the most sunshiny teacher of my boyhood was the homeliest and most sedate of all who ever instructed me. But some how his soul shone. And that may be just the word we want, soul-shine. He was gentle, sure, true, firm, appreciative, and we loved him; although we never saw him smile. Old Father Camp lived above the clouds, where the sun is constant, although it is a little cool up there. Soul-shining comes to us in very curious ways. I have had it burst out from a field daisy or a dandelion, when handed to me by some obscure little child of poverty. It used to lighten up the whole church, when three-year old Roddy handed me a flower regularly plucked from his wonderful little pansy bed. A teacher that has this kind of shine knows how to give it, and it will always warm up and vitalize the class. But one who simply carries truth and law, and sows it, broad-cast and drilled, in a senseless way, might as well plant corn in his cellar.—S. S. World.

The Advantages of Freemasonry.

[From "The Square."]

In spite of all which can be said of Masonry by its opponents, singularly enough but proves its great utility to society. The arguments against the institution are generally founded upon that long exploded humbug, the abduction of Morgan by the fraternity, and have long since ceased to attract the attention of sensible people. That Masonry is of great advantage to the brethren, our opponents unite in asserting; since they claim that it was through Masonic judges, Masonic juries and Masonic everybody, that the perpetrators of the outrage escaped. Taking their word for it, Masonry is certainly not a bad institution to belong to, since it affords such complete security to its devotees; and what other institution, on their own showing, could do this? Masonry, however, is no such refuge for rogues, as the difficulty attending becoming a Mason clearly shows. No one is admitted save that he has a clear record; and a secret ballot has to be had before he can obtain a foothold into the institution.

Step by step the candidate advances, and at each successive round, as he ascends the Masonic ladder, he is met by this remorseless test, by which he must stand or fall. He becomes a Mason, and what is he taught? Morality and benevolence; to reverence the name of God, and to restrain the appetites and passions; and in return for his pledges of loyalty to the craft, he receives the benefits of his profession.



Admitted to the lodge he finds himself in the midst of a band of brothers, by every one of whom he is esteemed and guarded; they do not stop him at the lodge door to inquire his opinions upon the political aspect before they bid him enter; neither is it the Tyler's duty to ascertain his religious belief previous to announcing his presence to the brothers; it is all summed up in the brief, but how expressive, "Bro. A. is in waiting," and Bro. A. is met upon the level by all present.

The brother leaves home, and in every portion of this great country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in the crowded cities or upon the boundless prairies, where the cabin of the emigrant is the solitary reminder of civilization, he finds a brother. Perhaps the brother is of a different nationality, and does not understand his comrade's tongue; still they talk, Masonically, and in the universal language of the craft thoroughly comprehend each other's meaning. The brother travels, and visits every part of the habitable globe; and in every clime he meets with some one who is glad to see him, and who exerts himself to prove the esteem in which he holds his brother. Wherever he goes it is the same old story; he has but to make himself known, even though he never opens his mouth, and the great advantage of being a Mason becomes at once evident. That Masonry does not interfere with the duty which we owe to our country, has been too clearly demonstrated to need any additional testimony here; the great watch-word of the craft is, Universality. It presents the only platform upon which all nations may unite in common; may join without feeling outraged; and is the only subject upon which all may converse without dispute. In the Masonic lodge the world has the extraordinary spectacle of all nations united in prayer. The Christian, Turk, and Jew all joining in one solemn petition for the blessing of the Great Architect of the Universe upon all mankind. Here are buried all animosities, all prejudices; here vanish all shades of difference between man and man, and naught but brotherly love prevails.

This is the inestimable privilege of being a Mason; of having a friend at every hand, in both palace and cabin, on sea or on shore, and this is what makes Masonry so distasteful to the ignorant few. We read that the chief accusation against St. Paul, when he was arrested for preaching was, "that he belonged to a sect called Nazarenes, we know that everywhere it is spoken against," and the opposition to the fraternity flows from the same corrupt source: either ignorance or prejudice. And our enemies are ever ready to grasp at a straw in order to excite popular attention, and feel highly incensed that people should have opinions adverse to theirs, or any opinion at all. Still all their endeavors thus far have failed to show but one thing, the immense advantages of Masonry to the craft.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1875.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and the Association hopes to raise this sum by June 10th next; and $20.000 as soon thereafter as possible to secure the ownership. Send on contributions.

THE SINEWS OF WAR.

The conflict at present existing between secret societies and Christianity, will never close until one or the other is destroyed. It is only a part of that great war which is waged by Satan and his agents against Christ and his kingdom. We are in danger of underestimating the importance of our own work. When we see tailors, blacksmiths, ministers, day-laborers, lawyers and doctors dubbing themselves "Sons of Light," "High Priests," "Sublime Princes," "Grand Sovereigns," etc., etc., the matter looks too silly to cause special alarm. As we look further, however, and find these men to be almost always strangers to the prayer-room, and not unfrequently deniers of the Bible and our Lord Jesus Christ while they profess to go, at death, to the "Grand Lodge above;" as we look further and find them seeking and obtaining offices, little and large, which are used for the "benefit of the craft," we can understand why these orders have the vast power that they exercise over men. Selfishness is their tap root, vanity is their most prominent feature, despotism is their principle in government, and infidelity their religion. Thus they appeal to all that is base in man; and while men are selfish, vain, tyrannical and at enemity with God, secret societies of some sort will exist.

The work then that we have in hand is no other than to expose and overthrow the present secret organizations, strong in number, in money, in the fears of their enemies and the aid which the god of this world gives to all rivals of the Christian church. But this work is the least that we have to do. While the selfishness and the atheism that make these societies continue to exist, no special advantage would be gained by their overthrow. What we desire to do is not only to overthrow these bulwarks of Satan's cause, but to establish in their stead the kingdom of Christ whom we strive to serve. Hence our name, "The National Christian Association."

Well, says some one, that is the object of the Christian churches and if your object is the same, you are rivals of the church. We answer, the work which we seek to accomplish is the work of the churches, and as we who are striving especially to advance it are connected with different churches, we think it well while maintaining our own organizations to meet at times and join our forces for an assault on that part of Satan's host which seems most to need resistance.

HOW CAN THIS BE DONE?

When Moody went into London, the friends of his work raised seventy-five thousand dollars to carry on the movement. Why so? London is full of churches. It was because if they were to have a Union effort they must have special places for meeting, and various expenses which would have been unnecessary for an effort of another kind. If we are to have a successful enterprise we must open our hearts and purses. The press must be used without limit, meetings must be held in every village and hamlet throughout our country. If we wish to be heard we must speak; and if we speak, we shall be heard. Our Cynosure must have one hundred subscribers where it now has ten. Local papers devoted to a full discussion of this subject must be multiplied. Lecturers must be commissioned and sent into the field yet more abundantly. Tracts must be scattered—

"Thick as autumnal leaves in Valambrosa."

When thus God's truth respecting these unfruitful works of darkness has free course, it will run and be glorified. He only commands men to speak his truth and takes care of the result himself.

WHAT IS THE FIRST STEP?

The first step is to pay the present obligations of the society and then secure the Carpenter Donation. The Association is now owing for salaries and printing only $125, exclusive of unsettled accounts. Let our friends, who believe in and favor the great work we are doing, send in this sum within a week. Then let us raise the thirty thousand dollars required to secure the deed of a building that has rented for five thousand dollars per year. When this great work has been accomplished, let us continue our exertions until, by the favor of our Heavenly Father, Catholicism, Masonry, and all other systems of despotism and idolatry have gone to join the great host of evils that have already fallen beneath the arm of Immanuel.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC QUESTION.

The Puritans who settled New England and gave their independent church government to townships and town-meetings, which were the units of the Republic, were the only persons except perhaps the Covenanters, who knew how to deal with popery. They run a line through human society, placing New Testament religion on one side and all human religious inventions on the other; and came out from, and condemned as "unlawful" every ceremony, rite, government and doctrine not found in the Word of God, as belonging to the "god of this world." The early histories of New England and the later historians of the early times, as Palfrey, show that the first voting masses in the Colonies abhorred Christ mass and every festival and principle of religious fiction, as containing the seeds of the system from which they fled. Where the masses are imbued with this spirit, popery cannot flourish. It did not flourish here, till in 1733 the institution of Freemasonry, which contains all the elements which compose popery, viz., despotism, lying legends, sham rites and symbols, and, generally, salvation by ceremonies, gained footing in Massachusetts.

Phillip, father of Alexander, said he could take any city into which he could introduce an ass-load of gold. Popery can take any country in whose religion it can insert a set of sham ceremonies. It will, in the end, leaven the whole lump of society. It has nearly obscured all the truth on which human freedom rests. See how freedom's watch-dogs guard her in New York. An Archbishop is made a Cardinal. The President of the United States and his Cabinet, Governor Tilden and staff, judges and dignitaries are invited. Police are obsequious. Streets blocked and chained up, and General Clap-trap commands for the day. The Cardinal makes a lying speech in praise of the Republic which his master, the Pope, did all he could to destroy, by recognizing the Confederacy-Slavery Empire; and all that our fathers fled from, was enacted in the abused name of religion. On this national choke-damp, hear the New York press.

The Tribune abjectly compliments the pageant thus:

"With a central dignitary as its standard-bearer and guiding impulse, the organization of that church is now complete; its connection with Rome becomes closer; it takes a bolder attitude among the religious bodies; and, as a natural consequence, the zeal of its members is likely to increase. Their new leader is a prudent man. That is much to be thankful for."

And, after thus hailing what every patriot views with concern, even the closer connection with Rome, the Tribune closes with the swagger: "We are not of those timid souls who dread danger to our political institutions from this consolidation of the Catholic population."

Next comes the Herald thus:

"If Catholicism in America could repeat the history of Catholicism in Europe, in the period when its temporal power reached the climax, the creation of a Roman Catholic Cardinal might be regarded as a danger. But there is no possibility of this evil. The Catholics are probably not one-eighth of our population, and so long as the Presbyterians fail in their favorite scheme to place "God in the Constitution," we may hope that a union of church and state in this country will be impossible. Interference with the absolute right of conscience in religious affairs, no matter to what extremes the freedom of belief may go, must be resisted, from whatever quarter it comes. But we cannot find any menace to our free constitution and non-religious and independent political institutions in the elevation of the Archbishop of New York to the Cardinalship."

The malice of this sheet toward Christianity is as manifest as its fawning sycophancy to its Romish counterfeit.

The World shows some lingerings of American feeling and sentiment, thus:

"Yesterday's ceremony may, however, to some of those who witnessed it, have suggested by one of its most characteristic features a curious train of thought. This was the presence at the high altar, with drawn sword, arrayed in the uniform of the Guardia Nobile, as guardian of the berretta, of Count Marefoschi. It was a page of the aristocratic Old World, of Rome in the days of the temporal power, bound up in the volume of American life. That in the country of the Pilgrims and the Puritans the Catholic religion should have made such progress as to merit this substantial token of the Papal favor, accompanied by a display so elaborate, while novel in itself, recalls the yet more striking possibility that the Supreme Pontiff, when contemplating the event of his departure from the immemorial seat of the Papacy because of the downfall of the temporal power, might meditate a removal to the country whose public opinions and institutions are most unequivocally opposed to any union of church and state."

Now will the readers of the Cynosure consider the forces here confronting each other, viz., the Romish church, run by Jesuits, and the American press in its New York city representatives, and say, upon the principles of rational common sense, whether the sure and certain result must not be the sinking of American principles and setting up those of Rome?

Nor is the prospect in Europe much better. The ideas represented by Gladstone and Bismarck have been pitted against Romanism ever since the Reformation. And since the middle of the 16th century the Reformation from popery has not advanced one step in Europe. The Christianity of Gladstone and Bismarck is state-church Christianity; and state-churchism is little better than popery. The state means force; and Napoleon said truly, "Physical force settles nothing." The Scottish Covenant, signed and sealed with blood; the protest of the Pilgrim Puritans ratified by their flight to the American wilderness,——we must come back to the spirit and principle of these, if we would save all that is truly American from the power symbolized by the scarlet beast, the red dragon, or the red hat. All that state-church Christianity can do has been tried. Wickliffe made England Lollard; Henry VIII. made it Protestant; and Cromwell made it free, And Guy Fawkes and his gun-powder plot made popery so odious, that Romanists could not hold office in England, or insult the dead by a heathen consecration of a burial place. Across the channel, Luther took the mitre from the Pope, and placed it on the head of the civil magistrate, and the result is that Great Britain and Germany have sent and are sending here papists enough, with the help of infidels, who are the children of popery, to assail our national schools and threaten our national life.

The trouble is, Bismarck and Gladstone have not found the seam. The true issue is between the religion which worships and the ceremonies which ignore Christ. This is the issue tendered by the Cynosure and "The National Christian Association." This doctrine will eject popery as the doctrine of "Immediate Abolition" ejected slavery. We are to "fight it out on this line." We must teach it, preach it, pray it, practice it, vote it, and live it; and our Great Captain will go forth "conquering and to conquer," because "they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful."

COME-OUTISM—MR. EDWARD RONAYNE.

"The bird that hath been limed in a bush
With fearful heart misdoubteth every bush."
—SHAKSPEARE.

William T. Allen was an early Abolitionist. He has, for near forty years, been a Come-outer, a spirit-worshipper, and a what-not. He was the son of a Doctor of Divinity in Alabama; came to Lane Seminary, Ohio; became an Abolitionist; was one of the gentlest and sweetest-spirited of men; and went on, as an orthodox Christian, till he settled in Peoria as pastor of Mr. Pettengill's church.

But, forgetting that Christ told the people to go to meeting though wicked scribes and Pharisees were the teachers; and stung by persecution for his justice to slaves by those who are now boasting Abolitionists, he came to "misdoubt" every religionist but himself. This was an error, even in the prophet Elijah; and there was a section of the finest minds and truest hearts that ever lived, who went off as he did, and, "concerning the faith made shipwreck." Such is the frail nature of frail man when left to himself. He comes—

"To trust in everything or doubt of all."

We are not without anxiety respecting our new and really remarkable friend, MR. EDWARD RONAYNE, who now, at first under his Masonic title, but last week under his own name, is writing for the Cynosure. He is an Irishman; of course, eloquent; born in South Ireland; a Papist; a Protestant Episcopalian; a Freemason in Quebec; and, in Chicago, a teacher and property-holder and a worshipper with Methodists, till disgusted with their Masonic preachers. He met the Cynosure while he was Master of Keystone Lodge; and now he is an Anti-masonic lecturer and writer for the Cynosure.

This running sketch of Mr. Ronayne will give our readers a lively interest in his articles. They would be more interested in the man himself; and, if unlike Allan, Weld, Stanton, McKim, Oliver Johnson, and a galaxy of early abolitionists, Mr. Ronayne shall not cut loose from God by cutting loose from his people (and God has a people who celebrate Christ's death) he may yet become "mighty through God to the pulling down of these strongholds of Satan," in which he has for a time been cooped up.

When we are weak, then we are strong, and when strong in ourselves, we become, like Samson, deplorably weak. We need a prayer-room and daily prayer-meeting in Mr. Carpenter's building where Anti-masonic men and women can meet for prayer and counsel, and where we can "help one another." Such meetings we must have, or the devil will certainly get advantage of us. He is more dangerous to us than the lodge; and he gives his profoundest attention to those who assail his dark realm. Meantime, let us hail the advent of Mr. Ronayne among us, as a sort of Anti-masonic John B. Gough (whom in person he resembles) and take fresh courage. If a born Papist from South Ireland, and seceding lodge-master in Chicago, shall prove to be chosen of God to testify for Christ against religious shams, inventions, and traditions, Mr. Ronayne surely has a good deal to say; and it will be like the Divine methods. I have the pleasure to introduce to you, ladies and gentlemen, Mr. EDWARD RONAYNE.

NOTES.

—No time should be lost in getting delegates appointed to Pittsburgh, or providing their expenses, if this has been engaged. Less than four weeks remain to complete these arrangements. Blank certificates for delegates will be forwarded to any church, association or body of citizens acting in sympathy with the reform.

—The General Agent is industriously preparing for the Anniversary among the churches and good people of Pittsburgh. With good advice Library Hall has been secured, and special hotel arrangements made to accommodate if private entertainment is insufficient; which we cannot be uncharitable enough to suspect, for many as will be the delegates equal will be the hospitality of the Iron City.

—The review of a debate in Iowa on the lodge, in which Bro. E. J. Grennell defended the Bible ground of the question, is ready, but for want of room is put over to next week.

—What greater inducements could be given to an heart at war with holiness and truth to choose the Masonic religion than are presented in another column from The Square, the organ and advertising sheet of the Masonic Publishing House in New York? The lodge is not a "refuge of rogues" because of the strict examination of candidates. No one of sense needs to be shown that this is no guard against the vicious when men of like character are plenty within. And what Masonic restraints are there upon the conscience to prevent demoralization after a man has joined. In the "universality" of the lodge truly are sunk all differences between men, the holy and the vile are alike; there is no discernment "between him that serveth God and and him that serveth him not." What more to be sure could the sin-loving soul desire?

—Bro. Kiggins and the Indiana State Executive Committee take a just view of the needs of the work in their State. Let every body read their address on another page and be inspired by it—Indianians to carry out the excellent plan, friends in other States to devise like "liberal things" and begin a generous emulation.

—The exposition proper of the grange publication, continued for several weeks past in our columns, has closed and the work will soon be before the public in neat book form. It should be circulated by the ten thousand. Where the order is declining it will hasten the decay, where vigorous and growing it will be like a frost blight to the budding delusion. Of any who are experimentally acquainted with the grange the publishers will be glad to have any criticism or endorsement. See further notice in the publishers' department.

—We are indebted to Bro. Stratton of the Wesleyan for the interesting report of the State meeting at Hartford. The New York brethren, each in himself a tower of strength in the work, greatly aided the new State organization in arousing interest and investigation in Hartford and throughout the State. And the men at the helm are fit representatives of reform—they do not propose to go back. Already a fruitful harvest is promised from the seed sowing of years past. Father Greene's "Broken Seal" and other publications from this office, with the lectures of C. A. Blanchard four years ago and of John Levington last winter had prepared thoughtful and conscientious persons to take a stand for the truth when the Lord opened the way. In addition to the papers mentioned, another, the Journal, a Sunday weekly (!) fills over a column with Masonic abuse and exaggeration. Its testimony, taken in connection with its character, is as good evidence of the success of the meeting as the fair report from the Courant in another column.

—The order of the "Seven Wise Men" (not limited to title) held a "Grand Conclave" at Indianapolis last Thursday. These savans have twenty-three "jurisdictions," and "Grand Conclaves" in Maryland, Virginia, Pennsylvania, Texas, Indiana and Ohio.

To Friends in Indiana.

WHAT IS OUR GREAT NEED?

Most of all we need our people enlightened and educated against the great prevailing vices of the age, and all the machinations to destroy Christianity and human happiness. Thousands of our good people are in the grossest darkness in regard to the rudiments of a pure Christianity, and the most common principles of moral science. Hence, intemperance and secretism are growing at the vitals of our moral and civil existence, with a degree of rapacity alarming, when taken in their varied forms and means. "Forewarned is forearmed," is an adage as true as it is important. And as of old it may be said of our land, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Now that the calamities which as surely await us (if we allow our land to remain in darkness) as that effect follows cause, may be averted, and our country become in fact what it is in poetry—

"The land of the free and the home of the brave."

it becomes every patriot and Christian who is so enlightened, and possesses a "knowledge of the truth," to impart that knowledge to others and thus exemplify the teachings of our Master, that "the kingdom of God is like leaven."

Having thoroughly canvassed the matter, we have concluded that the best, and most generally available agent we can use in disseminating the much needed and saving truth is by circulating among the masses a literature permeated by it. Such a literature we recognize in the Christian Cynosure and the publications of the National Christian Association. We certainly believe that if the masses of our people can be induced to patronize the Cynosure the great evils of our day will be seen to melt before its influence, like snow before a tropical sun. That we have a circulation of only about five hundred copies in our State, we regard as very unfortunate. We ought to have not less than as many thousands. But, taking things as we find them, and trying to make the best of them, we are led to think, that in another year, it is quite practicable to give this most excellent paper a circulation of two thousand copies in Indiana.

These are not fanciful figures; the exigencies of the times more than demand them, and the experience of those who have labored is this reform warrant us in saying, that by an effort entirely practicable they may be reached. Benjamin Ulsh of Silver Lake, secured last year about eighty subscriptions! And this, too, in a community intensely hostile to our movement. He succeeded because he believed "it is good to be zealously affected in a good thing." He knows the Cynosure to be a "good thing," and hence his success. Suppose every reader of the paper in Indiana should do one-half as well,—that is, get forty subscribers. That would be an aggregate of twenty thousand. But we don't expect every one will do even this much. But every one may do something; and many may do much in this direction. Let as many as have faith in God, and zeal for the truth, resolve to get, this year, twenty subscribers, and set about the work at once. Of one hundred, or one out of five, of the subscribers in our State would do this we would have two thousand new subscribers, and this would only be doing one-fourth of what brother Ulsh did last year. Let one hundred volunteer at once to do this work! Then let the other four hundred each secure as many as practicable,—say an average of five subscribers each, and the result will astonish the devil, and darkness will give place to light.

Now we propose to raise this

at once. Who will enlist? We will keep a Roll of Honor on which the names of every one in this regiment shall be placed, and each shall at the end of the year have a copy of this roll of honor, which we will publish, and send free to every one who secures twenty or more subscribers. The one who gets the largest number shall be Colonel of this regiment of moral heroes. They shall be our heavy artillery, and be reckoned as a part of the "Regular Army."

Let all who desire to enlist send their names to Wm. Small, Xenia, Miami Co., who will at once open up the books to receive recruits; he is Secretary of our State society. Just send your name and the number of subscribers you intend getting from one to one hundred, to brother Small, on a postal card, and he will record it. Then every three months send him the result of your efforts, and he will tell us through the Cynosure how the work moves on.

We make this proposition purely for the good of the cause in our State. Reader, what will you do? Don't delay, but tell us at once.

The Way is Short.

I think we are too ready with complaint
In this fair world of God's. Had we no hope,
Indeed, beyond the zenith and the slope
Of yon gray blank of sky, we might be faint
To muse upon eternity's constraint
Round our aspirant souls. But since the scope
Must widen early, is it well to droop,
For a few days consumed in loss and taint?
O pusillanimous heart, be comforted,
And, like a cheerful traveller, take the road,
Singing beside the hedge. What if the bread
Be bitter in thine inn, and thou unshod
To meet the flints? At least it may be said,
"Because the way is short, I thank Thee, God!"

Dark-Lantern Christians.

We were riding the other evening home from our rail-road station. Business duties had detained us in the city, the night was dark, and we could hardly, as the saying is, see our hand before our face; we could literally not see our horse's head. We were obliged to trust to his sagacity as to the road, but were peering out anxiously in front of us, to discern any benighted travelers as unfortunate as ourselves, lest in the darkness we should inflict and suffer a collision. Suddenly we heard a loud "Hi!" and at the same instant a glare of blinding light was thrown in our faces, and our prudent horse came to a sudden stop. It was a moment or two before we could discover what had happened. Then we perceived that we had met a buggy. Its occupant was carrying a dark lantern. Probably its glare confused rather than aided him. At all events he had kept it closed till our horses' noses almost touched; then he shouted his monosyllabic warning, and at the same time pulled the slide of his lantern to show his whereabouts. A moment more, and we had each turned to opposite sides of the road; we passed; the glare of his lantern was thrown full in our faces, then he shut it again, and all was as dark as before, if that were possible a little darker.

The incident suggested the moralizing which lasted to the end of our short ride, for we were then nearly home. Dark-lantern Christians! how often we meet them. Once in a while, in a prayer or conference meeting, the dark-lantern Christian draws aside his slide and dazzles you with his before concealed brilliance. He startles you with the depth of his unsuspected piety. His sorrow for his sin is so profound! his joy in believing is so rich! his peace in his Saviour is so perfect! He even tells you, sometimes, that he is perfectly sanctified, and has not committed a sin for so many days, or weeks, or months. He prays, now the fifty-first and now the twenty-third Psalm. His lantern is lined with reflectors, and he opens it, and turns it this way and that, and astonishes a roomful of his brethren with its radiance.

But the next day you meet him on the street. You look for his light. It is not there. The slide is closed—closed tight. There is not even a glimmer to distinguish him from other men. You see him in a bargain. He is just as close, as grasping, as keen-sighted in his self-interest. You see him at a party. His talk is just as purely "society talk." He has as keen an interest in the last scandal, and apparently rejoices in iniquity as much as his neighbors. You see him at home. His lantern is still shut tight. His wife finds him self-willed, his children often cross, his servants testify that he is a hard man to get along with. He is a dark-lantern Christian.

This exhibiting of an occasional self-conscious glare is a very different thing from so letting your light shine that men, seeing your good works, shall glorify your Father which is in heaven. He who does this carries his light always with him. It is always brightly burning. It is always radiant. Christ is his light, and shines out from him most when he is least conscious of it. —Messenger.

The Sabbath-Keeping Captain.

I once knew the captain of a sperm whaler in the Pacific, whose name was Morgan. About ten days before sailing on his first cruise, he happened to enter a chapel where a revival service was being held, and the result was eventful. Divine grace now wrought so wonderous a change in him that when he once more went to sea, the old hands among his crew could scarcely recognize him for the same man. He who once never gave a command unaccompanied by an oath, was now never heard to swear; and such was the force of his character and the power of his example, that in a few months' time not a man of his crew dared to use a profane expression while within his hearing. The discipline of the ship was not a bit lessened, and every one was happier, from the sobriety and good feeling of which the captain set example.

His owner was a Sidney merchant, who had several vessels employed in the sperm fishery. The young captain had actually sailed for the fishing-grounds, when one night, as he was reading his Bible in the cabin, he came upon the Commandments, and the question of lowering his boats on the Sabbath, should a whale appear in sight on that day, all at once started up in his mind. The words were not to be evaded: "In it thou shalt do no manner of work;" and he resolved to follow the divine command implicity, although it was not with a great inward struggle that he did so. But, as he thought of his officers and crew, who were not paid by wages, but by proportionate shares of the oil captured, he felt anxious. They might mutiny and resist him by force. He could only hope that the occasion might not arise, but if so, he would do his duty—the issue was in the hands of God.

They reached their selected station. and many weeks passed without a sperm whale coming in sight. At last, one Sabbath afternoon, two hours before sunset, the longed-for cry of "There she spouts!—there again," reached the deck from the lookout at the masthead, and instantly all was activity and bustle. Each crew sprang to lower its respective boat, and for one brief moment the young captain hesitated. It was but for a moment, however.

As if spoken actually in his ear, he thought he heard clearly and distinctly the words, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy!" and his own voice rang through the ship, declaring that not a boat should leave her that day.

The scene that ensued—the amazement, succeeded by rage, when they understood his motive, the violence and tumult—all may be imagined. But the captain was unmoved, and his courageous, undaunted demeanor at last quelled the riot; but not until he had promised them that he would give up to them from his own share in future captures, an equivalent for their loss on the present occasion.

"The owner will think nothing of loosing his share, of course!" said his mate, who had been foremost in opposition, as he followed his captain into the cabin. "This will be the first and the last vessel you'll ever command of his, at any rate! I'd like to have that agreement down in black and white, if you please, Captain Morgan, and so would the crew, and at once, too."

The captain answered mildly, pointing out to the mate that any agreement executed on the Sabbath would be null in law, and promised to satisfy them on the morrow. There was sadness in his tones as he spoke; for Morgan felt the truth of what the mate had said, that no owner would ever give him a ship to command again.

The mate was a rough sailor, who had known his commander from boyhood. He felt touched with pity for one whose motive in thus acting he respected, and in his blunt way he apologized to the captain for what he had said about the shares:

"You see, Captain Morgan, I have a wife and five children to keep, and if Providence sends us a whale on Sunday, I take it as Providence means us to catch that whale—lest ways that's my—"

The words were arrested on his lips, and he stood still and motionless, his eyes fixed intensely on an object before him. Morgan had thrown himself down listlessly after the fierce and turbulent scene he had just passed through, and he sat for some minutes brooding over the probable effect on his future prospects of that day's incident, and trying in the strength of his newly found hopes to say, "Thy will be done." He had continued for some minutes thus, when a sudden exclamation roused him:

"Captain Morgan! Come here quick, sir, please! Look!"

And the mate pointed at what had arrested his attention, while an expression of alarm, mingled with astonishment and incredulity, overspread his features as he actually saw the mercury of the barometer falling lower and lower as he stood. Morgan jumped up and looked, and both bounded on to the deck to summon the crew. Well was it for that crew that none of them had left the ship in her boats, for in half an hour all were engaged in a desperate life-and-death struggle, which taxed every energy, and demanded the utmost efforts of every individual on board.

For three days they scudded before the hurricane; and when it had passed by they found they had been driven some hundreds of miles beyond the bounds they had set to their cruising grounds; but to their intense delight, they discovered that part of the ocean to be in reality one of the best fishing grounds possible.

Scarcely had the weather moderated, when they found themselves in the midst of a whole "school" of sperm whales, and two were secured. Hardly had these been tried out," i. e., rendered into oil, when more were seen; and, in short, so fortunate were they, that instead of two, or even three years, (the usual time taken to fill a goodsized ship,) Captain Morgan's vessel returned to Sydney in ten months! Thus the captain's firmness in acting up to his convictions of duty instead of causing him loss, actually had a contrary effect; and his owner was so much pleased at his speedy return with so rich a cargo, that he told him he might lower or not when he pleased. —Christian Weekly.

Consecrated Pocket-Books.

One of the last things a worldling consecrates to Christ is the pocket-book. Multitudes who profess the Christian faith have never yet thought of doing it. The rich young man who came to our Saviour, had kept all the commandments, and he had also kept all his money; and when the Lord bade him give all his wealth to the poor, and come and follow him, he went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions.

But when God visits a soul in mercy and enriches it with grace, how soon the hold on this world relaxes; how soon the world to come absorbs the heart. Let salvation come to the house of Zacheus, and while Pharisees murmur that Christ has gone to be a sinner's guest, lo, the rich publican stands and says unto the Lord, "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give to the poor: and if I have taken anything from any man by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." Luke xix.

There are many who desire that salvation may come to their houses, but they are not willing it should come as it came to the house of Zacheus, when Jesus himself brought it. They desire to inherit eternal life, and to have treasures laid up in heaven, but they are not willing to sell, and give alms, and thus place their wealth where moth and rust do not corrupt, and where no thieves break through and steal. They wish to be wholly consecrated to God, but they do not wish to consecrate their pocket-books, and they go away sorrowful because they have great possessions.

Oh, man of God, flee these things. Be not high-minded, nor trust in uncertain riches. Cut loose from a world that is doomed to ruin, and lay aside every weight that hinders in the heavenly race. Let your consecration to God be immediate, complete, eternal. Lay all upon his altar. Let the pocket-book and all which it contains, with heart and hand, and house, and home, and farm, and merchandise, and time, and talent, and influence, and reputation, go into the work and cause of God. So doing, you shall escape the snares that lurk around you, and laying up a good foundation against the time to come, lay hold on eternal life and have a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth. —Selected.

Not Deep Enough Yet.

Not half. When you see professing Christians jeweled up, tipped off gaily, costly, and fashionably, with gold in their ears, gold in their bosoms, gold on the wrists, gold on their fingers, gold, gold, gold; when you see gold watch chains and seals dangling, rest assured the work of grace has not done its perfect work. Their religion is only skin deep. The fallow ground is not yet broken up.

President C. G. Finney says: "After I became a Christian, (though no one spoke to me about it), I was ashamed of my ruffles, and of my great bunch of watch-keys. I now saw that I had worn them for mere show, and abandoned them at once."

Only a few Sabbaths ago, we saw a minister on the stand, beautifully dressed up in the finest broadcloth and silk, with a gold breast-pin, and two gold keys, dangling from his vest pocket in full view; one of them quite large, in a square form, the other smaller in size. They were of the most bright and sparkling gold, dazzling! These gold keys were so arranged as to be clearly seen by the whole audience during his delivery. How exceedingly pretty and dandy-like he looked! The whole audience seemed absorbed in viewing his pretty dangling gold keys, his breast pin and his fine broadcloths and silks! Reader, this man was a professed watchman over Christ's flock, thus bedecked! What think you of the effect of his example on his hearers—young ladies and gentlemen fond of golden trinkets, pearls and costly array? Could he point them to Isaiah, iii. 16–18 revokingly? or to 1st Peter, iii. 3; Tim. i. 2–9; Rom. xii. 2? "Lord help, for the godly man ceaseth."—D. F. N.

German Women.

A proof of the general culture of the German woman is shown by their prevailing habit of forming little associations, wherever there are a few of them living near enough to each other, even in the country, meeting regularly by turns in the house of each member, for the purpose of reading and talking French, English and their own literature. In Germany, women are teachers, telegraphists, employed in the post and railway service, musicians, painters, following all kinds of business, etc. The career of a female teacher, especially at the public schools, in German, is decidedly superior, as a real profession, to any one as yet open to ladies in England. Another profession, taken up chiefy by women of the artizan classes, is that of medically-trained midwives, who have to go through a course of studies in colleges instituted for the purpose, and who, after having passed their examination, are appointed by the parishes, and have an official character and a fixed salary.

One thing is certain of German women in regard to 'housewifeliness.' They uphold in all cases the principle, and in almost all cases follow it up in practice, that all women, whatever their other attainments or talents, ought also to possess a thorough knowledge of housekeeping and housework, since upon these, and with them the comfort and welfare of every family, depend. And I think it is not 'national bias' that makes me convinced the Germans are right there. As long as women undertake to keep house, they should know how to do it: No one can do work he does not understand. This is simple logic. If he pretends to do it nevertheless, he or she is a sham, disgracing himself and sure to come to grief. No man in his senses thinks of conducting a business of which he has not first learnt the elements and details. Can a woman dispense with that? Or is the managing of a household so far more easy, or unimportant, than any other work, that it need not be learned? The Germans think it is neither, and that seems also to be the outspoken opinion of sensible people in England.

That, besides learning it, ladies as a rule do more housework in Germany than here, is simply a necessity with the generally limited incomes of German families, even in the higher classes. The majority of them could neither afford to keep many servants, nor leave the management of the household details so much in their hands as is generally the case in England. Germany would never have attained her high intellectual position, if her women did not understand and do their housework and housekeeping so well. Only to foreigners they can on that account appear as inferior beings. Their own countrymen know too well how they depend upon their clever heads and skillful hands to value them lightly. They are fully aware that German men could not shine in every field if German women were not so industrious, self-denying, and unexacting. Nations more fortunately situated can afford to esteem such virtues less highly. Germany has been impoverished by centuries of battle-field existence, and has even now an enormous price to pay for the safety of its borders. But our poverty has its blessings; it has made us consider it honorable to work, and shameful to be idle, in women as well as in men. That is a condition of things not existing among our wealtheir neighbors; but it is a first-rate one for the emancipation of woman, the great and glorious task of our age.—London Paper.

To God belongs all the glory. If, then, God is to display his power in thee, and make something out of thee, thou must consent to become as nothing. Everything in Christianity turns upon this one quality of humility. The blessedness of the children of God is that they possess nothing the glory of which does not belong to God—Kling.

Children's Corner.

Suppose!

Suppose, my little lady,
Your doll should break her head,
Could you make it whole by crying,
Till your eyes and nose were red?
And wouldn't it be pleasanter
To treat it as joke;
And say you're glad 't was dolly's,
And not your head that broke?

Suppose you're dressed for walking,
And the rain comes pouring down,
Will it clear off any sooner
Because you scold and frown?
And wouldn't it be nicer
For you to smile than pout,
And so make sunshine in the house
When there is none without?

Suppose your task, my little man,
Is very hard to get,
Will it make it any easier
For you to sit and fret?
And wouldn't it be wiser,
Than waiting like a dunce,
To go to work in earnest
And learn the thing at once?

Suppose that some boys have a horse,
And some a coach and pair,
Will it tire you less while walking
To say "It isn't fair?"
And wouldn't it be nobler
To keep you temper sweet,
And in your heart be thankful
You can walk upon your feet?

Suppose the world doesn't please you,
Nor the way some people do,
Do you think the whole creation
Will be altered just for you?
And isn't it, my boy or girl,
The wisest, bravest plan,
Whatsoever comes, or doesn't come,
To do the best you can?

—Phoebe Cary.

Learning to Count.

"Now, boys, you want to be men some day, don't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, what do you mean to do when you grow up?"

"I mean to be a sailor, sir."

"I'm going to be a grocer."

"And I a butcher."

"I mean to help mother, sir," was the shrill cry of one of the tiniest of all the little crew."

"That's right!" said I. "Never forget your mother; always try to help her. But if you are to be all these things,—grocers, butchers, and all that sort of thing,—you must first of all learn a great deal, and none of you will get on very well if you are not able to count quickly and reckon correctly. If you mean to be good and successful men of business you must have your heart right and your head clear. Give your heart to Jesus Christ and he will keep it right and true. Always be sober and your heads won't get muddled as some people's are. Now, suppose we take a lesson in counting as far up as ten; and to help you remember the figures, I will give you a rhyme for every one. Then to make you more firm in your temperance principles, the rhymes will be about teetotalism. Say them after me:

"Number one, the beer-shop shun.
Number two, nor drink nor brew.
Number three, a teetotaler be.
Number four, keep drink from the door.
Number five, abstain and thrive.
Number six, a teetotal fix.
Number seven, be to temperance given.
Number eight, don't be caught by the bait.
Number nine, a mocker is wine.
Number ten, be teetotal then."

A Remarkable Animal Trainer.

In the year 1721, in Perth, Scotland, was born the most remarkable animal trainer in the world. His name was Bisset, and in early life he became a journeyman-shoemaker; but having a great fondness and faculty for managing animals, he soon gave himself up entirely to its occupation. His first success in educating brutes was with a horse and dog, whom he taught to perform many curious feats. He next tried his skill upon a couple of monkeys, who soon learned to dance on a rope, drink to the company, ride and leap on the backs of horses, and go through intricate dances with their equally accomplished companion, the dog. Three young cats were the succeeding subjects of Bisset's tuition, and these were instructed to play upon dulcimers, apparently reading from music-books before them, while they squalled a vocal accompaniments in three different keys, or tones, producing altogether a chorus whose piercing effect the musical may perhaps imagine.

The fame of Bisset's learned animals spread rapidly, and he was finally induced to exhibit them in London. A place in the haymarket was secured, and the "Cat's Opera" advertised. Crowded houses responded to the advertisement and the horse, the dog, the monkeys and the cats went through their respective parts amid great applause. In a brief time the skillful trainer found himself in possessio n o 1,000 pounds as the reward of his novel enterprise.

Encouraged by this success, Bisset sought other pupils in the animal kingdom. Among these was a leveret, which he taught to beat the time of several marches with his hind legs. Canary birds, linnets and sparrows caught the trick of distinguishing the hour and minutes of the day, and of spelling the name of any person in their audience. Six turkey-cocks were made to go through a country-dance, and, in a single month's time, a turtle learned to fetch and carry like a dog. A gold-fish came to the surface at his call and fed from his hand and answered in various other interesting ways Bissett's call upon its intelligence.

At length the master brought his ingenuity to bear on that most obstinate of all animals, the pig. He nearly met his match this time; but, after a patient discipline of a twelve-month, gentleman-piggy was rendered docile as a spaniel, and obeyed his teacher's every command. This sapient creature could spell, cast up accounts, tell the time of day, kneel and make obeisance to the spectators and otherwise conduct himself like a gentleman of parts. But such extraordinary porcine wisdom could not be accepted as a natural phenomenon by the ignorance of the age in which it dwelt, and it began to be whispered that Bisset, who taught animals to do all but speak, was in league with the devil. This was enough to rouse the spirit of persecution, and one night, while the learned pig was exhibiting his tricks in Bane lagh, Ireland, the mob, headed by a stupid official, broke into the room, destroyed the apparatus with which Bissett worked, and assaulted him and his pig so virulently that they barely escaped with their lives. This event was followed soon after by the death of Bisset. He is said to have been of a very sensitive and gentle nature, and the odium that fell on him as a suspected necromancer, together with the assault of the mob, preyed upon his spirits and hastened his death.

—Grand Master Lounsbury of Illinois has been informed of another item in the case of W. H. Robinson of Yates City, expelled for opposing a violation of the by-laws of the lodge, with whose case our readers are familiar. It seems that J. M. Corey, former senior warden in Yates City, now "high priest" of a Royal Arch chapter, testi- Robinson affirms. Lounsbury, however, makes no intimation that he will give the case any further hearing. But such a half-buried carcass will not be a pleasant thing for his "institution."

Religious Intelligence.

—Elder J. R. Baird, well known as a seceder and lecturer against the lodge, has taken a charge in the Allegheny Wesleyan conference, to which he has belonged for some years. He will preach at Mahoning and Conemaugh, residing at Cochran's Mills, Armstrong county, Pa.

—A revival at St. Johnsbury, Vt., is said to have resulted in the conversion of nearly a thousand souls.

—Dr. Joseph P. Thompson writes to the Observer from Berlin that Mr. Pearsal Smith is "doing great practical good in Berlin. He gathers the people to hear, and sets them to thinking and talking and praying, and good must come of this."

—An important question is now being decided by the vote of the different presbyteries of the Presbyterian church—the limited term service of elders. The subject has been thoroughly discussed in the journals and pulpits of the church and thus far 100 presbyteries (twelve more than a majority) have voted for it, and 30 against. Heretofore ruling elders in the Presbyterian church have been elected for life, but by the acceptance of this overture every church is at liberty to continue the life term or to limit it to three or any number of years. The office remains with the man elected, whether for long or short terms, but the service cannot be rendered unless he has been elected from time to time.

—Dr. Mullens, commissioner of the London Missionary Society, traveling through the Madagascar missions states that, after traveling all over the island, visiting the various mission stations, examining the schools and mingling with all classes of the people, he had reached the conclusion that, although it was not to be expected that 300,000 idolaters could at once become exemplary Christians, about a tithe of the number compared with the best members of the home churches. In all classes he had found the most cheering signs of spiritual life. He had had a very friendly interview with the Prime Minister, who fully appreciated the benefits of Christianity to the country. There was no mingling of the affairs of church and state, so that the charge often made against the society, that it upheld abroad what it protested against at home, had no foundation in fact.

—The appointment of Hon, Horace Maynard as minister to Turkey gives satisfaction to all who desire Christianity to prevail. Mr. Maynard is a prominent member of the Presbyterian church, and one of the Vice-presidents of the Bible Society, and is in the heartiest sympathy with the progress of religious liberty. Great problems relating to mission work and the circulation of the Scriptures are constantly coming up with the Turkish government, and Mr. Maynard will be able to render the cause of truth signal service. The Bible Society expends annually in its Levant agency about $40,000, while the Presbyterians appropriate more than $50,000; and the American Board expended last year on its various Turkish missions $156,635.

THE GRANGE.

Illustrated with Engravings, showing the Lodge Room, Signals, Grips, etc.

EDITED BY REV. A. W. GEESLIN.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1875,
BY EZRA A. COOK & CO.,
In the office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

All repeat the Lord's prayer, led by the Chaplain.

HYMN.

"Mourner, joy! an angel's pathway," etc.

ADDRESS OF CHAPLAIN TO RELATIVES.

Friends, blessed are the ministrations of sorrow; through it we are brought into a more tender relationship, to all other forms of being, obtain a deeper sight into the mystery of eternal life and feel more distinctly the breathings of the Infinite. The sorrow which God appoints is purifying and ennobling, and contains within it a serious joy. Our Father saw that disappointment and separation were necessary and he has made them holy and elevating.

ADDRESS OF CHAPLAIN TO MEMBERS OF THE ORDER.

Patrons, again are we called to separate from a worthy (brother) but let us remember that there is healing in the bitter cup. God takes away from us those we love, as hostages of our faith; and to those who look forward to a reunion in another world, where there will be no separation, the evening of life becomes more delightful than the morning, and the sunset offers brighter and lovlier visions than those we build upon the morning clouds and which appear before the strength of day. Faith is that precious alchemy which transmutes grief into joy and makes affliction appear what it really is, a dispensation of mercy.

Heaven and God are best discerned through tears; scarcely, perhaps, discerned at all without them, the constant association of prayer with the hour of bereavement and the scenes of death, suffice to show this. We must be made perfect through suffering; but the struggle by night will bring the calmness of the morning. The prayer of deliverance calls down the power of endurance and while to the reluctant their cross is too heavy to be borne, it grows light to the heart of willing trust.

HYMN.

1. Friend after friend departs
Who has not lost a friend?
There is no union here of hearts,
That finds not here an end!
Were this frail world our final rest,
Living or dying, none were blest.

2. Beyond the flight of time,
Beyond the reign of death,
There surely is some blessed clime,
Where life is not a breath,
Nor life's affections transient fire
Whose sparks fly upward and expire.

3. Thus star by star declines,
Till all are passed away,
As morning high and higher shines,
To pure and perfect day;
Nor sink those stars in empty night,
But hide themselves in heaven's own light.

While this is being sung, the brothers pass around the grave and breaking their boquets apart, drop in the flowers.

READING BY CHAPLAIN.

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them; while the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars be not darkened, nor the clouds return after the rain; in the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened, becsuse man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets, or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was: and the spirit return unto God who gave it."

"The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside still waters; he restoreth my soul; he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake. Yea, though I walk through he valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

The coffin is now lowered in the grave and the sisters, passing around the grave, each breaks her boquet and drops the flowers in while this hymn is being sung.

HYMN.

"Forget not the dead, who have loved, who have left us," etc.

Then the Master advances to the head of the grave and the pall-bearers to the sides and each breaks and throws in his boquet.

ADDRESS OF MASTER.

A good name is better than precious ointment and the day of death than the day of one's birth. (He) shall go as (he) came and take nothing of (his) labor which (he) may carry away in (his) hand. (Takes up a handful of earth and sprinkles it in the grave.) In the name of ——— Grange, I pronounce the words, (Brother) ——— farewell.

PRAYER BY CHAPLAIN.

Almighty God, we give the hearty thanks for the good examples of those thy servants, who, having finished their course in faith, do now rest from their labors. And we beseech thee that we, with all those who are now departed in the true faith of thy holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in thine eternal and everlasting glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

All: Amen.

Chaplain:—May the grace of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ, be with us all now and evermore.

All: Amen.

Granges usually set apart a day at the proper season of the year, for the purpose of planting a memorial tree at the grave or elsewhere, in memory of any brother or sister who may have died. During the summer season a day is also set apart as "memmorial day," when each Grange, in due form, visits and decorates with flowers the graves and memmorial trees of their departed members. Members of Subordinate Granges are required to gather during the summer a liberal quantity of "everlasting" flowers, of which to make dried boquets to decorate their halls and which may be used in winter, if necessary, in the funeral ceremonies.

REMARKS ON INSTALLATION CEREMONIES.

We would call the attention of the CHRISTIAN reader to the closing words of the Chaplain's prayer, "We ask all in thy (the Father's) name." Christ says, (John 16th chap., 23d verse) "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father IN MY NAME, he will give it you." Does it not interfere with a Christians religious views to have prayers offered in which Christ is ignored? Yet in the Installing Officer's address he affirms that the teachings of the Grange does not interfere with man's religious views. Again, Christianity teaches us to do good to all, especially "to the household of faith;" the Grange says, "Especially to the Patrons of Husbandry." Is there not conflict between the teachings of the Grange and the religious views of Christians? The Chaplain, who is authorized to speak for the Grange, in the opening prayer offers this petition: "Be with all orders and associations having for their object the advancement of education and the moral welfare and happiness of mankind." The Christian's Bible says: (2 John 9, 11 ver.) "He that abideth in the doctrine of Christ, he hath both the Father and the Son. If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, NEITHER BID HIM GODSPEED; for he that biddeth him Godspeed IS PARTAKER OF HIS EVIL DEEDS." Many associations for the advancement of education and the moral welfare and happiness of mankind, designedly ignore Christ. This prayer bids them all, without discrimination, Godspeed; and still it is affirmed that the teachings of the Grange do not interfere with a persons religious views. Again, since the precepts of the Grange are unlike and in many points antagonistic to the teachings of the Word of God, it seems to us that Christians, who maintain their connection with the Grange, by so doing, give their endorsement to the statement that "ITS TEACHINGS ARE THE LOFTIEST MAN CAN SEEK," i. e., superior to the Bible and as fully and wickedly as Peter of old, DENY THEIR SAVIOUR.

REMARKS ON FUNERAL CEREEMONIES.

The propriety of such a burial service for an infidel we will not discuss. We only beseech all Christians, who desire to leave for the coming generations what they received from their fathers, a Christian country, to withhold their co-operation and their "Godspeed" from a man-invented religion; a religion which, like that invented by Jereboam, professedly seeks the welfare of those adopting it, while in reality it is established to accomplish selfish objects and in time destroys all true prosperity, degrades those who practice it, together with their unfortunate children:—a pagan religion which boldly intrudes its weak, confused and confusing sentiments upon the solemn scenes of death and the grave, crowding out Christ and Christianity.

ORIGIN OF THE GRANGE.

BY REV. I. A. HART.

A confidential letter, written by the Secretary of the National Grange, has fallen into our hands without restrictions, which furnishes some perfectly authentic disclosures. The following is the part of Secretary Kelley's letter, which is specially interesting to us:

ITASOA, MINN., Dec. 12, 1868.

"———, DEAR SIR:—From the interest you evince in the work and from the tone of your letter, I am prompted to place in your possession the form of obligation required in our Order. As this matter was freely discussed and many of our originators being Masons of the 32d and 33d degrees and prominent Odd-fellows, it was decided that any oath, not given in a court of law, was extra-judicial and not binding, any further than the moral honesty of the person giving the same, hence we adopted this form enclosed, which will be carried out to the letter. I remain yours fraternally,

O. H. KELLEY.

Two precious concessions are here. First, that intelligent Masons and Odd-fellows are conscious that the attempt to impose the bondage of their obligations upon men's consciences, is an unwarrantable attempt at usurpation; for that their oaths are both impious and unlawful and a mere nullity, so far as binding the conscience of those on whom they are imposed is concerned, an absolute nullity except only for fastening guilt and condemnation upon those who impose them. For this purpose there is a validity in those obligations before which the farmers may well tremble. Beyond this they are an absolute nullity.

Second. The order of "Patrons of Husbandry" is the child and creature of the Sovereigns of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, moulded by them and beyond doubt to be used by them as an auxilliary in their wily schemes of universal dominion. With the brazen assurance that is the usual characteristic of imposture, the statement is stereotyped in the Installation Ceremonies of the Grange that: "Its teahings are the loftiest that man can seek." (See pp. 69.) This is enough. "Ye shall be as Gods knowing good and evil." Gems of promise these? The image of impudence stamped on them, identifies each as coin from the same satanic mind.

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS

OF THE NATIONAL GRANGE.

PREAMBLE.

Human happiness is the acme of earthly ambition. Individual happiness depends upon general prosperity.

The prosperity of a nation is in proportion to the value of its productions.

The soil is the source from whence we derive all that constitutes wealth; without it we would have no agriculture, no manufactures, no commerce. Of all the material gifts of the Creator, the various productions of the vegetable world are of the first importance. The art of agriculture is the parent and precursor of all arts, and its products the foundation of all wealth.

The productions of the earth are subject to the influence of natural laws, invariable and indisputable; the amount produced will consequently be in proportion to the intelligence of the producer, and success will depend upon his knowledge of the action of these laws and the proper application of their principles.

Hence, knowledge is the foundation of happiness.

The ultimate object of this organization is for mutual instruction and protection, to lighten labor by diffusing a knowledge of its aims aud purposes, expand the miud by tracing the beautiful laws the great Creator has established in the Universe and to enlarge our views of Creative wisdom and power.

To those who read aright, history proves that in all ages society is fragmentary and successful results of general welfare can be secured only by general effort. Unity of action cannot be acquired without discipline and discipline caunot be enforced without significant organization; hence we have a ceremony of initiation which binds us in mutual fraternity as with a band of iron; but although its influence is so powerful, its application is as gentle as that of the silken thread that binds a wreath of flowers.

The Patrons of Husbandry consist of the following:

ORGANIZATION.

Subordinate Granges.

First Degree: Laborer, (man,) Maid, (woman.)
Second Degree: Cultivator, (man,) Shepherdess, (womau.)

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.—Officers.

SECTION 1. The officers of a Grange, either National, State, or Subordinate, consist of and rank as follows: Master, Overseer, Lecturer, Steward, Assistant Steward, Chaplain, Treasurer, Secretary, Gate-keeper, Ceres, Pomona, Flora, and Lady Assistant Steward. It is their duty to see that the laws of the Order are carried out.

SEC. 2.—How Chosen.—In the Subordinate Granges they shall be chosen annually; in the State Granges once in two years; and in the National Grange once in three years. All elections to be by ballot.

Vacancies by death or resignation to be filled at a special election at the next regular meeting thereof—officers so chosen to serve until the annual meeting.

SEC. 3. The Master of the Naiional Grange may appoint members of the Order as Deputies to organize Granges where no State Grange exists.

SEC. 4. There shall be an Executive Committee of the National Grange, consisting of three members, whose term of office shall be three years, one of whom shall be elected each year.

SEC. 5. The officers of the respective Granges shall be addressed as "WORTHY."

ARTICLE II.—Meetings.

SECTION 1. Subordinate Granges shall meet once each month, and may hold intermediate meetings as may be deemed necessary for the good of the Order. All business meetings are confided to the Fourth Degree.

SEC. 2. State Granges shall meet annually at such time and place as the Grange shall from year to year determine.

SEC. 3. The National Grange shall meet annually on the first Weduesday in February, at such place as the Grange may from year to year determine. Should the National Grange adjourn without selecting the place of meeting, the Executive Committee shall appoint the place and notify the Secretary of the National Grange and the Masters of State Granges, at least thirty days before the day appointed.

ARTICLE III.—Laws.

The National Grange, at its annual session, shall frame, amend, or repeal such laws as the good of the Order may require. All laws of State and Subordinate Granges must conform to this Constitution and the laws adopted by the National Grange.

ARTICLE IV.—Ritual.

The Ritual adopted by the National Grange shall be used in all Subordinate Granges and any desired alteration in the same must be submitted to, and receive the sanction of the National Grange.

ARTICLE V.—Membership.

Any person interested in agricultural pursuits, of the age of sixteen years, (female,) and eighteen years (male,) duly proposed, elected, and complying with the rules and regulations of the Order, is entitled to membership and the benefit of the degrees taken. Every application must be accompanied by the fee of membership. If rejected, the money will be refunded. Applications must be certified by members and balloted for at a subsequent meeting. It shall require three negative votes to reject an applicant.

ARTICLE VI.—Fees for Membership.

The minimum fee for membership in a Subordinate Grange shall be, for men five dollars and for women two dollars, for the four degrees, except charter members, who shall pay—men, three dollars and women fifty cents.

ARTICEE VII.—Dues.

SECTION 1. The minimum of regular monthly dues shall be ten cents from each member, but each Grange may otherwise regulate its own dues.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of each Subordinate Grange shall report quarterly to the Secretary of the State Grange the names of all persons initiated or passed to higher degrees.

SEC. 3. The Treasurer of each Subordinate Grange shall report quarterly to the Secretary of his State Grange the sum of one dollar for each man and fifty cents for each woman initiated dnring that quarter; also, a quarterly due of six cents for each member.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of each State Grange shall report quarterly to the Secretary of the National Grange the membership in his State and the degrees conferred during the quarter.

SEC. 5. The Treasurer of each State Grange shall deposit to the credit of the National Grange of Patrous of Husbandry with some banking or trust compaey in New York, (to be selected by the Executive Committee,) in quarterly instalments, the annual due of ten cents for each member in his State and forward the receipts for the same to the Treasurer of the National Grange.

SEC. 6. All moneys deposited with said company shall be paid out only upon the drafts of the Treasurer, signed by the Master and countersigned by the Secretary.

SEC. 7. No State Grange shall be entitled to respresentation in the National Grange whose dues are unpaid for more than one quarter.

ARTICLE VIII.—Requirements.

SECTION 1. Reports from Subordinate Granges relative to crops, implements, stock, or any other matters called for by the National Grange, must be certified to by the Master and Secretary, and under seal of the Grauge giving the same.

SEC. 2. All printed matter, on whatever subject and all information issued by the National or State to Subordinate Granges, shall be made known to the members without unnecessary delay.

SEC. 3. If any brothers or sisters of the Order are sick, it shall be the duty of the Patrons to visit them and see that they are well provided with all things needful.

SEC. 4. Any member found guilty of wanton cruelty to animals shall be expelled from the Order.

SEC. 5. The officers of Subordinate Granges shall be on the alert in devising means by which the interests of the whole Order may be advanced; but no plan of work shall be adopted by State or Subordinate Granges without first submitting it to, and receiving the sanction of, the National Grange.

ARTICLE IX.—Charters and Dispensations.

SECTION 1. All Charters and Dispensations issue directly from the National Grange.

SEC. 2. Nine men and four women having received the four Subordinate Degrees, may receive a Dispensation to organize a Subordinate Grange.

SEC. 3. Applications for Dispensatious shall be made to the Secretary of the National Grange and be signed by the persons applying for the same, and be accompanied by a fee of fifteen dollars.

SEC. 4. Charter names are those persons only whose names are upon the application, and whose fees were paid at the time of organization. Their number shall not be less than nine men and four women, nor more than twenty men and ten women.

News of the Week.

The City.

The official investigation of the new Custom House has discovered that not only is the stone of inferior quality, but the foundation is good for nothing for so heavy a building. The work of two years must be taken down and done over. The blame lies between Mullet, the government architect at the time, and Rankin the superintendent.——After a long argument the injunction preventing the Common Council from declaring the result of the late charter election was dissolved, and the election will be contested.——The reportof the city Comptroller for the last fisca year, showed that the bonded and floating debt is $17,500,000. The receipts for the year paid all expenses, and left an unexpended balance amounting to nearly $200,000. The city has been able to borrow all needed funds at a very low rate of interest, and evidences are abundant that the credit of the municipality is unimpaired.

Foreign.

The Emperor William has signed the bill for the abolition of all monasteries in Germany.——A dreadful disaster has occurred in a coal mine at Bunker's Hill, North Staffordshire, England. An explosion took place which resulted in the death of probably thirty-five men.——The Carlist Committee in London have received telegrams reporting great victories by Don Carlos' forces, over the Spanish Government troops in the province of Barcelona. Another great victory for the Carlists is reported from Aragon. The government troops are said to have lost all their artillery and many prisoners.——Another appalling steamship disaster took place last Friday night by the wreck of the Schiller, from New York for Hamburg, on the reefs off the Scilly Islands 30 miles southwest of Lands End, England. A heavy sea was raging at the time and a heavy fog prevented any signal being seen. Of the 395 passengers and crew not over 50 are reported saved. Most of the passengers were Germans, many of them from the West. The captain is said to have used every means for the safety of his charge and was himself lost. The Schiller was a new vessel of the first class.

General.

The steamer St. Lake from Leavenworth to St. Louis struck one of the piers of the St. Charles Bridge and sunk. There were 100 persons on board five of whom were lost.——Lieutenant-Colonel Hatch and General Pope report to the War Department that the rations issued to the Indians at the Fort Sill and Wichita are of inferior quality and insufficient for their needs. General Pope says it is idle to attempt to keep the Indians quiet while the mal-administration of Indian affairs continues.——The schooner Jefferson Borden, from New Orleans for London, experienced a mutiny when eighteen days from the former port. Captain Patterson and his officers fought the men with revolvers and knives. After a terrible struggle, in which the first and second mates were killed, the captain succeeded in disabling and securing all the men who resisted. He hailed passing vessels, obtained sufficient hands to work the ship, and proceeded on his voyage to London.

Farm and Garden.

The Best Soil for Potatoes.

Years ago, says a correspondent of of the New York Times, when the old-fashioned Mercer or Neshannock was the leading market potato, farmers learned that this variety did best on sandy or light gravelly soils. From this fact originated the idea that sand was the best adapted to potatoes, and the theory was not dispelled when the Peachblow superseded the Mercer. For years the great bulk of potatoes for market was grown on sandy soil. Many city people would not buy potatoes on heavy soil, and I have known farmers on such land to not grow enough for their own use, and buy a supply of potatoes in the fall. On the same farms, within two or three years, thousands of excellent potatoes, equal or superior to any grown on sand, have been produced. We no longer hear anything about the superiority of potatoes on sandy soil, and were I buying for my own use, I should prefer those from a rather heavy loam, not wet, but naturally or artificially drained. This change in popular taste is not a mere freak of fashion, but is founded on substantial reason. It is a curious fact that varieties of potatoes now most largely grown are the best quality and usually the best yield on heavy soil, This is especially true of the Peerless, which on sand is poor and watery, while it reaches its best quality on a moderately rich loam. For Early Rose the soil cannot well be too rich, but it can for Peerless, or Late Rose, or Peachblow. If heavily manured, Peachblows are apt to rot, especially if the season be wet. If my observation of the poor quality of Peerless on sandy ground be correct, what is the cause? May it not be the lack of mineral elements, especially of potash, in which sandy soils are apt to be deficient? Much of our sandy soil has been considerably "run" by successive potato crops, and this inferior quality of such potatoes may be due to the absence of potash in the soil. I should like a careful chemical analysis of different qualities of potatoes to show what poor, "watery" roots were deficient in. I have heard that potato rot has been arrested sometimes by applications of lime, of potash, or of gypsum, which last is lime in another form. If these theories as to the possible cause of potato rot be correct, we ought to be able to control it by increasing the proportion of mineral manures and decreasing those from the barn-yard. Fermenting stable manure causes a watery succulent growth, especially in warm and wet seasons, and if there be a deficiency of any mineral element the quality and healthfulness of the crop is affected. Those varieties which have small tops are less liable to injury than those of coarser growth; for I do not suppose that a good Early Rose has any more potash or lime than a good Peachblow or a good Peerless. The difference in quality seems to result quite as much from the soil as from the variety, and different varieties seem to to be adapted to different soils. Is this the result of their origin, or has that anything to do with it? Can we adapt varieties to soils by originating them there? These queries suggest some interesting and possibly profitable experiments.

The London Omnibus Company have lately made a report which discloses some interesting information, not only to farmers, but to every owner of a horse. They use no less than 6,000 horses; 3,000 of this number had for their feed bruised oats, 16 pounds; cut hay, 7 1-2 pounds; straw 2 1-2 pounds; and the other, unbruised oats, 19 pounds; uncut hay, 13 pounds. The horse which was fed on the former, and consumed 26 pounds per day, could do the same work as well, and was kept in as good condition, as the one receiving 32 pounds, thereby causing a saving of 6 pounds on each horse. amounting to 60*l* per day, or 22,300*l* per annum on the company's 6,000 horses.

Home and Health Hints.

PLAIN DIET.—This is what children ought on every account to be accustomed to from the first; it is vastly more for their present health and comfort than little nice things, with which fond parents are so often apt to vitiate their appetites, and it will save them a great deal of mortification in after life. If you make it a point to give them the best of everything; to pamper them with rich cakes, sweetmeats and sugar plumbs; if you allow them to say with scowl, "I don't like this or that," "I can't eat that," and then go away and make them a little toast, or kill a chicken for their dainty palates—depend upon it you are doing a great injury not only on the score of denying a full muscle and rosy cheek, but of forming one of the most inconvenient habits that they can carry along with them in after life. When they come to leave you they will not half the time find anything they can eat—and thus you will prepare them to go chafing and grumbling through life, the veriest slaves almost in the world.

EGGS SOFT OR HARD-BOILED.—Hard-boiled eggs have always been considered more difficult of digestion than soft boiled ones. The reason is this: the white of an egg is almost pure albumen. Now albumen coagulates with heat, and is not so readily acted on by the gastric juice; so that much of it passes from the stomach undigested. Persons with vigorous digestion may manage a hard-boiled egg so as to extract most of the nourishment from it, if it be well masticated and mixed with other food. The yolk of the egg, however, is not rendered worse, by hard boiling. Eggs boiled just four minutes leaves the white part in a partly flocculent condition, more easily digested, and not so soft as to be offensive to any one. An egg may be cooked in water at a temperature of about 165° F. for fifteen minutes and leave the yolk well cooked, but the white will not be rendered tough and hard to digest. Though more troublesome, this is a good way to cook an egg to render it easy of digestion as well as palatable. Persons whose palates will not tolerate a soft-boiled egg should have them poached and dropped on toast.—Dr. Holbrook in "Eating for Strength.

SUN BATH.—There are various kinds of baths; the cold bath, the warm bath, the air bath, the Turkish bath, and many other kinds not necessary to mention. We have a word to say for the cheapest and most convenient of them all—the sun bath. Have you seen of a sunny day in winter a porker stretched full length on his side, absorbing the rays of the sun and winking with delight? Have you seen old towser, full of instinct, follow porker's example, and after lying in blissful quietness for a while, get up and frisk about like a young cur, thoughtless of the cares of to-morrow. He has been taking a sun bath, and the effect has been to fill him with new energy and life. Nature taught him, and he gets the benefit of the lesson. Men may be seen seeking the sunny side of the street during winter weather, and they are only following the example of the animal guided by instinct. They are taking a sun bath, and will feel its invigorating effects without knowing why.

Levington's Key to Masonry.
This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:
"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."
The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:
"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."
This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,
Price. $1.35.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene. and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

BY PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD, OF WHEATON COLLEGE.

This is now published in three tracts of four pages each. Price of each, 50 cents per 100; $4 per 1000.

TRACT No. 1, PART FIRST—Shows the origin of Speculative Freemasonry, and is entiled "HISTORY OF MASONRY."

TRACT No. 1, PART SECOND—Is entitled "DESPOTIC CHARACTER OF FREEMASONRY"

TRACT No. 1, PART THIRD—Is entitled "FREEMASONRY A CHRIST-EXCLUDING RELIGION."

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 2:

MASONIC MURDER,

By REV. J, R. BAIRD, of Pleasantville, Pa., a seceding Mason who has taken 17 degrees. A 2-page tract at 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 3:

SECRETS OF MASONRY,

BY ELI TAPLEY.

This is a 4-page Illustrated Tract, showing the signs, grips and pass-words, of the first three degrees. 50 cents per 100, or $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 4:

GRAND! GREAT GRAND!!

BY PHILO CARPENTER.

This is a 2-page tract, calling the attention of the public to the despotic and ridiculous titles of Freemasonry. Price 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT. NO, 5:

Extracts From Masonic Oaths and Penalties, as Sworn to by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island.

This tract is a reprint of a tract published in 1834, and is a very weighty document. A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 6:

Hon. John Quincy Adams' Letter.

Giving His and His Father's Opinion of Freemasonry (1831.);

AND

Hon. James Madison's Letter,

Giving His Opinion of Freemasonry (1832).

Both of these letters, in one 4-page tract, at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 7:

SATAN'S CABLE-TOW.

A 4-page tract. This is a careful analysis of the character of Masonic oaths, and shows them to be most blasphemous and unchristian; and the Masonic Cable Tow is clearly shown to be the Cable Tow by which Satan is leading thousands to eternal death. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 8:

Is a 2-page double tract, "ILLUSTRATED." The first page represents a Mason proclaiming the wonderful wisdom and benevolence of the order, with an article below, entitled "Freemasonry is only 152 Years Old," and gives the time and place of its birth.

The second side is entitled, "Murder and Treason not Excepted," and shows that the Masonic order is treasonable in its constitution, and is both anti-Republican and anti-Christian. Price 25 cents per 100; $2 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 9, ILLUSTRATED:

FREEMASONRY IN THE CHURCH.

Copy of a petition for the higher degrees of Freemasonry, in which Blasphemous and Despotic Titles are enumerated and prayed for. The Copy was printed for the use of "Occidental Sovereign Consistory S. P. R. S.," 32d degree—a Chicago Lodge—and was ordered by a deacon of a Christian Church who is Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Ill.

TRACT NO. 10:

CHARACTER AND SYMBOLS OF FREEMASONRY.

A 2-page tract, (ILLUSTRATED) by its "Grand Secretaries, Grand Lecturers, Perfect Prince Freemasons, Grand Inspector, Inquisitor Commanders, Grand High Priests," etc. The wonderful symbolical meaning of "the Cable Tow," "the Square and Compass," "the Lamb Skin, or white Apron," and "the Common Gavel," are given in the exact words of the highest Masonic authority. 25 cents per 100 or $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 11;

Address of Niagara County Association, New York.

TO THE PUBLIC;

Concerning the Morgan Murder, and the character of Freemasonry, as shown by this and other Masonic murders. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 12:

JUDGE WHITNEY AND MASONRY.

This tract contains a condensed account of Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois, on charge of unmasonic conduct in bringing Samuel L. Keith the murderer of Ellen Slade, and a member of his Lodge, to justice, with Judge Whitney's snbseqnent renunciation of Masonry,

An 8-page tract, $1.00 per 100; $8.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 14:

GRAND LODGE MASONRY.

ITS RELATION TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

Opening address before the Monmouth Convention, by PRES. J. BLANCHARD of WHEATON COLLEGE. This is a 16-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 15:

MASONIC OATHS NULL AND VOID.

A clear and conclusive argument proving the invalidity of any oath or obligation to do evil. By REV. I. A. HART, Secretary National Christian Association. Published by special order of the Association. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 16:

HON. SETH M. GATES ON FREEMASONRY.

PROOF THAT THE INSTITUTION THAT MURDERED MORGAN IS UNCHANGED IN CHARACTER

This is a letter to the Monmouth Convention by Hon. Seth M. Gates who was Depnty Sheriff of Genesee County, and also Secretary of the Leroy Lodge at the time of Morgan's Abduction. A 4-page tract, 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 17:

Origin, Obligations and Expenses of The Grange.

WITH A CONSTITUTION OF A FARMERS' CLUB.

This little tract ought to be put into the hands of every Farmer in the United States. Four-page tract, 50 cents per 100; $4 00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 18:

HON. WM. H. SEWARD ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Extracts from a Speech on Know-Nothingism in the U. S. Senate in 1855.

By REV. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Chur ,

WORCESTER, MASS.

This is onr first German tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT

TO THE YOUNG MEN OF AMERICA. Postage, 3 cents per 100 Tracts. Tracts Free.

Publishers' Department.

We ask the especial attention of our readers in Indiana, Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania; and, in fact, all the other States, to the article on the Cynosure by Rev. J. T. Kiggins, endorsed by the Executive Committee of the Indiana State Association. Shall there not be a general, strong and continuous effort everywhere to increase the circulation of the Cynosure? Ask God's blessing on your efforts, look to him for wisdom and work for new subscribers.

The exposition of the grange in the Cynosure has been completed, and it will soon be issued in book form. We would like to publish as many testimonies as to its truthfulness, by seceding grangers, who have read it, as possible.

Please send us your endorsement of it PROMPTLY if you think it deserves it.

A young man of talent, honor and truthfulness, who graduates at Hamilton College, N. Y., this summer, and can furnish good testimonials as to his character from his faculty, and one who is a clear-headed opposer of secret societies, desires a situation as teacher for next year.

A well educated German, an opposer of secret societies, who can furnish good recommendations, desires a situation as book-keeper in Chicago. For further information concerning either of these young men, address Ezra A. Cook & Co.

"The Brief History of the National Christian Association, is decidedly and deservedly popular with the friends. It is just what we have needed, for a long time." From Rev. J. P. Stoddard, Gen. Agent, N. C. A. Send for it 25c, single copies post paid.

A NEW PAMPHLET. HISTORY OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—This History contains a tabular view of General and State Conventions, A HISTORY OF THE ASSOCIATION, testimonies of religious bodies against secret societies with statistics of same, Brief Opinions of some eminent men on secret societies, List of General, local and auxiliary Associations, etc., etc.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

CLUB RATES, INCLUDING POSTAGE.

Twenty subscriptions for six months count the same as ten for a year.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

Topics of the Time.

The new Attorney General Pierrepont promises the country a thorough investigation of the misdemeanors of federal marshalls at the South; and the country bids him God speed, not without some doubt of his absolute success, for he has undertaken what every one knows to be a heavy job. Already in view of the raids of Jewell and Bristow the opposition are sneering at "party measures." Doubtless the Republican party has hope of future favor only in cleansing its Augean stables, and only he who places party above country will say aught but to encourage the purification of the government offices. Let the Democratic Congress elect rejoice if relieved of an ugly job. But here's the trouble. They are rather gleeful in hope of probing the old sores of their opponents. But if the work is undertaken honestly, and only so is there any hope from it or in it, let carping cease. When it plainly appears a party measure, undertaken with a great show for doing little, and to tide over the next election, the party is a traitor and its indictment should be followed by annihilation.

Circumstances connected with the wreck of the steamship Schiller modify in some respects the first report and forcibly suggest some reforms in ocean travel. The vessel was firstclass in every respect, the captain was an experienced seaman, but the crew was an inferior set and free access was had to a quantity of liquor. One of the saved passengers says that a large number of the passengers and crew obtained liquor and became helplessly drunk after the vessel struck and were washed into the sea in dozens. The seamanship of the captain was nothing against an incapable and drunken crew, who rushed to the boats and swamped them; and the managers who shipped such men must be greatly responsible for the calamity. While the improvements in railroading and navigation of inland waters have wonderfully diminished the risks of travel, it is a marked fact that ocean travel maintains its heavy death-roll, and a majority of the saved are never the passengers. No doubt a drunken and disorderly crew are responsible for the three hundred and fifty lost lives of the Schiller.

The Governor of Missouri has braved a vast amount of rationalistic scorn by proclaiming a day of fasting and prayer to Almighty God for the removal of the grasshopper plague. From the analogy of God's dealings with other nations it is for these very scorners that the nations suffer. They stand in the same relation to the Divine government as did the Hebrews, who were plainly told (but not more than we) the consequences of disobedience—"If thou will not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD" This is very like the condition of a great majority of the American people; they neither obey God's commands nor fear his name. Were it not for the "ten righteous" among us, to human view, the destruction of elder nations would fall on us. Like judgments we already have, but we are not yet humbled. The grasshopper plague last year swept the western border of our continental supply region. Now it works eastward on the famous Kansas-Missouri border, and if unchecked by rains what hinders the march of this tireless, remorseless army across our prairie system with the same results as last year? Already it is reported east of the Mississippi, and the long days of summer have not yet begun; those who scoff at a judgment of God striking down the poor settlers of the West, may realize the fitness of things when their own hopes are brought low and they see in their own hearts and lives the reason why those ministers to our pride, as well as to our necessities, are taken away. Let us be devoutly thankful that by judgments upon our persons those more fearful ones against our spiritual interests may be removed; and that we may hope never to behold that day when the Lord God shall "send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord" when men may "run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord and shall not find it."

Are we to have another military President? A New York rumor says that "his Eminence Prince Cardinal Archbishop" McCloskey and the Jesuit leaders want to elect one in the person of Gen. Sherman, and the Herald, their organ, will undertake to carry his name before the people. Gen. Sherman is considered a man of some originality and smartness in army matters, and has written a book; subject, Wm. T. Sherman. Moreover, although not known to favor any particular church or religion himself, his wife is zealous papist, and so are his relatives on her side. He also once attempted a civic treaty with the rebels Joe Johnson and J. C. Breckenridge, in which they took a mean advantage of him and made their surrender as good as a victory. But, in spite of all advantages and disadvantages Gen. Sherman may make a good President. It would have the appearance of wisdom, however, if, having in mind the temptation of appointments, and the constituency putting him forward, and the remembrance of his former attempt at dabbling with statesmanship, and the example of Gen Grant, he should conclude to "let well enough, alone."

THE CONTINENTAL SABBATH.—CHRISTIAN ACTIVITY.—THE "VEREINS HOUSE" AND ITS OCCUPANTS.—AN HISTORICAL CENTER.—GERMAN REFORMERS OF TODAY.

LEIPZIG, Germany, March 31, 1875.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Knowing the interest your readers take in the progress of the cause of truth everywhere, I trust you will find space in your columns for a few words regarding the state of Christ's kingdom in this great nation of Germany.

Here, as everywhere, the conflict between the good and evil is continuous and persistent, even more desperate than Americans are wont to imagine, since they have too imperfect a conception of the great hindrances and obstacles with which the followers of Christ here have to contend. How very poorly, for instance, do Americans comprehend the difficulties that Christ's followers here meet with in consequence of this evil habit, so prevalent, of secularizing the holy Sabbath. It is very evident that one of the greatest disasters that can befall a nation is to be deprived of the sacred influence of this day. Immeasurably greater are then the temptations to evil and sin on this day than on any of the other seven. It is deplorable with what blind and slavish resignation a numerous class of persons will yield themselves to worldly amusements and Christless frivolity, where once this evil habit has become prevalent. For Christ's servants, under such adverse circumstances, to engage the attention of this class of people to the contemplation of serious religious subjects seems well nigh impossible. Many of them scarcely ever visit places of worship and even when they do they receive but little benefit from the service, since the impressions that are perchance made on their minds, are speedily dissipated by the great frivolity and many allurements outside. Doubtless much more injurious to the cause of truth is this evil habit, into which all Germany has drifted, than the influence and the intrigues of all the atheists and infidels of both Germany and France, —than the efforts of all these united to subvert the truth, and bring discredit on the cause of Christ. As a sickening miasma, wafted by the breezes of the otherwise pure and wholesome air, oft scatters death and desolation in every direction, so does the desecration of the holy Sabbath effect the moral atmosphere, prevading and poisoning the very souls of men. Indeed, the influence of the writings of Strauss and Renan and that class of thinkers is not to be compared with this great evil, which is so sadly undermining the labors and earnest endeavors of the faithful followers of Christ.

Would that Americans knew what the devoted followers of Christ here have to contend with, where the sacredness of the Lord's day is so lightly esteemed, and where its precious hours are devoted to selfish indulgences and the gratification of worldly impulses! Then would they be enabled better to appreciate the labors of the faithful Christians of their own country, through whose efforts their fair land was in a measure preserved from this evil. Their ignorance of what society n Germany really suffers from the want of the Sabbath's holy influences, this is some palliation for their lukewarmness; otherwise the conduct of many Americans with reference to this matter would be blameworthy in the highest degree, while the action of those who, in the specious pretense of advocating the cause of freedom, clamor incessantly for the abrogation of all Sunday laws, of all laws forbidding disorderly and worldly tumult on that day, would seem utterly unpardonable.

But enough hereof. Though lamentable as is the experience of Germany in this respect, and though great are the discouragements also for other reasons under which Christians here have to prosecute their work, it is to be hoped that a fairer and brighter future is awaiting them. Even now it would seem they are entering on a new era of Christian progress, and with renewed faith and zeal do they already plan and labor in many parts of Germany. Especially does this encouraging religious activity manifest itself here in Leipzig. Instead of contenting themselves, as formerly, with merely imparting religious instruction on the Sabbath from the pulpit and to the children in the public schools, they are now availing themselves of various other methods for creating an interest in the subject of religion and inciting the people to a holy Christian life and walk. Not less than half a dozen societies have been formed in this city within the last few years, and are now in active operation, doing an excellent work in scattering religious truths, laboring with the lost and wandering ones, and persuading them to return to the fold of Christ. Nor are these true-hearted Christian men content with merely working for the present generation; they are at the same time incessantly planning and laboring to increase the usefulness of their societies for the future. A beautiful manifestation of this spirit we find in the erection of a neat and substantial building which is to serve as a home for the different societies, and a sort of rallying point for all who have a heart for the glorious mission work in which they are engaged. A commendable degree of self-denial and Christian devotedness has been exercised in the completion of this commodious and excellent building. It is no wonder that those who helped build are greatly cheered and encouraged at the accomplishment of so good a work. May the "Vereins House," as it is called, with its cheering and inviting apartments, be to them all the more dear because it was built at the cost of so much self-sacrificing, self-denying exertion, and may its halls be all the more serviceable in the dissemination of the glad tidings of salvation to the lost and needy!

Among the societies which have especially endeared themselves to God's children, and which have their headquarters in the "Vereins House," may be mentioned first of all, "The Society for the Distribution of Alms." That the object of this society is a most commendable one is sufficiently obvious from the name it bears, and a knowledge of the men connected with it is full assurance that its work is far reaching and thorough. Its members take great pains to become personally acquainted with the needy and destitute, and, while supplying their temporal necessities, make every endeavor to learn their spiritual wants, and break to them the bread of life.

The society most intimately connected with this one is the "Home Mission." Its labors, in some respects, are very similar to those of the first mentioned, just as its ultimate aim is the same; yet it has also its own appropriate field and peculiar plan of labor. This society, likewise, as the first mentioned, embraces an extensive membership of true hearted men and women, who labor not for hire; but impelled by the love of Christ they work and pray and toil to bring back to their Father's house the lost and erring ones. Most encouraging and gratifying is it to find that the Lord has such true and faithful servants in places where we least expect it.

Not any less interesting than the foregoing are the labors of the Sabbath-school Society. They have different places where they assemble the little ones for instruction and holy song; but their chief and most inviting hall is of course in the "Vereins House." The average number of children in attendance at this school is about seven hundred, and a most interesting gathering it is. I never saw a body of children so well behaved, so enthusiastic, and eager to learn, so entirely devoted to their teacher and to the study of the word of God. Their little faces seem to be fairly aglow with enthusiasm for the work, and it is remarkable with what promptness and aptness they answer the questions put to them, and then to hear them join so heartily and happily in their songs of praise is truly cheering and gratifying. So general is the spirit of sweet devotion and good will that one is fairly borne along with the common impulse and ready to exclaim, it is good to be here.

Leipzig and vicinity has many objects of interest to engage the attention of the visitor, many consecrated spots and monuments in commemoration of events well nigh as important as any in the history of all Europe. Here it was that Luther, the great reformer, achieved his first great victory over the champion of the Catholic church, from which period may be dated the commencement of the Reformation of the sixteenth century, which forms so important an era in history. Here it was where the noble Christian warrior, Gustavus Adolphus, achieved his two great victories over the hordes of Jesuits and Catholic mercenaries, and where he died in defense of that Reformation ushered in by Luther and his co-laborers. Here in Leipzig it was, moreover, where the Germans conquered Napoleon the Great on the 17th, 18th and 19th of October, 1813; whereby all Germany was liberated from subjection to French arrogance. So wherever one may turn, every locality has its memorial to carry the mind back to the distant past and entertain it with the most varied scenes of by-gone centuries. Yet none of these more engage our sympathies, none have a greater claim on our hearty approval, than the praiseworthy deeds and endeavors of some who are at present on the scene of action. Well may we accord to the faithful laborers of to-day the same honor that we render to the former Christian heroes, and be ever grateful that the Lord is still blessing the world with such noble, self-denying men, whose places of labor are most cheerful and radiant with heavenly influences.

What is furthermore worthy of note in the conduct of these German Christians, is that the more earnest and devoted they are the less are they disposed to indulge in sharp and minute criticisms, of which the German scholars are so very fond, and the more harmony and concert of action prevails among them. And this will be more and more so as men shall become better acquainted with each other's views and principles and when they shall more fully realize that with reference to the one thing needed, they are all agreed, though differing and apparently at variance may be the phases and glimpses which they may behold of the infinite wisdom revealed in the Word of God. Yes, more and more will this friendliness and good-will abound among these Germans as they shall become more deeply concerned for the souls of men, and hence more fully realize the folly of Christians wasting their powers and weakening their influence in disputing about mere words and about passages of minor importance, when it is so evident that, among us finite beings, so differently constituted and accustomed to so different habits of thought, differences of opinions must needs be with reference to the infinite truths of an all-wise Creator and moral Governor of the universe, which can at best be comprehended but in part.

Such are a few glimpses of Christianity in Germany. Though it has its discouraging aspects, it has also its bright side; and considering all, Christ's followers may well take heart and with renewed zeal apply themselves to the work, trusting to the Lord that he will effect a removal of all hindrances, and as the beautiful colors of the rainbow, the autumn leaves, the tiny flowers,—yea, of all nature sweetly blend in one, the bright clear light of the sun, so he will cause all the different phases of his divine teachings beautifully to harmonize, that the simple truth may shine forth in all its fulness, in all its splendor and majesty. F.

"Church Tests."

I desire to say a few words to Bishop Weaver on his article under the above heading in the Christian Cynosure of April 29th; for I, with him would seek the true and right solution of the great social and moral problem of the world. I am sick at heart at the social condition of the world and church too, and believe men could as easily make a world as to devise a test (of fellowship), or crucible to purge the dross, or standard to guide any safely. I claim to be an uncompromising enemy of monopolies, political, social, or religious; and hence, am opposed to secret societies, and all human tests: first, because the thing itself is wrong, a virtual impeachment of the wisdom of the Divine test; secondly, because such tests work wrong, and will forever prevent the very end all true Christians desire, and that Jesus prayed for, viz., the unification of all true lovers of Jesus, and consequent power which alone can bring the world to believe in him, according to his last great prayer. Hence I must deny "the right of any church or society to establish a test of membership by which it may exclude (also) those whom they recognize as Christians."

I have an increasing love for the Cynosure, and I say it too, in love, the article seemed to me so out of harmony with it spirit, and grated so on my spirit (pardon me,) that I thought I would ask the privilege of a respectful notice of some of its points.

I have been bold to speak my mind against the grange, and Odd-fellowship, and Masonry, etc. I have been asked to show something better, and told, "if the churches were what they ought to be, and no monopolies in the world, these societies would not be needed and would disband. I reply. I have a better plan; that to fight monopolies with monopolies, and one test by setting up another, never will succeed, simply because such a course is not of God.

Do you believe, brother, a "distiller, rum-seller, dancing-master, slave-dealer" would find a home among any of the churches? If so, is it not as sad a commentary on "human tests," as the fact that "a man with a dozen wives" can find a home with the self-styled "church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints," (which is only Masonry revamped). You say, "It has been asserted a thousand times, that the only test a church has a right to set up is a profession of faith in the Lord Jesus." Did you ever know an Apostle to ask any other test? True, you rightly go on to show that "all righteousness" was included, implied in this. But was "close communion" or "open communion, "Calvinism" or "Armenianism," "restorationism," or any other ism?

Alexander asked the conquered King Porus, how he would be uesd? "Like a king," said he, "Do you desire nothing else"? "No, all things are in this one word." So, it seems to me, "like Christ" includes all things pertaining to life and godliness. "If thou believest with all thine heart." While all the social monstrosities and theological absurdities have grown under the assumed right that any class of people may make a test and work their way to orthodoxy by gaining wealth and numbers. True, "there is a (fearfully) growing tendency towards liberalism, (more than) an inkling toward widening church doors all for the purpose of increasing the members and wealth of the church." Party "shiboleths," passwords and grips are exalted above purity and piety. No funeral knell ever sounded so mournfully to me as the thought that the answers to the question, "Are you a Christian?" may be given as you suggest.

In short, my dear brother, my only solution to these great problems is, make all men honest and sincere. Lead them to understand we all have common claims and interests and destiny. Restore the original test, as given by the Great Head of the church, and let every one's character and fellowship be tried by the rule he has given. Let all rally to the blood-stained banner on which is inscribed, "One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all who is above all, and through all, alland in you." How soon it will appear that "they that are for us are more than they that are against us." "Cursed be man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm." If we would make successful battle against the princes of this world, we must follow closely the readings of God's word with which his spirit is ever and inseparably in league. Believe me sincerely and anxiously laboring for the triumph of truth and the cause of Christ.

R. Faurot.

There is much force and beauty in those truthful words of Lord Macaulay, as the mouthpiece of the British nation, as to the value and blessings of the day of rest—apart altogether from its higher value to the Christian as a day of communion and fellowship with his Saviour, which is well worth repeating. "The natural difference between Campania and Spitzbergen is trifling when compared with the difference between a country inhabited by men full of bodily and mental vigor, and a country inhabited by men sunk in bodily and mental decrepitude. Therefore it is we are not poorer, but richer, because we have through many ages rested from our labors one day in seven. That day is not lost, while industry is suspended, while the plow lies in the furrow, while the exchange is silent, while no smoke ascends from the factory, a process is going on quite as important to the wealth of nations, as any process which is performed on more busy day. Man, the machine of machines—the machine compared with which all the contrivances of the Watts and Arkwrights are worthless—is repairing and winding up, so that he returns to his labors on the Monday, with clearer intellect, with livelier spirits, with corporal vigor."

Did Masons Murder Morgan?

BY GEORGE THOMPSON.

They have been charged with it for nearly forty years, and they, as persistently, deny the charge.

Well, this is natural. A prisoner at the bar, charged with crime, is asked, "Guilty or not guilty?" And it is a pretty general practice to reply, "Not guilty." And we are told that "The law holds a man innocent until he is proven to be guilty;" and on account of the sworn secrecy of Masons, it has been a hard matter to prove it on them. But sometimes there are cases of murder, and no positive proof can be obtained against any one; but there are strong circumstantial evidences, very convincing. Now since the crime is positively denied, we must proceed to trial, and see what can be ascertained bearing on the case; if there are any circumstantial evidences.

1. Wm. Morgan was living in Batavia, N. Y., in the year 1820. He was well known in that vicinity, and known to be a Mason of three degrees.

2. He wrote what he called a revelation of these degrees.

3. Various charges of crime were brought against him by the Masons, and he was seized and imprisoned.

4. Suddenly he is missing. His family and friends cannot find out anything about him. Excitement runs high; but Morgan is not found.

5. He is seen in the night in a tight carriage, gagged, and his hands tied behind him, being driven away by Masons, who boast "We've got him at last." A living witness, well known to me, and who saw him, testifies to this fact; and it bears heavily on the matter before us. It is a strong circumstantial proof.

6. He was traced to Fort Niagara, where he was confined. Up to this time he was in the hands of Masons, who were mad at him because of his revelations.

7. From thence, nothing more can be learned of Morgan for about a year. Many Masons were arrested and brought before courts; but they would not testify. Some said, "To tell what I know, would be to convict myself, and I shall say nothing." So they suffered fines and imprisonment for contempt of court, rather than lose their jewel.

8. At length a body is found, which, after long and full examination, is pronounced by a coroner's jury, to be the body of the missing Wm. Morgan!

How is it recognised?—(a) Witnesses had been examined, under oath, long before this body was found, who described the person of Morgan with any, and all peculiar marks upon it. This testimony was duly recorded. They spoke of a certain scar on the head, covered by the hair, of his having lost two front teeth, and other marks. (b) This testimony was compared with the body found. The little scar was found as described! The two teeth were missing. (c) The wife produced the very teeth which she had preserved. (d) The doctor who pulled them tried them in the vacant place, and they exactly fitted. (e) His teeth were all double, and these two corresponded. (f) His wife recognized the socks he had on. She said the clothes were not those he wore at home. (g) Masons hired another woman to claim the body as being the body of her lost husband.

9. Masons say Morgan is yet alive. If so they know where he is—or how do they know he is not dead? When last seen he was in their hands; now if he is alive, let them produce the living man, and they will at once disprove the charge against them of murdering him. How easy to roll off all this odium on the craft, which caused 45,000 out of 50,000 to withdraw from the lodge, to enter it no more! And if they do not produce him, we shall hold them to the charge; and they must not blame us for it. We cannot do otherwise so long as the circumstances are so strong against them.

10. A Mason, H. L. Valance, on his death bed in Racine county, Wisconsin, confessed the murder, and all the particulars connected with it, and his own part in the transaction. It was, in the Fort, resolved that he should be put to death. The executioners were selected by lot, three men drawing tickets with the letter "D" (death) on them. The rest left. The three took him in a boat, in the darkness, tied heavy weights to his body and pushed him into the water. He tells how Morgan felt, and what he said when they told him he must die; but they were drawn to execute him, and they did it. And the man could not die, till he had "made a clean breast of it," and confessed the whole.

11. All this is in strict accordance with their fearful oaths.

12. And Masons, and ministers, at the time of Morgan's exposure said "If he has revealed Masonry, he ought to be put to death. and I would be willing to be one to aid in so doing."

13. And others, since, have been put to death for the same cause, in different parts, and in various ways. They have been found with the heart and tongue cut out, in accordance with the oath taken.

14. The venerable Pres. Finney received anonymous letters threatening his life if he did not stop writing on Masonry; showing that the same spirit still prevails.

To sum up and put all together makes out a clear case. Morgan was a Mason. He wrote an exposé. This was in violation of an oath, invoking death if he violated it. He is seized by Masons. He is last seen in their hands; and has been missing till now. He was seen bound and gagged, on the way to Fort Niagara, where he was confined. And a dying Mason confesses himself one of three who closed up the fearful tragedy, by sinking him in the deep waters. And when found, the body was recognized as the body of Morgan. It is plain that he was murdered. Who did it? Unless Masons can show that his murder was not in accordance with their oaths, and unless they will show what did become of him, as they had him in possession, they as a body, must be held guilty of his death! And before the bar of public sentiment they have stood, and stand, convicted of his murder. It has gone forth, and cannot be taken back, that Wm. Morgan was violently put to death by Freemasons, for writing an expose of the first three degrees of the system. And how ridiculous for them to say, as one said to me, "It is all a myth." And if one should reveal Masonry, and tell everything just as it is, you could not believe him, for he would perjure himself,"—when such testimony, given at the risk of life, would be of the utmost reliability. Too late in the day, to deny the crime! If they would not be accessory, let them come out from the bloody compact. —Leland, Mich.

A Lady's Questions for Masons and Churches.

1. Is Freemasonry deistical, in that it practically ignores the religion of Christ in promising future blessedness through some means other than through the atonement?

2. Does the order shield criminals from justice and conceal crime; and are its members bound by terrible oaths to cause the death of any who may divulge its secrets?

3. Does Freemasonry mix pagan with Christian rites in its services for the dead?

4. Is not a reliable insurance company a more safe and profitable means of investment?

5. Do the wives of its members suffer a constant and greivous insult at its hands?

6. Is not a Christian's influence greatly diminished by becoming a Freemason?

7. If all these queries meet an affirmative answer, are not all Christian people, ministers or laymen, bound to use their utmost influence against it?

8. Would members of any given church, where Masonry was tolerated, be justified in joining some other church, where a decided testimony was given against secret societies?—N. Y. Witness.

Nothing is more strange than the reproduction of old thoughts under the guise of new and advanced opinions. It would seem as if the human mind with all its restless activity, were destined to revolve in an endless circle. Its progress is marked by many changes and discoveries, it sees and understands far more clearly the facts that lie along the line of its route and the modes or laws under which those facts occur; but this route in its higher level always returns upon itself. Nature and all its secrets become better known, and the powers of nature are brought more under human control; but the sources of nature, and life, and thought —all the ultimate problems of being—never became more clearly intelligible. Not only so but the last efforts of human reasoning on these subjects are even as the first. Differing in form they are in substance the same. Bold as the course of scientific adventure has seemed for a time, it ends very much as it began; the men of the nineteenth century looked over the same abysses of speculation as did their forefathers thousands of years before. No philosophy of theism can be said to have advanced beyond the book of Job; Prof. Tyndall, addressing the world from the throne of modern science—which the chair of the British Association ought to be—repeats the thoughts of Democritus and Epicurus, as the last guesses of the modern scientific mind. —Blackwood.

The Causes of Alarm in Europe.

France has reorganized her army, and established her government under a military leader. Though the Republic is nominally confirmed, the monarchical and imperial elements in the present Assembly might look to a war as giving a chance for the restoration of monarchy or of the empire. France has sought to renew her ancient alliance with Italy and Austria; and the meeting at Venice might signify the consummation of such alliance. Austria has grievances against Germany that could prompt her to such a union; but wherefore should Italy turn aside from Germany, whose friendship is just now her true help and strength? Simply through vanity. Unwilling as are the Italians to be ruled by the Pope, they take pride in the idea that the whole Catholic world is ruled from Rome, and that Italy has thus far retained its old universal empire. Besides, Bismarck had wounded their vanity by suggesting that the independence guaranteed to the Pope should be so modified that he could not abuse it to the annoyance of neighboring powers.

Upon the other side, the pride of Belgium had been wounded by a summons from Berlin to be more mindful of her pledges of neutrality. The Ultramontanes in Germany receive open tributes of sympathy from their Belgian neighbors; and a madcap in Belgium who wrote to the Archbishop of Paris offering for a certain sum to assassinate Bismarck was not fitly dealt with by the public. While notes were passing between Berlin and Brussels, the rumor came that Belgium had agreed to allow France to march an army into Germany through her territory; and so we were on the eve of an explosion that would have convulsed Europe.

The immediate danger is over. But every year makes it more easy for France to find allies, and reduces that prestige of Germany, which, of late years, has enabled her to dictate to France and to smaller powers; and anxious as Germany is to keep out of war, the attempt to carry her anti-papal policy into Catholic nations may rouse a combination that shall bring on once more the battle of Armageddon. —Christian Union.

A writer of no particular religious bias, but well read in the history of nations and churches thus defends the use of the Bible in schools:

"It is the story of the way in which a family grew into a tribe, and then a cluster of tribes, and how these were welded into a nation, and of how that nation prospered according to the earnestness with which it lived up to its ethical standard, or declined as it fell away from it. Juridical antiquarians like Maine, vouch for the accuracy of the earlier part of the story; they have verified it by comparison with what we know of other communities. Historians like Niebuhr, assure us that the latter part of the history is trustworthy to an extent that puts it out of comparison with the classic historians. Independent critics like Huxley, say that its general moral influence, and its wonderful adaptation to the young, are such as to make it an indispensable instrument of education. The educated Hindoos and Moslems of India declare that the English literature is very largely unintelligible without it; and experience shows that the government schools of that country, in which the Bible is not read, cannot compete in popularity with the missionary schools where it is. Where two such schools come into competition, the former is invariably killed. As for the New Testament, especially, its ideas and phrases are part of the warp and woof of our intellectual life. Not to know its contents is to be laughed at (or worse) in almost any social circle. What book more fit for the schools of any civilized community? Only the factious opposition of a few dissenters from the general faith prevents a general assent to its use; when that dies away, people will wonder that persons of any opinion ever opposed it."

—The Aurora Beacon says that at the late Episcopal Convention in the State of Pennsylvania, Bishop Stevens stated that he had declined to receive as candidates for orders members of church guilds and secret associations. He charged that these associations had been the means of sowing the seeds of error, which were bringing forth the fruits of discord and schism.

—Among the experiences given at the Connecticut convention is a very characteristic one. A brother from Litchfield county said their minister and his wife "were opposed to having brother Levington lecture in their church, because of the fear they had of injuring the revival interest, but they got up a sleighride party, and went off into another neighborhood and had a dance."

Notices.

The Seventh Anniversary of the National Christian Association will be held in Library Hall in the City of Pittsburgh, Pa., June 8th to 10th, 1875.

The following notices require immediate attention. Write before the matter is forgotten:

The National Convention at Syracuse voted that the Recording Secretary secure the names of all secedcrs from the Masonic lodge. Friends throughout the country are requested to send any names from among their acquaintance, which should be on this list. If possible, their endorsement of Morgan's exposition, their address, when and where they entered and left the lodge should be sent. Let there be a large list to report. Hundreds have openly left the order within a few years. Send on their names.

Friends who have pledged contributions, now due, for the work in general, or for any State fund, especially Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, are earnestly requested to send in the amount without delay, that all arrears for our agents may be settled before the anniversary. The salaries of the agents in the States mentioned are pledged by the National Association and contributions for them will be best sent to its Treasurer. The State Societies of New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa, have made their own arrangements with their agents. Let there be the best possible report from these States.

Important Notice to Delegates.

Persons attending the Anniversary of the N. C. A. at Pittsburgh, June 8th to 10th, can procure for themselves and for members of their families special rates over the Pennsylvania Railroad and all its branches, the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis R. R., and all its branches, the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R. and all its branches, including Mansfield, Mich., and Coldwater. To do this persons must send their names with a stamped envelope directed to themselves, in advance. Those intending to pass over the Pennsylvania road or any of its branches will apply as above to Rev. S. Collins, No. 55, 9th St., Pittsburgh, who will immediately inclose a certificate and return the stamped, directed envelope. Persons intending to pass over either of the other main lines or their tributaries will apply by letter to H. L. Kellogg, No. 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

N. B.—You must apply as above and obtain your certificates before applying for your ticket at your home office, as no reduction will be made to any one not furnished with a certificate before buying his ticket. The principle points connected with Pittsburgh by this arrangement are New York City, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Erie, Toledo, Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, etc. Certificates will be honored not only at principal stations but at any station on the entire lines and their branches.

New Castle, Pa., May 18th, 1875.

Urgent Notice.

To all friends of the anti-Secret Reform in Pennsylvania. We hope to see many of you at the National Convention at Pittsburgh, June 8th and 9th. We wish to call a meeting at that time of the Penn'a. delegation, for better acquaintance, for mutual counsel as to enlarged efforts in our State. Let us rally and organize and work more fully in this opening and much needed enterprise. Send delegates from every section and from every church and auxiliary and neighborhood.

Yours truly,

Ex. Com. Pa. State Ass'n.

Reform News.

The Work in Connecticut.

Windsor, Conn., May, 1875.

Dear Editor:—As yourself and our friends at the West are greatly interested in the Anti-masonic work here, especially since we have received from you such efficient help, by lecturers and tracts, I will endeavor to set before you, and the readers of the Cynosure, some of the efforts that have been put forth. The result we leave with God, and go on with the work. While we speak of the work in this place, we include the labors of brethren Fenton and Collins, who have stood shoulder to shoulder with me, and borne reproach for the cause of righteousness. I shall not attempt a report of the more abundant labors of brethren Conant and Bacon, of time and money spent, for I should utterly fail; but trust that their modesty will not prevent them from letting the readers of the Cynosure, and especially the friends of this State, know of some of the burdens assumed during the campaign, and that our friends in Connecticut will not be behind in sharing with them in the prosecution of the good cause. I write this as an invitation, and any funds sent to our treasurer will be faithfully disposed of.

But to our work here. The 20,000 pages of tracts you sent were taken in hand the night they came by express, and while we were watching all night by the bed of the sick, the work of folding went on day and night, until they were ready and assorted for a systematic distribution. I received also from Bro. Conant 500 large and neatly printed handbills of our State meeting, (and for Hartford 500 more.) We went from house to house, giving three to five tracts and a bill. Miles of houses were visited in this way, and Masons seemed to fairly tremble at the courageous and determined manner in which the work of informing the people, was carried out. At East Windsor Hill and South Windsor, a distance of over three miles, through a thickly settled place, and an enemies' camp, I passed in the tracts and handbills, and it being just before the dinner hour, they went into the hands of the ladies, for which I was very thankful. Found one minister, (Baptist) a Mason, and an extra lot went into the hands of his wife.

I feel that the ministry outside of the lodge, in this country, must take hold denounce this vile thing, called Freemasonry, or they, with lodge ministers, will suffer the wrath of God, and indignation of a people led astray. There are certain forces at work in our country, each aiming at the control of our government. The first war shout of the mobocracy, when our government tumbles, will be, "Down with the Priests." This sound we have heard interwoven in song, by certain styled reformers, in the past; a most natural result, in consequence of causing the people to err. The wild-beast governments of earth must be ground to pieces, to make way for the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, the promised heir to the throne of David, restored, and of the whole world. Amen! So may the Lord hasten the time, when he will take vengeance upon all that oppose him, Freemasonry, this modern anti-Christ, with the rest. I make no apology for this digression, for the Spirit reaches to the point of my pen. But to return.

We carried out the plan I suggested to you in reference to flooding the city of Hartford with tracts. The Monday previous to our State meeting, brethren Bacon, Collins, Fenton and myself, met in Hartford, and at noon and 4 P. M., took our station in front of four of the largest schools in the city, and gave to every boy and girl that came out a tract, which we are confident found their way, like Gideon's barley cake, into the very midst of the enemy's camp. We also put into the hands of two news-boys, handbills to scatter, besides what we gave out ourselves. Notices also of our Convention were published in two of the daily papers, so that the meeting and subject was thoroughly advertized.

Wednesday morning, April 28th, we were rejoiced to meet punctually the lecturers from York State, Elders Barlow, Stratton and Rathbun; also brethren, Conant, Greene and others. The Convention opened at the appointed hour, with but few assembled, only one lady, and she a faithful short-hand reporter of the Hartford Times. We have to acknowledge our regret and disappointment at the limited attendance during our convention, where a great deal of hard and faithful work was done. A larger meeting and more financial aid would have been secured in a smaller place like Willimantic, where the people were awake upon the subject, but I am convinced, that the full report which was spread before the people of Hartford, in the daily papers, would far outweigh in results what might be expected with a large attendance in another place. The indifferenc manifested, and the limited attendance, sufficiently proves the charge I made months ago, that the city of Hartford was wholly under, and given to this idolatry. Yet has a mighty leaven been left there, that with the blessing of Heaven will spread, and no power on earth can resist. Oh! thank the Lord that he can work, and none can hinder, which in due time shall surely be made manifest. We are not in the least discouraged, but realize that when we are weak, then are we strong, and they that be with us, are far more and mighty than they that be against us. To our brethren of York State, and to all who have given us their aid, council and sympathy, we extend our sincere thanks. And to you [the publishers,] who responded so liberally and promptly with so great an abundance of tracts, at a time most needed, shall see no cause for regret in so doing.

Before closing this article, I must give an account of the closing work of the week. Desiring to follow up the work here in Windsor I engaged Bro. Rathbun to go home with me at close of Convention Thursday evening, to remain over the Sabbath, and got Union Hall engaged for him to lecture in Friday and Saturday evenings. A few bills were put up Friday morning, and soon pulled down, and others sent to three of the district school, to be read by the teachers. Few only received a notice of the meeting, and the audience for Friday evening was thin, the lodge staying away without exception. Elder Rathbun gave a very dispassionate and effective lecture upon the religion of Masonry, which could not fail to impress the minds of his hearers. Saturday morning a few bills were put up with paste, and a fuller audience assembled, while Bro. R. discoursed upon the oaths and penalties of Masonry. Elder Rathbun left here Monday morning for the north, leaving behind him a pleasing remembrance of his visit, and carrying with him the sincere affections of with those of whom he became acquainted with.

An important item of business seems strangely to have been overlooked by all at our late convention, namely, the choosing of a delegate to the National Convention to meet in Pittsburgh next month. Bro. Conant is in correspondence with the brethren, and doubtless the omission will be attended to.

Yours, David J. Ellsworth.

Church Organization in White County, Ill.

Springerton, Ill., May 14, 1875.

As one of the good results of our work in anti-secrecy cause, I send you the following rules adopted by the Disciples of Christ at a regular meeting in their chapel in this place:

(1.) The elders of said church at said town and their successors in office shall constitute a board of trustees in whom shall be vested all church property belonging to said congregation for the use of such members of the same as sustain Christian characters and stand aloof from all secret organizations.

(2.) No Roman Catholic, "Brigham Young Mormon," "Joseph Smith Mormon," or self-styled "Latterday Saints," shall ever be permitted to teach, lecture or debate in our house of worship. Nor shall any one who belongs to any secret clique, clan or organization teach, lecture, or in anywise speak in the interests of such secret order.

(3.) The church clerk shall keep a correct account of all sums paid by members on church property.

The above rules are abridged but not otherwise changed. They passed without a dissenting voice. Thus we are determined to keep clear of all such impudent human humbugs. Other engagements greatly interfere with my lecture work, but I shall do what I can to spot Masonry every time I can. I greatly desire the prosperity of our good cause. Let us work on, hope on, heaven will smile on our effort. The reward will surely come. God speed you! How I enjoyed your just remark on sectarianism! Our blessed Saviour prayed that we might all be one. Amen. Yours truly,

JAMES SPRINGER.

Anti-grangism in Auglaize Co., Ohio.

MOULTON, O., May, 13, 1875.

Editor of the Christian Cynosure:

I wish to say a few words about the meetings Rev. D. S. Caldwell has been holding at this village. He spoke twice on Masonry, and once on the grange. The grangers were out, there being some from the neighboring granges; this being the first anti-grange meeting ever held in this part of the country. As a matter of course they tried to make out that the lecture was all false: some, however, said that a part was true. But, true or not, it made them cast down their eyes. They appeared as if something had happened, but were unable to tell from whence was the cause. I think some good has been accomplished by this meeting. May the cause ever prosper. May the Lord Jesus be with brother Caldwell through his labors and be pleased with his work.

Past Master Ronayne at Crystal Lake.

CRYSTAL LAKE, ILL., May 23.

For some weeks past every convenient fence and barn has been placarded with announcements that a Mr. Edmond Ronayne, of your city, Past Master of Keystone Lodge No. 639, would deliver a lecture on "Freemasonry, Its Baths and Sanguinary Penalties." Notwithstanding the uncertain state of the weather, Thompson's Hall was filled last night with a select audience. The lecturer appeared in full ret galia, wearing the insignia of office and jewels of Past Master, and for three hours kept his audience spell-bound, eloquently and earnestly dilating on "the diabolical system of this outlandish farce," as he termed it. He spoke from the standpoint of a Pas-Master Mason, and gave his experience of eighteen year's acquaintance with the nefarious system, during which time he found the order a school of licentiousness, proved its claims to benevolence baseless, and showed its false and ensnaring religious nature. He explained all the working-tools and paraphernalia of a Masonic Lodge, and initiated a candidate in the first degree, much to the delight of the large audience present.

What effect this will have on Masonry I know not, but certain it is it has struck an inquiring chord here both among the fraternity and the uninitiated.

The gentleman was requested to appear again, when he promised to work the second and third degrees.—Correspondent Chicago Tribune.

Correspondence.

A Masonic United Presbyterian Church.

MESSRS. EDS.:—The Philadelphia Presbytery of the United Presbyterian church, has a good practice of making a periodical Presbyterial visitation of the churches under its control. Such a visitation of the Fifth U. P. Church of Philadelphia, was held on an evening some two weeks since, and was duly announced from the pulpit on the preceding Sabbath. The visitation was made by a committee of two ministers and one elder, who represented the Presbytery. After the usual devotional exercises, the chairman of the visiting committee entered on the special duty of the visitation, by propounding to the young pastor a string of questions, respecting his duty and the congregation, which were truthfully answered. Next, each of the three elders was catechised separately respecting his performance of his duties as a member of the session, and the answers were everything that a saint could wish; in particular, each of the three answered affirmatively to the question, "Do you, by the faithful exercise of discipline, watch for souls as those who must give account?" or words to that effect. So far, all was made to appear smooth and beautiful outside, while every one of the congregation present knew that the asserted discipline in the congregation was a nullity and that the state of the congregation would be more truly described in the words of Scripture, as "full of dead men's bones and of all uncleanness."

Happily, after the catechising of the minister and elders was gone through, permission was requested and given to the people to speak, when it was boldly and directly charged, that, instead of the "discipline of the United Presbyterian church being faithfully carried out by the session, the congregation contained a number of Freemasons, and that probably members of all the secret societies were to be found among the members of it. The bag being once opened, not one cat only, but all the cats, were at once struggling to be let out of it! Many of the members declared and even the elders confessed, that they, as a session, had admitted Freemasons and other secretists, to membership: and one of the three elders even declared openly in the meeting to the visitors, when taken to task for his dereliction in not carrying out the discipline of the U. P. church against such secretists, that while he was an elder, he would admit all persons into the congregation whom he believed to be Christians, no matter what the laws or discipline of the church. The treasurer of the board of trustees, who is a Freemason, did not deny the charge made, that Freemasons and other secretists were rife in the congregation; but, on the contrary, he declared, in answer to the exhortations and reproofs of the visiting committee, that if the secretists in the congregation were to be excluded, three-fourths of the male members would be excluded! It is notorious that most, even the of young men of the congregation, belong to some secret society or other; and it is a fact, known to your correspondent, that in fixing the evening for a meeting, which the young men are desired to attend, it is necessary first to inquire whether or not their lodge meets on that evening. I close this brief account of the visitation meeting of the congregation, by observing, that the exposure of the past dereliction in duty of the session and of the demoralized state of the congregation, was complete. I might have added that of the trustees of the congregation, who have been managing the finances for some years, there are a number of Freemasons, the Treasurer (as already stated), who is still in office, being such, and the Secretary (recently resigned in consequence of charges of malversation brought against him before the session but not proven), being also a Freemasen; and how many more, if any, of the Trustees, your correspondent knows not. I am free to say, that I have, and carry in my pocket, a list of six Freemasons who are members of this congregation, which list I hereby offer to show to the skeptical U. P. editors of the U. P. Church both at Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

THE ACTION—RATHER NON-ACTION—OF THE PRESBYTERY.

The Presbytery met here on Tuesday week, the 4th in May, when the committee of visitation of the above congregation under its supervision, made a true and faithful report, and urged immediate and efficient measures to be taken, else the congregation would be ruined, there being much dissatisfaction among the people with the past management, both by the session and trustees. It is proper to say, that since the present excellent young pastor came to them, about a year since, only, no more secret-society men have been received. He is faithful and is universally respected, an able preacher, and an amiable man. But he is powerless, through the opposition of his elders and the prevalence of the Masonic influence in the membership, to reform the congregation.

Well, what did the Presbytery do? Reader, would you believe it? after spending two or three hours on the case, listening to the most damaging facts stated by their own visitation committee, the case was issued by the following mild resolution of Presbytery, which the clerk was instructed to communicate to the session of the Fifth Church:—"Recommend the session to take the proper steps to have their number increased as soon as possible!" That was the little mouse which came forth from the mountain in labor!

The committee reported two resolutions, first, that the session be instructed, as above; but the instruction was changed into a simple recommendation, as that would look like interference with the province of the session! And a second resolution also reported, cautioning the session for the future, was struck out, on the ground that it would imply a censure on the present pastor, who was acting faithfully.

But no censure was moved by any one against the elders, all three of whom had been grossly betraying their trust for years past; they go unwhipt of justice or church censure! And no censure, nor any other "steps" were taken to bring these Freemasons and other secretists to trial; or was even proposed by any member of the Presbytery, either minister or elder! They, too, remain in good standing in the congregation and in the U. P. church for time to come! What! did not the editor of the Evangelical Repository (who was present as a pastor and a presbytor), move that the Presbytery "take prompt steps" to bring those Freemasons to trial, so that they should either be required to renounce their connection with Freemasonry or be expelled from membership in the U. P. church? Not a cheep of that! Did he propose no censure of those false, traitorous elders, for their glaring past derelictions of duty? None! How, then, do you account for this apparent inconsistency, with his zeal as an editor of a public periodical against Freemasonry and such-like wicked and "deistical" and "anti-Christian" societies? We cannot account for it? Perhaps in the one case he acts as an editor and in the other as presbyter! Perhaps, however, he may explain it, as he did the quashing the report of the Odd-fellowship case, to promote the ends of "justice!" Certain it is, that as the result in this case, the three elders and the six or more Freemasons feel secure, and are triumphant; while faithful members—faithful to the principles of the U. P. church—are taking up their certificates and leaving, since no redress is to be obtained from Presbytery.

Metaphoric Masonry.

WEST UNITY, O., May 13, 1875.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

We have just been reading your extracts from the St. Louis Freemason of March and April, and are heartily glad that the lodge has concluded to ake a new departure and as the Free- mason says, "change places with our enemies;" surely if the institution, whose every step (to quote that paper), is accompanied with the God-like prayer of "more light" is willing to change places with us, we can't be very wrong; or is this an admission that they have all along been wrong. Now we have not the least objection to them taking our place and holding all their meetings, lectures, conventions, etc., openly, so that they can adopt the motto of the Cynosure, "In secret have I said nothing." But we do protest against taking their place; only think of it, good old father Blanchard, Finney, Bernard, Levington and Stoddard, headed by the editors of the Cynosure, Earnest Christian, Methodist Free Press and others, going into a Masonic meeting and raising a disturbance by hooting like a pack of Modocs, burning cayenne pepper on the stove and scattering rotten eggs about the platform, or shooting the lecturer from the road-side as they returned home! Do they really want us to poison or mob them as the disciples of Hiram did Rathbun a few years ago? If one of our members should desert us, are we to cut his throat and tear out his tongue? or tear open his left breast and take out his heart and vitals? or sever his body in the midst, and all that sort of thing? or are we to hurry the traitor off to Fort Niagara and thence to the bottom of the Niagara river? We have no heart for the change and we don't believe that the Freemason was in earnest when he proposed it. Would it it not be a little strange to see such a set of moral heroes, voluntarily taking the place of a few unscrupulous, narrow-minded, bigoted, lying fanatics as the Freemason represents us to be? Are they to give up all their boasted benevolence and charity to us? Are they willing to cease to be "the deep and silent rolling sea of regenerating thought?" But he says, "Freemasons can no more ignore and despise the printing-press, than could a great and once all-powerful church which for neary a hundred years damned the newspapers and forbid the publication of truths." Is this an acknowledgment that Freemasons have heretofore ignored, despised and damned newspapers, forbidding the publication of truth? If not, what is the use of putting that in? We cannot say that they have ignored and despised the Cynosure, but we do know that many of them have damned it in no measured terms. But he informs us that "patience has ceased to be a virtue," and that they propose to strike back in defense of pure morality, education and truth; just what we have been striking for for the last eight years. But says he, "To defend Masonry simply by name, as the ideal of a beautiful thought, would be chivalry enough itself and beautiful in itself." We think it would. He goes on, "That would accomplish nothing,"—and that's our opinion exactly—and then adds, "If defended at all, it must be in the name of its eternal and life-giving principles." But how an order that makes truth a crime, or at least attaches the penalty of death to the revelation of it, can consistently talk of "its eternal and life-giving principles" is more than we can imagine.

Yours for the war,
J. G. MATTOON.

The "New departure," of which the Cynosure speaks, is certainly encouraging for our cause and plainly implies on the part of lodge that the "craft" is not meeting with fair sailing. It must be sorely pressed when its friends are compelled to set up such a piteous appeal to their brethren and "sisters." It is one of the "landmarks" that women cannot be Masons, yet the "New Departure" appeals to the sisters!

Now as intimated in the "New Departure" they are going to defend themselves by use of the press, thus throwing away one of their "jewels," a silent tongue, and unless there are plenty of valuables or "jewels" they may soon impoverish the lodge so that it will not be worth saving and of so little value that even "degrees" can't be sold or perhaps even given away. The "anti" are now selling these "degrees" by the quarter thousand at the same rate that the lodge sells a single degree while what the "anti" sell is really of a better quality, the purchaser keeping his clothes on and retaining both conscience and manhood.

Come-outism—A Scrap from Abolition History.

LOCKPORT, Ill., May 17, 1875.
Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR SIR:—In your article headed, "Come-outism," in last week's paper you allude in the commencement particularly to Wm. T. Allen and subsequently to some others, Christian abolitionists of the last generation, who, in consequence of the persecution of the orthodox church's ministry of the then free States "cut loose from God, by cutting loose from his people." On reading the article it occurred to me that you might, with propriety, have made some additional remarks in connection with the history of the young men.

Wm. T. Allen, as you say, was a son of a doctor of divinity and a notorious slave-holder in the sunny South. The son was lecturing on slavery in Cook and Kane counties, in Illinois. He asked the privilege of speaking in one of the orthodox churches in the city of Chicago. The pastor, one who stood at the very head of the profession in the city, refused him the privilege. A few months later the father, a doctor of divinity in the Presbyterian church, and a noted slave-holder, visited your city. The same pastor of the same church, invited the Rev. slave-holding minister, the father of the younger Allen, to preach in his church of a Sabbath morning, and he did so; and it should be borne in mind that the younger Allen was at that time an orthodox Congregational minister in good and regular standing and member of the Congregational Association of Illinois.

Now a word in regard to these Christian young men whom you name in your article, and a few others. With Wm. T. Allen, Theodore D. Weld, Henry B. Stanton, Ichabod Codding, Paul Wright and Dr. Torry, I had the honor of a personal acquaintance, from twenty-five to fifty years ago. They were a company of noble young men. Their history I know, and if they did apostatize from the faith of the gospel, and if they did "cut loose from God by cutting loose from his people," and if they have died, or shall die in their iniquity, I verily do believe and have believed, and have said for the last thirty years that "their blood will be required at the hands of the orthodox churches; the clergy and the laity, who have, by their relentless persecution, scorn and contempt, driven them from their moorings in the church of Christ and from the communion of his people.

And now, sir, one simple question I wish to ask. In how far does the present position of the clergy and laity of the orthodox Christian church of the Northern and Western States on the subject of oath-bound secret societies now differ from the position they occupied thirty years ago in relation to slavery and the abolitionists? I pause for reply.

Fraternally yours,
ISAAC PRESTON.

The Great Conflict.

Light routs and banishes darkness. It dispels and conquers the glooms and shades, overwinged from the Plutonian deeps. When the sunlight bursts in, the vagueness of starlight goes out and and nature puts on her robings of beauty and gladness. So when Christ enters the heart, he drives out worldliness and supplies the virtues of grace and joy. Religion is intimately associated with all that is good and irreligion seeks the society of everything that is bad. The conflict of light and darkness is an appearance designed to be the symbol and type of a great reality. There is no real war between day and night; for, in consecutive course, the one always succeeds the other. But there is a real warfare waging between truth and error, and truth must rout and banish error ere the great conflict reaches its termination.

YATES CITY, Ill., May 13, 1875.

MR. EDITOR:—I presume you have heard enough of my personal affairs, but I would like to tell you how Thos. Kersey, the innocent cause of my trouble with the lodge, did not become a Master Mason. Just before he left this place he demanded of the lodge that he be raised to the third degree, or some reason why he should not. The matter was referred to a special committee who in due time reported to the lodge that they had found Bro. Thos. Kersey unworthy to be made a Master Mason. Ben. Kersey, on the part of his son, then demanded that specific charges be made. Charles D. North, one of the six objecting brethren, then retired with the committee and in a few minutes returned with charges in due form. Ben. Kersey then backed out and begged with tears in his eyes that the subject be dropped. I therfore propose to drop it.

OUR MAIL.

P. Elzea, Greenbush, Wis., writes:

"Should you have any copies of the Grange book, send me twenty. There is a large German population in this State, and they anxiously inquire for these books in their language. They would buy a good many if they could get them. They are worth looking after in this direction."

Jas. McConnell. Ligonier, Ind., writes:

"Enclosed I send you the names of six more subscribers, all of whom will renew. I will, if spared, send as many or more next week, notwithstanding the scarcity of money, and the effort made by the order to prevent persons from subscribing for your paper. The people are becoming awakened to their situation and I think will act and speak more than they have been doing. I find very many who have been made afraid to act in this matter for themselves, by threats made by secret orders; this is particularly so with laborers and mechanics, who, they say, must act as those giving the employment direct. The prospect of largely increasing subscriptions to your valuable paper looks encouraging."

Wm. Whittaker, Foxborough, Mass., writes:

"I am in sympathy with the work in which you are engaged; for I think secret societies are the greatest curse of our country and the church. If a minister of the Gospel dares to speak against the craft in this place, his days are numbered. We had one here a few years ago who was not afraid to speak against the works of darkness, and the craft starved him out."

Wm. H. Scovill, Pioneer, Ohio, writes:

"I have taken your excellent paper a year now, and like very much the way in which it boldly advocates the right amid such adverse circumstances. There is a lodge of Masons, also of Odd-fellows, and quite a large one of the grange, in this place. So you see if any one opposes secret societies here, they meet with a great deal of opposition. A great many members of the M. E. church belong to these societies. I have belonged to this church for more than twenty years, but am tempted to leave it and join a church that opposes secret societies. I pray that the time may come when they will be compelled to hide their heads, and the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ finally triumph."

A friend in Ottawa, Kansas, writes:

"The lodge has rule here. The ministers of all the churches except the United Presbyterian, are Masons. Grange going down fast in this county."

A. Leaming, St. Paul, Minn., writes:

"This county seems to run wild on secret societies; preachers and people, and those that do not belong to them are either favorable or indifferent to them."

John Gambles, Gambles, Allegheny Co. Pa., writes:

"I hope to be able to fill out my quota of the Banner Company during the summer, and get into the Brigade if I can.

The Company is not full yet, and we will be glad to receive all who wish to join.

J. Miller, Freeport, Pa., writes:

"I have given the Cynosure to a good many who have more than thanked me for it and I still keep giving it around. There is a vast number of secret society men in this township. I have the ill-will of some of the fraternity, but I will have to stand that."

Henry M. Tower, Spencer, Mass., writes:

"I hope the truth will spread, and am willing to do what I can. I send the name of our pastor and the name of our local paper."

This is a good way to circulate the paper. We hope many will follow his his example.

Daniel Rex, Mulberry, Ind., writes:

"I love the principles that are advocated in the Christian Cynosure. I love to oppose secrecy in every shape and form although Grangers, Odd-ellows and Masons ar thick around me. But as for me I want nothing to do with secretism."

Artemas Bassett, West Chazy, N. Y., writes:

"I expect to take your paper as long as secret organizations occupy the place they now occupy, and your paper occupies the place it does now, while I live. I am still, as ever, opposed to secret organizations, and consider them evil and only evil in their tendencies. D. P. Rathbun lectures here to-night; subject, Masonry.

E. W. Carver, Cannon Falls, Minn., swrites:

"There are a great many Masons in Minnesota, and a good many who have been beclouded in the Masonic traps, viz: Masonic temperance lodges, so that they can see no wrong in secret societies, and don't wish to read or hear anything about them. But there are some strong Anti-masons here, and others who are not at all satisfied with the fruit of secretism, but know nothing about it, and are led to believe that they can know nothing about it, as everything is kept secret and none know about the secret Orders except those that belong to them. Some seem afraid to take the Cynosure. I have found a few persons that wanted it."

Thomas Henderson, Pleasant Home, Ohio, writes:

"Your paper is a welcome visitor at our home. The work is going on here, slowly but surely. Men, who a year ago supported secret societies will do so no more. Pray for us, that we may stand the firey darts of the Evil One."

John Metzer, Edna Mills, Ind., writes:

"I am a young man of 21 years. Am a member of the German Baptist or Dunker church. We as a church are opposed to all secret societies, of any name whatever. I am with you in the good cause. I will try and get you an agent in this county."

Rev. O. B. Williams, Blanchester, Ohio, writes:

"I am in a hot-bed of secresy. But I am fortifying and am determined to do all I can against them, and if I don't succeed in capturing them, I am determined they shall not capture me. But I have succeeded in my weakness in turning some from darkness to light. Some since I came to this part of the country, have realized that others know something about their workings besides those who are now in the lodge. With such bulwarks as the Cynosure, Telescope, and Christian Expositor, and best of all, with Christ on my side, I am secure."

Lesson for June 6, 1875.—Samuel the Judge.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Samuel vii. 5–12. Commit the lesson. Primary verse, 8th.

5 And Samuel said, Gather all Israel to Mizpeh, and I will pray for you unto the Lord.

6 And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and drew water and poured it out before the Lord, and fasted on that day, and said there, We have sinned against the Lord. And Samuel judged the children of Israel in Mizpeh.

7 And when the Philistines heard that the children of Israel were gathered together to Mizpeh, the lords of the Philistines went up against Israel. And when the children of Israel heard it they were afraid of the Philistines.

8 And the children of Israel said to Samuel, Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us, that he will save us out of the hand of the Philistines.

9 And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt offering wholly unto the Lord; and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt offering, the Philistines drew near to battle against Israel: but the Lord thundered with a great thunder on that day upon the Philistines, and discomfited them; and they were smitten before Israel.

11 And the men of Israel went out of Mizpeh, and pursued the Philistines, and smote them until they came under Bethcar.

12 And Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Ebenezer, saying, Hitherto, hath the Lord helped us.

The Books of Samuel.

The great historical importance of these books is apparent from these statements, for they narrate the transition of the tribes from a federal republic under the judges to a kingdom, and the exaltation of that kingdom to its highest power under David. They narrate also the foundation and development of Jerusalem, and the reorganization and extension of religious worship in that national center by David. Hence originated that unexampled and unequaled manual of devotion, the Psalms of David. To write his Psalms he was prepared by the discipline of danger and suffering through the persecutions of Saul which are detailed in this history.

The trials of Hannah, the mother of Samuel, her prayers and their answer, and her consecration to God of that son, who ultimately became the judge of Israel and the founder of the school of the prophets, has gone to the heart of all mothers in every subsequent age, and has stimulated and encouraged them to an early consecration of their children to God. The fearful consequences of God's anger at Eli, though a good man, for neglecting a father's duty in restraining and punishing unruly and dissolute children, have resounded as a warning to parents from that day to this, and show that they cannot meet their responsibilities by mere indulgent goodness and kindness, without decided discipline, and if the case calls for it, intense severity.

The early formation and mature development of the noble character of Samuel, and his influence in founding the schools of the prophets, and in watching over the civil and religious interests of the nation, furnish powerful encouragements to early piety.

The character of Saul furnishes an occasion for profound study and deep analysis. In him were elements of great power and success, but an uncontrolled self-will led him to repeated acts of disobedience to God, in consequence of which it was foretold that the kingdom should be transferred to David. Then a malignant jealousy of David embittered his character and led to persecution and deeds of blood, alternated by periods of revived affection, till at last his melancholy defeat and death closed the scene.—*Nat'l. History of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite.

[CONCLUDED.]

The first Supreme Council held in the United States was that at Charleston, S. C., in the latter part of the year 1786, at which the Northern and Southern jurisdictions were geographically defined.

On the 31st of May, 1801, the Supreme Council of the thirty-third degree for the Southern Jurisdiction of the United States of America was opened with the high honors of Masonry by Bros. John Mitchell and Frederick Dalcho, Sovereign Grand Inspectors-General, and in the course of the year the whole number of Grand Inspectors-General was completed agreeably to the Grand Constitutions which limited the number to nine to each jurisdiction.

The members of this Council were Emanuel De LaMotte, Dr. J. Auld, Dr. James Moultrie, Abraham Alexander, M. C. Livy, Thos. B. Bowen, and J. De Liebau.

On the 20th of December, 1767, Deputy Ins.-Gen. Francken appointed by Morin, opened and duly constituted a Grand Lodge of Perfection, fourteenth degree, in Albany, New York.

In 1783, Deputy Ins.-Gen. Hays established a Grand Lodge of Perfection in Charleston, S. C. On the 20th of February, 1788, a Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem, sixteenth degree, was opened in Charleston, by Myers, Spitzer and A. Forest, Dep. Ins.-Gen. for Virginia.

In the year 1797, a chapter of Rose Croix de H. R. D. M., eighteenth degree, was instituted in the city of New York. In this year King Solomon's Lodge of Perfection at Holme's Hole, Martha's Vineyard, which had been established in 1783, by M. M. Hayes and Peleg Clark, surrendered its jurisdiction over the three symbolic degrees to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

In 1802 warrants of Constitution were issued for the opening of Sublime Lodges of Perfection in Savannah, Ga., and many other cities of the United States.

About 1806-7 Consistories of Valiant and Sublime Princes of the Royal Secret thirty-second degree, were organized in the city of New York, and remained so until the formation of the Supreme Council for the Northern jurisdiction of the United States.

Attention is again called to the year 1795, when Colonel John Mitchell was appointed by Spitzer, a Deputy Ins.-Gen. in place of Myers, who had removed; but he was restricted from acting until after Myers' death, which took place in the following year.

After the French Revolution of 1793, the mass of the people became atheists, and with them the great body of Masons. The Bible, as a general thing, was publicly burned, and Sublime Freemasonry fell into disuse; and it was not until after the establishment of the Supreme Council at Charleston, South Carolina, in 1801, that the Sublime system was revived in France, by the establishment of a Supreme Council at Paris, in 1804, by Count De Grasse, Grand Inspector General, under authority from the Charleston Council. The Paris Supreme Council still exists.

The Grand Orient, of France, which prior to this held an existence only as a "Symbolic Grand Lodge of Master Masons," immediately commenced her assumed jurisdiction over all the degrees of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite; hence a question, which to this day remains in abeyance.

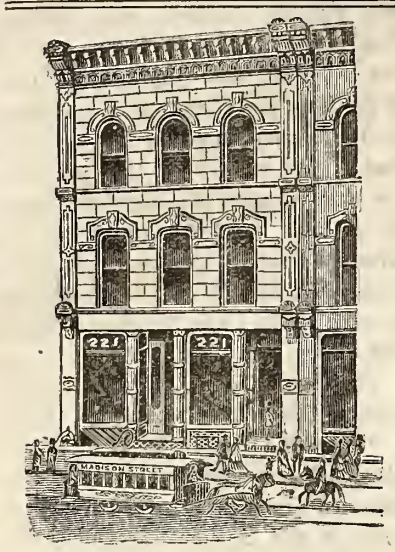
In 1825 a special grant to Bros. Fowler, Bryant and McGill was issued by the Supreme Council for the Southern jurisdiction, for the establishment of a Supreme Council, thirty-third degree, in Dublin, Ireland.

The following extract is from the published report of the Southern Supreme Council, on the 4th of Dec., 1802.

"On the 21st of January, 1802, a warrant of Constitution passed the seal of the Grand Council of Princes of Jerusalem, for the establishment of a Mark Master Mason's lodge in the city of Charleston, South Carolina."

Shortly after the close of the year 1802, all authority over the Mark and Past Master's degrees was surrendered to the Royal Arch chapters, at that time springing into existence.

The Royal and Select Master's degrees were side, or detached degrees of the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite in the Southern States of the Union, the Supreme Council initiated, chartered, and fostered Councils of Royal and Select Masters; and as rapidly as they were self-sustaining they became independent.



In this wise the Ancient Accepted Scottish Rite has gradually thrown aside the detached degrees, and rapidly confers any except the regular grades designated in the regular series.

The following words of one of the most eminent students of Masonry and an ardent admirer of the Ancient Accepted Rite may be quoted here:

"If anywhere, brethren of a particular religious belief have been excluded from these degrees, it merely shows how gravely the plans and purposes of Masonry may be misunderstood; for, whenever the doors of any one degree is closed against him who believes in one God and the soul's immortality, on account of the other tenets of his faith, that degree is no longer Masonry, which is universal, but some other thing, that is exclusive, and accordingly intolerant. Each degree of our beautiful Rite erects a platform on which the Israelite, the Mahomedan, and the Christian may stand side by side and hand by hand, as brethren. Whatever your religion, your birth-place, or your language, you are among—brethren. One language is spoken in common, the language of the Scottish Rite of Masonry, which speaks directly to the heart."

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and the Association hopes to raise this sum by June 10th next; and $20.000 as soon thereafter as possible to secure the ownership. Send on contributions.

"HOSPITALITY WITHOUT GRUDGING."

The care of guests falls chiefly on the women, who are insulted by exclusion from the lodge. It should be no hardship for them to entertain their champions and friends. A lecturer, after some travel and experience among them, said of the men and women now embarked in the effort to deliver the country and the world from the curse of secretism: "There is one comfort, this cause brings us to be associated with the best men and women on earth."

We hope our friends in Pittsburgh will remind the Christian brethren of that city of these things. It is a small matter to entertain a couple of Christian men or women for two or three days attendance on an Anniversary, and the fusion and storing up of ideas and breaking up the monotony and routine of life more than repays us. But though the share borne by each household is small, the aggregate entertainment of a large convention is a mighty moral achievement. It brings us back to primitive Christianity. It fulfills an Apostolic command. It reflects credit on the city or town; and, beyond any saving of expenses, it cheers the laborers in a worthy cause.

If the sessions of the churches in Pittsburgh would, as they did at Monmouth, resolve to take this hospitality in hand their people would cheerfully co-operate, and make Pittsburgh a green oasis in all our memories.

FOLLY.

The New York Evening Post, Herald and other prominent papers bluster about the minority (one-eighth) of Papists in our whole population, and boasts that the first attempt on popular rights would be fatal to the Romish communion. Even Gladstone in his "Vaticanism" caters to English self-conceit, and hints that England is in no immediate peril of a popish invasion. They forget that Jesuits never show their hand until sure of the game; that there are no slaves like willing slaves; and that the slaves of error are willing slaves. They forget that fashion and folly answer Rome's purposes as well as faith; and that the Appletons of America will henceforth be married by cardinals, and that newspapers will be trumpeters for such weddings,—these very papers that boast of Protestant majorities and popular rights. They forget that small, compact desperate minorities have always ruled the masses. They forget that eight millions of population and they one-half slaves, with but 350,000 slaveholders ruled over thirty millions in the free States until Lincoln's election. They forget that popery comes in by stealth, grows strong by silence, and goes out only by revolution. In the face of such a foe, the security of the press is the nation's danger. It is the security of charmed birds before a steadily advancing serpent. No. There is but one thing will save the United States from becoming an Italy or Spain, and that is, ousting all human religions and asserting the Bible and the religion of Christ; the issue made by the "National Christian Association."

CHURCH TESTS—BISHOP WEAVER.

Our readers will remember Bishop Weaver's article on Church Tests from the Telescope, some numbers since. A brother asks, and in this number obtains the courtesy of a reply.

We agree practically with both. Neither Bishop Weaver or Mr. Faurot would sit down cheerfully at the communion table with men known to be guilty of blood, though in killing their victim they would verily believe they were doing God service.

Hon. Samuel D. Greene, tells us that he was in the lodge which made a merit of the murder of Morgan. He saw Masons gaze from their lodge windows on Miller's printing office and heard them hint at its conflagration. He caused the police of Batavia to be doubled and saved the building after it was set on fire. He heard one officer of his own (Presbyterian) church declare that ministers and church officers would execute on Morgan the Masonic penalty of death if he dared to speak the truth concerning the lodge. He tells us that the Episcopal minister and every male member of his church were members of that lodge; that one Presbyterian elder was Master, and another was senior deacon of that lodge during this conspiracy of blood. And the county records afterward show that 300 persons shared the conspiracy, and 60 the act of this cold-blooded crime, and the New York State Lodge sent out of the country the chief criminal with funds contributed by lodges far and wide.

Now neither Bishop Weaver nor his reviewer have any idea of opening the churches of Christ and keeping them open to men guilty of such acts, whatever their professions of faith and godliness may be. If so they would not belong to the Cynosure nor the Cynosure to them.

In theory there may be a shade of difference. The English State church claimed the right "to ordain ceremonies and enforce them. This drove our fathers to this country. And this power is what we understand Rev. Mr. Faurot to object to. And we object to it as strongly as he. The Presbyterian "Book" insists explicitly that God has given in the Bible the rule of faith and life; and the whole of it, and consequently, we may not manufacture rites, ceremonies, governmeent, or doctrine to bind the conscience. All this is clearly included in the American Presbyterian Declaration that: "God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men which are in anything contrary to it or beside it in matters of faith or life." This is explicit. Men may not manufacture church tests and bind conscience by them. What then does Bishop Weaver mean by insisting on the right to exclude "distillers," "rumsellers," "slaveholders," etc. Are not these unscriptural tests?

No. Bishop Weaver means as he says, that the Apostolic test "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ," "includes all righteousness." And it does. The apostles did not mean mere head-belief, which is the faith of devils, but a faith shown by works: "For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness"

It is sometimes insisted that when a man joins the church the only question we have a right to ask is; "Do you believe on the Lord Jesus Christ?" And if the answer is "Yes," receive him; but immediately discipline him if he sins. But if he is sinning when he comes, and we know it, the disipline should begin at once and on the threshold. If a lodge-man knows that we know him to belong to the lodge, and we take him in, so for as we are concerned he has a right to stay in. It is insult and mockery to receive a Freemason, distiller, or rumseller, known to be such, and proceed to labor with him the next hour for facts known when we voted him in.

It may be said, and there is truth in it, that we do quasi receive a brother when we begin to labor with him to get him out of the dram-shop or lodge. But it is scarcely proper to make fine distinctions which the common mind cares nothing about, and perhaps cannot understand. If Simon the sorcerer had brought along his money and offered Peter cash for power to impart the Holy Ghost, when he "believed" and presented himself for baptism, Peter would have been guilty of contemptible paltering had he received him and told him he must quit his sinning or be turned out of the church. We therefore conclude:

1. That artificial, man-made tests of church membership are unlawful.

2. That Christ alone is lawgiver, and the Bible the only law in the realm of conscience.

3. That "all church power is ministerial and declarative." Dec. Am. Presbyterians.

4. That the faith in Christ which is the sole ground of membership in his church is believing with the heart unto righteousness, and showing our faith by our works.

5. That it is sometimes duty to excommunicate one whom we believe to be a Christian, but who adheres to his sins, as the incestuous Corinthian, whom they turned out, "that his spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus."

6. That what should turn one out should keep him out if known at the time.

7. That Freemasonry being a thousand fold worse than lottery gambling, which is open, while Masonic swindling is secret, should exclude from the church of Christ if adhered to after labor.

NOTES.

—Special attention is called this week to the notices on the 4th page.

—The Publishers of the Cynosure will be represented at the Anniversary by Mr. E. A. Cook, who will have a well selected assortment of books and will be glad to receive subscriptions. Friends expecting to be present will consult their own, and the interest of the Cynosure also, by making good use of the few intervening days in getting together a good number of new subscribers and renewals, also by deciding on what books they wish to purchase. Ten copies of any work will be sold at the hundred rate.

—Less than two weeks now remain before the anniversary—short time, but long enough for a half hundred friends to send in two dollars each and lift the small but inconvenient debt of the National Association before the Anniversary. The treasurer would be glad to receive this amount before the 1st of June so that the yearly report may be a clear one. This is a light lift if enough help together. Don't wait for your neighbor, but send on your contributions, large or small, for the work.

—Painful as exposures of dereliction may be, they are often a means of good. Believing that it may be a means of urging our United Presbyterian brethren to close and prayerful guardianship of the purity of their congregations, the letter from Philadelphia is published this week. Bro. Hinman tells us of a church in this State whose pastor and discipline are opposed to the lodge worships, but nearly all the members are associated with one or another of the "orders." "A house divided against itself cannot stand."

—The Free Methodist brethren expect to be well represented at Pittsburgh by delegates, especially the Western conferences, which have appointed such men as Travis, Terrill and others. Arrangements have been made for a camp meeting preceding and following the Anniversary, to be held in the vicinity of Pittsburgh. Brethren Roberts, Hart and others are expected at all the gatherings.

—The meeting of the Indiana State Executive Committee at Marion last week was attended by every member and other friends also were present. Tht State Agent is greatly encouraged by the enthusiasm of the meeting and the earnest way in which the matter fo a State Convention was taken up and preliminary arrangements made. This meeting will be held in October; funds are already being subscribed for its expenses and a number of our best speakers will be invited to attend.

—The upper degree Odd-fellows of Indiana lately met in Indianapolis. They report resources amounting to $54,450.07 with $5,181.30 spent in relief work. If the repute of this order was measured by its charitable pretenses it would be more than 92 per cent. below par. The U. S. Grand Lodge meets in the same place next September, perhaps Mr. Colfax, who is to speak, will explain to the order how they can raise their credit.

—The Odd-fellow Grand Lodge of Missouri seems to be also in a prosperous, money-making condition. Here are their figures: annual revenue, $80,345; in the treasury, $37,834; invested, $298,666; relief paid during the year $36 205. The interest on investments alone at 10 per cent. would pay the relief less $6,339.

—A new temperance order is reported in session at Nashville, Tenn., the United Friends of Temperance. The national body is styled "Supreme Council," after the Confucian idea, and the organization is said to number forty or fifty thousand.

—The Rev. Septimus Jones, D. D., of Canada, was one of the speakers at the late Young Men's Christian Association convention in Philadelphia. We hope he is not the model for the exposition lately published in these columns.

—C. H. Webb, in "Our Mail" of April 29th is represented as saying "Free Methodist," the words should have been "Free Baptist."

—Mr. Bancroft, the historian, late United States minister at Berlin, continued to correspond with statesmen and diplomats of Europe since his return to this country and is fully informed of recent political movements there, which he concludes are in the interest of peace in spite of the menace of a standing army of 1,200,000 in German, 1,700,000 in Russia, and 700,000 in France. Touching the question of religious complications in Europe, he was convinced while at Berlin that the policy of the Pope was to strengthen and consolidate the Catholic church of America. He saw plainly the first step in the creation of an American Cardinal. He thought that from this time forward the church would figure more prominently in the politics of this country. The church was laboring under many grievous distractions in Europe, and it was probable that the way was being prepared for important and momentous movements in future, should circumstances arise to make them necessary.

—An incidental but strong proof of the charges of Prof. Robison, in his "Proofs of a Conspiracy," regarding the active anti-Christian intent of the higher degrees of Freemasonry are found in the history of the Scottish rite reprinted from the secret society department of the Hebrew Leader. It is stated that "sublime Freemasonry" fell into disuse after the bloody French Revolution of 1793, when the French nation had become practically atheist. Robison says, it will be remembered, that the design of the founders of these degrees was the overthrow of religion. So long as religion remained influential it was an object of attack by the lodge, which was thus kept alive and on a war footing of necessity. But when the object of the infidelizing order was accomplished and religion apparently destroyed from the French nation, Freemasonry having accomplished the immediate object of its existence there was no occasion for continuing the lodges and they naturally fell into a decline.

NOTE.—As we published the Masonic article from The Square to which the following is a reply, written by the author of the popular work Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation, we request The Square to reciprocate by publishing the following. —ED. CYN.]

MASONIC VINDICATION.

I notice an article from the Masonic Square containing the usual devices by which the managers of the lodges endeavor to deceive persons not informed in regard to their institution. For the sake of such I think its sophistry and falsehood should be fully noticed.

I will refer to several points in the article.

The Masonic editor says, "the arguments against the institution are generally founded upon the long exploded humbug of the abduction of Morgan." This is a falsehood and the editor knows it. The murder of Morgan was a legitimate fruit of the almost infernal oaths taken by Masons; which by many if not all of the Masons, are held as sacred obligations. These same oaths are still administered to the blindfolded candidate. It is the dangerous and profane character of the institution whose secret oaths and ritual bind men to falsehood and crime, that leads good men to oppose it. He speaks of the murder of Morgan, as "a humbug." It was such a humbug that the whole power of the State of New York could not bring the Masonic culprits to justice; and large sums were collected in other States to shield those who perjured themselves, or refused to testify against the perpetrators of the crime. It was such a humbug as Masonic interference recently in the case of Vanderpool—which saved a convicted murderer from the penalty of the law.

This writer says again—"taking the word of Anti-masons for it, Masonry is not a bad institution to belong to, since it affords such complete security to its devotees; and what other institution, on their own showing, could do this."

This is another guileful falsehood. The man who says an institution that affords aid to a rough or criminal is a good institution to belong to, is a rogue or criminal himself. And this undoubtedly is the reason why many bad men join the lodges. This Masonic editor holds out this bait to bad men and then endeavors to blind his meaning to good men, by saying that no one is admitted to the institution "save by secret ballot, and who has a clear record." Two murders were committed in Michigan some three or four years ago,—both by Masons—both criminals entered the lodge with a clear record, and both escaped the penalty of the law. The character of those taken in by secret ballot depends on the character of the men who cast the ballots; and ever body knows that there are bad lodges and better ones, and that the bad men when once entered stand in every lodge on the square with better ones, and often are the majority.

The additional plea for the institution is that the Masonic traveler everywhere finds friends, in difficulty or danger, and thus has the advantage of others. This is as true of members in mechanics' an other mutual aid societies which are open, as it is of Masonic societies which are secret; and there is not one Masonic traveler in a thousand who ever experienced any rescue from danger unless he was a criminal. But in time of war it is said that cases have occurred in which men who were Masons received aid from the enemy. Such cases may have occurred. But in our late war Jefferson Davis, a high Mason in authority, imprisoned and starved the union soldiers, Masons and Anti-masons together—and the sign of distress could not obtain for the starving man a drink of water or a crust of bread. Some of these men had joined the lodge to get favors in just such cases. It is by such sophistry and lies as the foregoing that the managing Masons endeavor to deceive men into their dark communion. Political.

ALBANY, Gentry Co., Mo.

PRESIDENT BLANCHARD:—I had hoped to hear from many of the friends of reform through the Cynosure by this time in regard to our political movement in connection with the anniversary at Pittsburgh. But thus far I have seen nothing except what I suppose you have written, and I agree with you that we are peculiarly situated; but not more so than the abolition party thirty years ago. We cannot be more despised or looked upon by politicians with more contempt than they, and we know that our cause is as just and that there is as much danger from the secret mysteries that infest our land, overthrowing our republican government, and supplanting the Christian religion as there was from slavery. In fact, there is more danger. Look abroad throughout the land and see how few, even of those that call these mysteries abominations, dare denounce them publicly! Why do they not treat all sins alike? Rum, gambling, swearing, are all denounced from the desk, but it seems that Masonry in all its forms dare not meet with the same rebuke. Why is this so? Are we honest in our professions? or are we ashamed to speak our honest convictions in regard to this great evil? The Scripture saith the world loveth its own, and little does Masonry care how much we talk and prate about it, so long as we let it rule the church and state. They have said to me, How do you expect to accomplish anything? We have the preachers and pulpit on our side. The time has come when every honest man should pray, preach and vote alike, and all the professions of reformation are vain unless they will do it. The abolitionists were of that kind as a general rule, and they gained the victory, not by a half-heartedness, but by throwing their whole soul into the work. The lecturers talked it, prayed it, and preached it, and I would not give much for a sermon preached by a lecturer which did not denounce the greatest sin of the age from the pulpit, the one that is leading more souls astray than any other. The saying that I will preach a Gospel sermon and not name this sin, and the next night in a lecture, quote Scripture loud and long to prove that Masonry is wrong, is too thin to pan out much longer. No such a man can get my money for lecturing or preaching. No such a man can get my vote for any office. If it is right for Christians to vote, then it is right for them to hold conventions and nominate men for office who they dare trust to make laws, whom they believe will fear God more than man; such men as hold the laws of God above the laws of clans and cliques. I see nothing in the way for the same men who meet in the capacity of a Christian Association, after adjournment, to hold a political convention, as our association is not sectarian, and every denomination in the land is invited to send delegates.

In the early days of our nation, Godly men were chosen to rule over the people, and if we expect to save the nation from going off into heathenism by these idolatrous worships, we must insist on having God-fearing men in office, and because we are few in numbers it is no reason that we should keep silent, for that would never increase our numbers. If God is on our side, he, in due time will give success if we are true to him, but if we falter, wo to us! Better would it have been for us had we never put our hands to the plow than to turn back, for we thereby deceive ourselves and betray our friends and deny our God. It may be we were too fast three years ago, but I think not. Surely the waters are troubled at this time; why not step in? Let us nominate our best representative men. As a general thing politicians are not to be trusted, especially those who expect to make it a livelihood. By all means let us not go back on our own record. G. W. NEEDELS.

The Home Circle.

Perfect through Suffering.

There is no heart, however free and lightsome,
But has its bitterness;
No earthly hopes, however bright and blithesome,
But ring of emptiness.

The world is full of suffering and sorrow,
Of anguish and despair;
Its brightest promises are of to-morrow
Its mockeries everywhere.

Our weary hearts, with slow and sad pulsation,
Beat to the march of years;
Their days are given to toil without cessation,
Their gloomy nights to tears.

But let us wait in patience and submission
The will of our great King—
Remembering this, all through our earthly mission,
Perfect through suffering.

Then cease, O foolish heart, cease thy repining;
The Master's hand above
Is only purifying and refining—
The Alchemist is Love.

These tears and thrills of woe, these great afflictions,
Are but the chastening rod;
And they shall prove the heavenly benedictions,
The mercies of our God.

What seemeth now a dark and dreamy vision
Unto our tear-dimmed eyes,
Shall burst in glory into scenes elysian,
A blooming paradise.

Then cease, O foolish heart, cease thy repining;
Hope! lift thy drooping wing;
The plan is one of God's all-wise designing—
Perfect through suffering.

Love as a Force.

Once I knew a workingman, a potter by business, who had a small invalid child at home. He kept at his trade in the shop with all industry; but daily to the bedside of the "wee lad," as he called him, he bore a flower, or a bit of ribbon, a fragment of crimson glass—indeed, anything that would lie out on the white counterpane and give a color in the room. He was a quiet, unsentimental Scotchman. But never went he home without a toy or a trinket, showing that he had remembered the wan face that lit up so when he came in. I presume he never said to a living soul how much he loved that sick boy. But he went on patiently loving him. And by-and-by he moved that whole shop into positively unconscious love in fellowship with him. The workmen made curious little jars and teacups on their wheels, and painted diminutive pictures down the sides before they stuck them in corners of the kiln at burning times. One brought some fruit in a corner of his apron, and another some engravings in a scrap-book. Nobody of them all whispered a word, for this solemn thing was not to be talked about. They put them in the old man's hat, where he found them, and understood all about it. And I tell you seriously, that whole potteryful of men grew quiet and gentle and kind, as the weary look on their fellow-worker's face told beyond any mistake that the inevitable shadow was drawing nearer. Every day now somebody did a piece of his work for him and put it up on the sanded plank to dry, so he could come later and go earlier. And finally, at the funeral, a stalwart line of undemonstrative men filed along in a quiet procession, following the coffin of a child they had never seen.

Oh, if just an earthly affection can win others into sharing it, what is there that cannot be done with a heavenly! Some Christians think they cannot speak felicitously, nor pray volubly, in public. But who is there that cannot love the cause, and love men, and love children, and love Christ loyally, until the whole circle of men and women he touches with his influence shall love Him whom unseen we love; "in whom, though now we see him not, yet, believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Therein lies the secret of all usefulness. A teacher brought one of her class to me. She tried to conceal her emotion. But the boy caught a glimpse of the tears in her eyes, and then he listened. A merchant told me a lamentable story of his bookkeeper. I never should have reached the young man if I had not happened to say that his employer's voice faltered when he told me how he cared for him. I mentioned to a fellow-worker that perhaps I could help a disabled shoemaker, if he would come and see me. Next week I learned that the faithful friend walked six miles that evening to tell him before the midnight. And if ever I straitened myself for a place for a man, I did it then for him—for a man loved him, and then so did I.

It is love which is wanted—human love, like human gold in the nugget, made celestial coin to pass in the kingdom of heaven, simply by stamping it with the likeness of Immanuel the King! He who is surest of God's favor may not at all be the man who tells the most graphic story of conversion, gives largest alms, makes longest prayers; but he who trusts Christ the most humbly for help, and then moves upon the entrenchments of a soul with his whole daily life, gentle and grand, under the hidden pressure of love for one for whom Christ died.—Am. Messenger.

A Pleasant View of English Royalty.

BY JAMES DONALDSON.

It is now nearly twenty years since I met a party on Ben Lomond in the West Highlands of Scotland. Of their station I then knew nothing, but judge of my surprise when I learned that the friends who had been so friendly and and familiar with me, were none other than the Royal party. On leaving England for New York, a friend asked me to visit the arts exhibition in Manchester. Among other things he showed me a painting of the Royal party ascending Ben Lomond to see the sun rise. I had no difficulty in recognizing the friends I had met eleven months before and with whom I had spent so many hours furnishing them with all the information they desired of me, within my power.

Believing, then, as I do, that the Queen and Prince Albert led that party, it affords me the deepest interest to recall some of the incidents. One of these was the pleasure expressed by the late Prince Consort, when I recited that poem written by Michael Bruce and which the whole party sang to the tune of "Martyrdom," with such thrilling effect as I can never forget. With what delight, also, did he appear to catch the Spirit of that tune "Torwood," composed on the ruins of the old castle of that name near Falkirk, where Sir William Wallace once marshalled his forces.

Then it was the whole party thought that it would be much more desirable that disputes should be settled amicably between nations than by war.

The Revival of Gambling.

I have just received a visit from the agent of a well-known art journal, offering, besides chromos and other inducements to subscribe, a chance of drawing a prize painting, worth $500. A dealer in fancy goods has also sent me his circular, advertising articles for grab-bags and fish-ponds, with voting lists and other devices used at fairs. Which makes me feel like saying something about gambling, lotteries, etc.

Gambling is wrong for a variety of reasons, but radically because it is designed to transfer property from man to man without a real equivalent in exchange. Its consequences are so pernicious that the most brilliant mansions where it centers are called by the name of the infernal pit—"hells." Gambling differs from robbery as much as duelling differs from murder. The agreement of two parties to perpetrate a crime against each other's person or property does not lessen their guilt.

The lottery is a species of gambling, according to the law books. It is "a game in which the lot decides a sort of gaming contract, by which, for a valuable consideration, one may, by favor of the lot, obtain a prize of a value superior to the amount or value of that which he risks." The ill opinion our law makers have of it appears in the heavy penalties by which they proscribe it—in Massachusetts $2,000 fine for the first offense; the same for even advertising a lottery outside the State. These laws were not made by the Puritans, but in the past century. They are based on a very sad experience of the evils caused by lotteries. When the last lottery permitted by law was drawn in England, besides a vast amount of fraud, which it had hoped to cover up with prize money, as many as fifty suicides were committed on the night after the drawing. The suppression of lotteries in France was immediately followed by a great increase in savings-bank deposits, showing what the waste had been. A recent letter from a Sunday-school missionary in Kentucky, begging for aid, attributes the poverty of the people to the great Kentucky lottery, in which everything beyond what will obtain the necessaries of life is invested by a large number of his neighbors.

Lotteries are robbery because they necessarily involve their patrons in loss, while legitimate exchanges tend to benefit both buyer and seller. Any kind of business which, like dram-selling or lottery dealing, is done at an inevitable loss to the customer class is done in violation of the eighth commandment. It has been found by experience that the loss occasioned by lotteries falls most severely on that part of the community which has the least to lose and suffers most from loss. Dean Alford says in regard to lotteries held at Rome under sanction of the Pope: "It has been invariably found that the greater the public distress and poverty the greater likewise is the yield of the lottery to the exchequer. Misery makes the people desperate, and they venture more recklessly with the little they possess." The poor are injured by lotteries in pocket and in character equally. To advocate lotteries for charity's sake is as absurd as to advocate dram-selling, that the money raised from licenses might be given to the poor.

People pretend to justify lotteries at fairs by various flimsy excuses. It is the easiest way, sometimes the only way, it is said, to raise the needed funds for benevolence. As if a financial method becomes honest by simply becoming lucrative. As if a good way of spending money justifies a bad way of getting it.

People justify lotteries at fairs on the score of the pastime—it is exhilarating, exciting. So it might be nice fun to throw snowballs in the street; but the police would have a word to say. Pistol practice in the back-yard and in a crowded neighborhood may be quite a pastime; but none the less inexcusable.

People who buy tickets at lottery fairs often plead that they don't care for the tickets or the chances, but only want to give their money. Then give the money so as not to appear to indorse what ought to be condemned—your name, perhaps, paraded in the list of prizes, a bad example to the weak and a butt for the scoffer's jest at the queer doings of moral and religious men.

Expedients have been devised for making honest folks patronize lotteries in spite of their prejudices. The lottery ticket is cunningly incorporated with some honest kind of ticket, like a season ticket to a fair—sometimes by a coupon, sometimes by a mere number printed on the ticket—and under this cloak is smuggled into many hands that would otherwise reject it. But a season ticket of admission to a fair which gives the holder a chance in a lottery is just as much a lottery ticket as if it were not also an admission ticket.

A subscription to a periodical which gives the subscriber a chance to draw a lottery prize is as much a lottery ticket as if it were nothing more.

Criminals often try to escape by a change of name. The lottery does this. It is called a raffle, etc. Under so many aliases the rogue may be detected by this question: Is it designed to get by chance a thing of superior value to the money ventured? If so, the lottery principle is apparent.

The evil tendency of grab-bags, fish-ponds, etc., is an indisputable reason for their banishment from fairs. Not that they are in every case lotteries. They are sometimes planned that every article in bag or pond is fully worth the price of the chance. They do not in such cases involve the lottery idea of getting something for nothing by chance. But lessons at the most orthodox grab-bag make a road toward real lotteries. Children are not versed in distinguishing things that look much alike, nor can they be expected always to stop at the proper point when they get agoing. It is better to set a fence back a little from the edge of the cliff than on its very verge.

The same consideration applies to what is known as "guess-cake." The idea of the guess-cake is the obtaining of a prize through a trial of skill (for good guessing involves skill). Prizes in games of skill are legitimate and entrance fees to the contest are legitimate. But there is a "ring-cake," which involves the lottery idea of getting by chance a prize of larger value than the sum ventured. However correct the distinction be, it is too fine for practical use. The two things look too nearly alike. People will say, "cake is cake"; they will not discriminate. We must "make straight paths." Contrivances that need to be explained and justified ought not to be used as money-rakes for the Lord's treasury.

Prize voting is more innocent in appearance, but really not different from betting at a horse-race. What equivalent does the man who pays a dollar and records the votes for his favorite preacher or barber obtain for his money? He has the excitement of the game, like any gambler. He has also helped the fair. So do all the lottery patrons. Beyond that, he has just the equivalent for his dollar that the bettor on the gray gelding at the country races has for his. If his horse loses or if his mare loses, he is so much out. It makes no difference to the moral character of the art whether the prize goes to the voter or the voter's favorite. It is time that this sort of betting (so objectionable also on other grounds) were banished from our church fairs.

The prize package business is steeped in iniquity. It may or may not be true, as charged, that the packages actually containing prizes are marked for the benefit of the initiated. But the advertisement of a hidden greenback or silver piece is only a trick to sell trash or indifferent stuff at a high price, since good stuff will generally sell off itself at fair rates. No upright dealer should keep such goods. No railway corporation should allow this knavish traffic in its cars. No parent should allow his children to touch "prize packages." Every objection to lotteries applies with equal force to these. Our boys and girls cannot be too carefully taught that the only profitable prizes are those which come by merit, fairly earned in honorable competition at useful work.—Independent.

Overcrowded Cities.

There is hardly a city in the United States which does not contain more people than can get a fair, honest living, by labor or trade in the best times. when times of business depression come, like those through which we have passed, and are passing, there is a large class that must be helped, to keep them from cruel suffering. Still the cities grow; while whole regions of the country, especially its older portion, are depopulated year by year. Yet the fact is patent to-day that the only prosperous class is the agricultural. We have now the anomaly of thrifty farmers and starving tradesmen. The agricultural classes of the West are prosperous. They had a good crop last year, and have received good prices for all their products; and while the cities are in trouble, and manufactories are running on half time or not running at all, the Western farmer has money in his pocket, and a ready market for everything he has to sell. The country must be fed, and he feeds it. The city family may do without new clothes, and a thousand luxurious appliances, but it must have bread and meat. There is nothing that can prevent the steady prosperity of the American farmer but the combinations and "corners" of middle-men, that force unnatural conditions upon the finances and markets of the country.

The forsaking of the farm for the city life is one of the great evils of the time, and so far it has received no appreciable check. Every young man apparently, who thinks he can get a living in the city, or at the minor centers of population, quits his lonely home upon the farm and joins the multitude. Once in the city, he never returns. Notwithstanding the confinement and the straitened conditions of his new life, he clings to it until he dies, adding his family to the permanent population of his new home. Mr. Greeley in his days of active philanthropy, used to urge men to leave the city—to go West—to join the agricultural population, and thus make themselves sure of a competent livelihood. He might as well have talked to the wind. A city population can neither be coaxed nor driven into agricultural pursuits. It is not that they are afraid of work. The average worker of the city toils more hours than the average farmer in any quarter of the country. He is neither fed nor lodged as well as the farmer. He is less independent than the farmer. He is a bond-slave to his employers and his conditions; yet the agricultural life has no charms for him.

Whatever the reason for this may be, it is not based in the nature of the work, or in its material rewards. The farmer is demonstrably better off than the worker of the city. He is more independent, has more command of his own time, fares better at table, lodges better, and gets a better return for his labor. What is the reason, then, that the farmer's boy runs to the city the first chance he gets, and remains, if he can possibly find there the means of life.

It can only be found, we believe, in the social leanness, or social starvation, of American agricultural life. The American farmer, in all his planning, and all his building, has never made provision for life. He has only considered the means of getting a living. Everything outside of this—everything relating to society and culture—has been steadily ignored. He gives his children the advantages of schools, not recognizing the fact that these very advantages call into life a new set of social wants. A bright, well-educated family, in a lonely farm-house, is very different material from a family brought up in ignorance. An American farmer's children, who have had a few terms at a neighboring academy, resemble in no degree the children of the European peasant. They come home with a new idea and new wants, if there is no provision made for these new wants, and they find no opportunities for their satisfaction, they will be ready on reaching their majority to fly the farm and seek the city.

If the American farmer wishes to keep his children near him, he must learn the difference between living and getting a living; and we mistake him and his grade of culture altogether if he does not stop over this statement and wonder what we mean by it. To get a living, to make money, to become "forehanded"—this is the whole of life to agricultural multitudes discouraging in their number to contemplate. To them there is no difference between living and getting a living. Their whole life consists in getting a living; and when their families come back to them from their schooling, and find that, really, this is the only pursuit that has any recognition under the paternal roof, they must go away. The boys push to the centers or the cities, and the girls follow them if they can. A young man or young woman raised to the point where they apprehend the difference between living and getting a living can never be satisfied with the latter alone. Either the farmer's children must be kept ignorant, or provision must be made for their social wants. Brains and hearts need food and clothing as well as bodies; and those who have learned to recognize brains and hearts as the best and most important part of their personal possessions, will go where they can find the ministry they need.

What is the remedy? How shall farmers manage to keep the children near them? How can we discourage the influx of unnecessary—nay, burdensome—populations into the cities? We answer: By making agricultural society attractive. Fill the farm-houses with periodicals and books. Establish central reading rooms, or neighborhood clubs. Encourage the social meetings of the young. Have concerts. Establish a bright, active, social life, that shall give some significance to labor. Above all, build as far as possible, in villages. It is better to go a mile to one's daily labor than to place one's self a mile away from a neighbor. The isolation of American farm-life is the great curse of that life, and it falls upon the woman with a hardship that the men cannot appreciate, and drives the educated young away—Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for April..

Children's Corner.

Hints to Girls and Boys on Good Manners.

Never look over another person, when he is writing a letter, or reading that which does not concern you.

Never enter another's room abruptly. Have you special business? Knock gently at the door, or ask permission to enter.

Never select the best articles of food at the table. Wait till you are helped. Be modest, polite, temperate.

Never ask trifling or foolish questions, or inquire about things with which you are already familiar. "A fool's voice is known by a multitude of words."

Never speak unless you have something to say—"think twice before you speak once." "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin, but he that refraineth his lips is wise." Prov. x. 19.

Never dissemble, feign yourself sick, or asleep, or unwell, to avoid correction or some other unpleasant thing. This is a species of lying, for which the Lord will not hold you guiltless. "Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile." "Put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee." "Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord."

Never be glad or rejoice at another's calamity or misfortune, even though he be your enemy. "He that is glad at calamities, shall not be unpunished." "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink, for, so doing, thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." "Be not overcome with evil, but overcome evil with good."

Never mock or ridicule the poor, the infirm, or the aged. "He that mocketh the poor, reproacheth his maker." "Better is the poor, that walketh in his integrity, than he that is perverse in his lips and is a fool." Proverbs xix. 1.

Never set up your own will in opposition to your parents or teachers. Submit to them calmly, sweetly, cheerfully. "Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry."

When addressed by your parents or superiors, give immediate attention.

Be kind and gentle to all, to your brothers and sisters invariably.

When a favor is conferred, always express your gratitude politely to the person who bestows it. D. F. N.

Chloe Lankton.

We sometimes see persons who were beautiful when young, but who became ugly when they grew older. But if we are growing like Jesus, and the light he gives is making us beautiful, then the longer we live and the older we get, the more beautiful we shall grow.

There is living in the town of New Hartford, in Connecticut, in a small unpainted house by the roadside, about two miles from the village, a poor woman by the name of Chloe Lankton. She is confined to her bed with a disease that can never be cured in this life. For more than thirty years she has lain on that humble bed, unable to rise or be removed. She is in constant bodily pain. At times her sufferings are so great, that it is wonderful how she can live. Her father and mother and four sisters have died, one after another, and been carried from her sight since she has lain on that bed. She has no relative in the world, and no support but what friends give without being asked; and no one to wait on her but a hired servant. Yet the light which Jesus gives has so shined into the heart of that lonely sufferer, as to make her look really beautiful. Her face is said to beam almost like the face of an angel. Those who go to see her come away charmed, as if they had been to visit a princess. Young people for miles around go to see her, not from pity, but for the pleasure they find in her company. The very children go in troops to her house, to show her all their treasures, and ask her advice about all their plans and playthings. And what has given this poor lonely sufferer such power to please and charm both old and young? Nothing but the light which Jesus gives. This shines into her heart. It makes her gentle, and loving, and kind, as he is. It gives to her voice and face and manner, a sweetness and beauty, that cause all who know her to love her. The light gives beauty; and for this reason Jesus may be compared to the light.—S. S. World.

Religious Intelligence.

—Mr. Gladstone, who has done such service to the cause of Protestantism in staying, by his late writings, the tide of Romanism that has been threatening to flood England, has a good prospect opened up for him, in the fact that Cardinal Cullen has urged the Roman Catholics throughout Ireland to pray for his conversion, "as," he says, "he is a great and good statesman erring."

—The new Presbyterian church erected by Dr. John Hall's congregation in New York, is beyond question the most magnificent ever erected in that city. It has been two years in building, and will cost when completed nearly $1,000,000. This sum, an exchange prudently suggests, might have erected 200 churches in the country at a cost of $5000 each, and the Gospel thus been brought to thousands.

—The Rev. Dr. Lorimer says of Mr. Varley's work in Boston: "In our judgment, the most remarkable effect of his brief ministry has been the fresh impulse it has given to the examination of the Bible. Precious to us before his coming, it seems doubly so at present. We heard it said that during his work in Toronto, all the Bibles in the city were bought up. We cannot say as much for Boston—possibly we keep a larger supply on hand than our Canadian neighbors—but it will not be denied that many hitherto neglected Bibles have been brought into requisition and diligently used. It is also evident that the religious condition of the churches has been strikingly improved. Believers have realized the fact that they live too commonly below their privileges, and have been moved to seek an increase of spiritual life. We cannot write now of the number of conversions which have occurred, but in this direction his ministry has not been barren, as we are persuaded the next few weeks will demonstrate."

—The latest religious news from Germany is as follows: Bishop Martin of Paderborn, is not to be released from the Fortress at Wesel until he acknowledges the authority of the Ecclesiastical Court appointed by the State. All religious orders, the chief house of which is in a foreign country, have been banished from Alsace. The National Liberal party in the Prussian Diet have approved of the Government bill abrogating those clauses of the Constitution which relate to the independent administration of ecclesiastical affairs, to the free intercourse between religious associations and their superiors, and the clause which removed clerical appointments from the control of the Government. Another bill, it is stated, will soon be laid before the Diet. This suppresses all religious orders in Prussia except those engaged exclusively in nursing the sick. The orders devoted to education are given two years of grace. Pensions will be paid to the members of the proscribed orders from the proceeds of their houses and property. The measure was originally designed for the whole of Germany, but its operations for the present are confined to Prussia.

—Messrs. Whittle and Bliss, evangelists, who have labored successfully at Louisville and Nashville, began their meetings at Nashville, Tenn., May 15.

—At last accouuts, Mr. Hammond was laboring with great effect in the city of Oakland, which is situated across the bay from San Francisco. With a party of forty he paid a two days' visit to Vallejo, a notoriously wicked place, the result being a number of conversions and an increased religious interest.

—It is reported from Poland that the Czar has permitted the return to their sees of the Polish Roman Catholic Bishops, with one exception, who had been banished to the interior of Russia. Permission has also been granted to the Polish clergy, it is stated, to hold direct communication with the Roman Curia, under the supervision of the Government.

—A singular instance of the bigotry of ritualism is noticed in Birmingham, Eng., where the ritualists are circulating an appeal or contributions to help rescue a large district of six thousand inhabitants from the possession of the Low Church party. They want £2,000. All benefactors will be prayed for, and donors of one guinea and upwards will be remembered by name at the altar once a month.

—The American Bible Society held its anniversary last week in Chicago, for the first time in the West. At the directors meeting in New York orders were given for a reference Bible in agate type, 16mo, to be known as the "Centennial Bible." The Board also approved of the publication in Russia, of 20,000 copies of the Reval-Esthonian Testament and Psalms; the publication of the New Testament in the Paharee dialect, for circulation in Northern India. Numerous grants were made to auxiliary societies, missionary boards, and individuals. The number of copies included in these grants is about 38,000, of the value of about $10,500. Funds were also granted to the amount of $3,340 for expenditure in Bible work in France, Bulgaria, China and Japan. A committee of missionaries at Shanghai was appointed to revise the Shanghai Colloquial New Testament, and the missionaries at Constantinople, who are now revising the Turkish New Testament, and expecting to complete that work next summer, were invited to continue their work so as to include the old Testament in Turkish. The receipts for April were $18,373; copies issued, 55,702.

—There are forty-one Baptist churches in New Orleans, thirty-nine of which belong to colored congregations.

News of the Week.

The City.

The distillers and their accomplices find that they must answer for their fraud. Several have been released from arrest under heavy bonds, and a number of government employees have been discharged, among them Supervisor of Internal Revenue, D. W. Munn.——Mrs. Lincoln, wife of the lamented President, has for some years shown signs of insanity which rapidly developed on her return to this city from Florida. Her case was brought before a highly respectable jury last week by friends and a legal decision of her insanity given. Before being taken to Bellevue hospital in Batavia she endeavored to commit suicide by poison. Her only son, Robert, and numerous friends interested in the sad case have taken every means to render her condition comfortable.

The Grasshopper Plague.

Additional advices from Missouri and Kansas are very discouraging, and there seems to be no prospect of the grasshoppers departing until everything is devoured in Missouri. The plague is most severe in the region of Paole, Fort Scott, and Atchison, Kansas, and considerable damage has been done. Special telegrams from Pleasant Hill, Liberty, Indianapolis, St. Joseph, Lexington, Kansas City and St. Louis, in Missouri, give most alarming details of the extent and increase of the grasshoppers. It seems they have crossed the Missouri River in their eastward march, and are playing sad havoc with the crops. The western tier of counties tre already overrun with these pests, and they appear to be eating their way eastward. It is feared they will pass through the entire State of Missouri and infest Southern Illinois during the present season. Ten thousand square miles of Missouri land has already been laid waste, and the farmers are utterly discouraged. Every effort is being made to exterminate the plague, but all seems futile. It seems nothing short of a miracle can avert famine and bankruptcy. All the wholesale houses of St. Louis are receiving letters by hundreds from western Missouri creditors, declaring their total inability to meet their paper on account of the plague. The formation of relief committees is already being agitated. The grasshoppers are not devouring the land so thoroughly as last year, many fields in invaded districts and sometimes large tracts being untouched.

General.

Rev. Geo. Bacon and A. H. Bradford have rendered themselves unenviably conspicuous by refusing to sit as members of the board of trustees of the Congregational Union because Henry C. Bowen, of the Independent, is a member. They are piqued on account of his testimony against Beecher.——The Brooklin scandal case was resumed on Wednesday of last week for the summing up: Judge Porter opening for the defense.——A fire broke out in Osceola, Pa., last Thursday, and resulted in very extensive damage to the town. So rapid was its movement that it was found necessary to send the women and children left houseless away from the town, and the train on which they were traveling had a narrow escape in passing through the burning forests. $500,000 worth of lumber was burnt. Almost all the public buildings were destroyed, besides about 200 houses, making 1,500 people homeless. At Houtzdale, also, a terrible conflagration raged. Fourteen houses were burned, with several lumber-mills and 50,000,000 feet of lumber. The loss is estimated at $2,000,000.——The celebration of the centennial of the signing of the Mecklenburg declaration of independence took place at Charleston, N. C., last Thursday, and attracted the largest assemblage ever known in the State, estimated to be over 25,000.

Temperance.

Adulterated Beer.

Those jolly brewers who have got into the way of assembling annually (they were last together in Boston) to declare to the country the advantages of the business and the healthfulness of beer, have fallen into disgrace over in Germany. The fall was not far, for the disgrace was upon them when they entered the wicked occupation of supplying swill stuff to their fellow creatures. Every well-regulated family knows the difference between pure and swill milk, and how the one nourishes and builds up towards perfection and the other poisons and enfeebles. The difference is even more marked between pure water, exhilarating coffee and beer. The brewers of Germany, who are as respectable (!) and humane (!) as their selfish brethren of this country or England, have been caught using the common colchicum, which grows wild in many parts of that country, and other countries as well, to produce the requisite degree of bitterness so palatable to beer drinkers. How men do go after bitter things! It is no secret that this plant is a rank poison, and unwholesome and dangerous to the human constitution; but what care the brewers of Germany or America for the bodies or the souls of the people? It is their earnings and their purses they are after. Our reader will recall how the brewers (fine philanthropists they,) at their late annual gathering in Boston, ridiculed religion and pure things, and illustrated and recommended the old heathenish idea, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die!"

The gathering of the colchicum seed in the land of lager beer has excited the authorities there whose business it is to gather the taxes, to look into the matter. The wholesale druggists of Frankfort and Nuremburg, both great centers of the brewery trade, have been carrying on an increasing business in this seed in many parts of Bavaria and the Hessian Odenwald mountains, all of which has been collected for brewer's use in place of hops. From these facts, we think our readers will conclude that brewers, like distillers, have well earned the indignation of mankind. For the sake of the people and welfare of the nation, the German authorities are about adopting a Prohibition law against the use of this most poisonous seed, which tends to debase and enslave the citizen. If they had some of our politicians yonder, we would hear of moral suasion being the remedy, and legal restraints an unwarrantable interference with the freedom of the subject. The Germans, however, know that the gentle arm of persuasion needs the co-operation of the stronger arm of the law to root out and outlaw abuses. When an enemy is in the land, "suasion" don't trouble his operation much. Force is needed.

We once heard a gentleman largely engaged in credit trade say, during the progress of a commercial panic, as he turned over the pages of his Bills Payable book, that "if I could get conveniently rid of these for the next sixty days, I would be perfectly happy." In the same way may this nation and others—for they are in equal perplexity with the merchant—say, if we only could rid ourselves of the vile traffic in beer and whiskey, our troubles would instantly lighten. It is the manufacture and use of intoxicants that make government difficult. The rascals who trade in the article are throwing the State coach off the track, precisely like those fiends who throw railway trains off the track that they may gather the plunder. The one class is as heartless as the other. Both are after the spoils, caring not a rush for the pains and the poverty that follow their trade. It is a time not for regulation but extirpation. Our Christian civilization is blotted and obstructed by these foul enemies, who are destroying the bodies and souls of their customers for their money. Our taverns and prisons are multiplying in every State but Maine. The ranks of criminal loafers and lazy idlers are ever full and fuller, and this is the infamous work of brewers and distillers, who are without compassion or thoughts of mercy for their suffering fellow-creatures. Prohibition is the cure. Raise the standard and push on the work. Beer and whiskey have occupied too long. Let them give way to things lovely and honest.—New York Witness.

—Last year, in Dundee, Scotland, 502 women were punished for drunkenness and 816 for crime produced by drunkenness.

Tobacco Experience of Rev. J. S. Inskip given at a National Camp-meeting in 1871. Alluding to the fact that he had for years been an inveterate smoker, he remarked that one day while enjoying his cigar, a voice seemed to say to him, "The bodies of Christians are temples of the Holy Ghost."

He then called to mind the fact that the Bible declared this to be the case. And his next thought was, "Ought temples of the Holy Ghost to emit so much smoke?" This was a reflection which, doubtless did not pass away quite as quickly as the fumes from his cigar. This is to be supposed from the fact that he soon resolved to smoke no more. The habit seemed inconsistent to one professing to be a temple of the Holy Ghost. It was accordingly, a just intimated, heartily abandoned. Subsequently, however, while indulging in it moderately, as a medicine, the thought came to him, "Can't I give it up? Have I not told the people that I've given up all for Jesus? And shall I not give up this contemptible idol?" And by the grace of God he did give it up. Afterwards some of his friends suggested to him that he might use it as a medicine without giving offense; but now he did not care what was said about his using it for that purpose. He had got hold of a wonderful, precious principle, and that was to give it up for Christ's sake, and he did so.

"MR. MOODY AND THE DRINK.—Our good friends who have so great an objection to strong language must surely be awfully horrified at Mr. Moody. Right nobly is he doing his duty. He was not long in discovering the sin which garrisoned the citadel of Dublin Christianity, and volleys of the most deadly character have been fired night and day from his platforms at the drink. Here is a sample. Speaking on Thursday, November the 12th, on 'The Two Adams,' he referred to Galations 5th chap. and 21st verse, thus: "Drunkenness! Drunkenness! ! Drunkenness! ! ! I wish I could burn that word down into the heart of every one present. Look at those men that you any day see reeling about your streets. Where do you think that cursed habit is leading them? Do you think that drunkenness can come from the Second Adam. I tell you it don't. Why, it was only last night a man came up in the inquiry-room and had some talk with me. I asked him if he was a Christian. He said he believed he was—nay, he was sure he was; but that he indulged sometimes. I said, "What does that mean—does it mean that you get drunk sometimes?" He said, "Yes, but that he was sure he was a Christian for all that." I tell you, my friends, that I doubt that man's Christianity. I doubt that man's conversion. Why, what does Paul say about it? Here is what he says, 'They which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God,'—Shall not inherit the kingdom of God. That is what Paul says, and I tell you again, my friends, that I don't give much for such Christianity as that man's who gets drunk sometimes. But this is not all. The Scripture says, "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit.' It says this and more. It pronounces "Woe to the man who putteth the bottle to his neighbor's lips." Is there a rum seller here listening to me—one of those men who live by the trade of putting the bottle to their neighbor's lips? If there are such men here to-day, I tell you, my friends, get out of the business as fast as you can—as Lot fled from Sodom—lest you find yourselves in hell, with the wretched victims of drink, whom you have helped to drag down to the infernal pit. "'

EXPOSITION OF THE GRANGE.

[CONCLUDED.]

THE GODDESSES OF THE GRANGE.

CERES, FLORA AND POMONA.

Doubtless some moral and, possibly, even pious women, after having been inveigled into the grange, have unthinkingly allowed themselves to be adorned(?) with the cast off names of the Heathen goddesses, Ceres, Flora and Pomona. Surely they will not esteem such titles an honor when they know the character of the goddesses whose names they bear.

CERES.

"Ceres, the goddess of corn and of harvests, was daughter of Saturn and Vesta. She had a daughter by Jupiter, whom she ealled Pherephata, fruit bearing, and afterwards Proserpine. This daughter was carried away by Pluto, as she was gathering flowers uear Enna.

The rape of Proserpine was grievous to Ceres, who sought her all over Sieily. * * * The Sicilians made a yearly saerifiee to Ceres, every man according to his abilities; and the fountain of Cyane, through which Pluto opened himself a passage with his trident, was publicly honored with an offering of bulls and the blood of the victims was shed in the waters of the fountain. Besides these, other ceremonies were observed in honor of the goddesses who had so peculiarly favored the island.

The commemoration of the rape was celebrated about the beginning of harvest, and the search of Ceres at the time that corn is sown. The latter festival continued six successive days. Attiea, which had been so eminently distinguished by the goddess, gratefully remembered her favors in the eelebration of the Eleusinian mysteries. Ceres also performed the duties of a legislator, and the Sicilians found the advantages of her salutary laws; hence her surname of Thesmophora. She is the same as Isis of the Egyptians.

* * * * * * *

In their sacrifices, the ancients offered Ceres a pregnant sow, as that animal often injures and destroys the produetions of the earth. While the corn was yet in grass they offered her a ram after the victim had been led three times round the field. The Romans paid her great adoration and her festivals were yearly celebrated by the Roman matrons in the month of April, during eight days. They always bore lighted torches in commemoration of the goddess; and whoever came to these festivals without a previous invitation was punished with death."—Lempriere's Classical Dictionary.

"In Greece, the Eleusinian festival was of Ceres."—Encyclopedia Americana.

"Ceres, the goddess of corn and husbandry, the sister of Jupiter, worshipped chiefly at Eleusis, in Greeee, and in Sicily; her sacred rites were kept very secret. She is represented with her head crowned with ears of corn or poppies and her robes falling down to her feet, holding a torch in her hand. Ceres is called Legifera, the law-giver, because laws were the effect of husbandry, and Arcana, because her sacred rites were celebrated with great secrecy and with torches, particularly at Eleusis in Attica. Whoever entered without being initiated, although ignorant of this prohibition, was put to death. Those initiated were called mystae, whenee mysterium."—Adams' Roman Antiquities.

FLORA.

"Flora, the goddess of flowers and gardens among the Romans, the same as the Chloris of the Greeks. Some suppose that she was originally a common courtezan, who had left to the Romans the immense riches which she had acquired by prostitution and lasciviousness, in remembrance of which a yearly festival was instituted in her honor. She was worshipped even among the Sabines, long before the foundation of Rome, and likewise among the Phocians.

Games in honor of Flora, at Rome, were instituted about the age of Romulus, but they were not celebrated with regularity and proper attention till the year U. C. 580. They were observed yearly, and exhibited a scene of the most unbounded licentiousness."—Lempriere's Classical Dictionary.

POMONA.

"Pomona a nymph at Rome who was supposed to preside over gardens and to be the goddess of all sorts of fruit trees. She had a temple at Rome and a regular priest, called Flomens Pomonalis, who offered saerifices to her divinity for the preservation of fruit. Many of the gods of the country endeavored to gain her affection, but she received their addresses with coldness. Vertumnus was the only one who, by assuming different shapes and introducing himself into her company under the form of an old woman, prevailed on her to break her vow of celebacy and to marry him."—Lempriere's Classical Dictionary.

PUBLISHERS PREFACE.

Reader, we ask your careful, prayerful examination of the origin and character of the Grange as shown in the following pages.

To us it does not seem possible that any candid person can fail to see in its constitution, ritual, prayers, songs, and burial services, the clearest possible evidence of the most intense selfishness and hypocricy.

True, like all the other secret orders, it openly professes universal benevolence, and in the Installation ceremonies (usually public) the community are assured by the Installing officer that: "Its teachings are the loftiest that man can seek;" thus putting its teachings above those of Christ himself.

And like the other orders while expressly prohibiting all discussion of politics or religion, it forces upon the initiate a set of Christless religious ceremonies, and the leaders of the Grange have from the first used it as a political machine to carry them to office. Besides these objections which ought to keep out of the order every honest farmer, and especially every Christian one, we believe in the words of Marion Grange, No. 391, (see page 96.) "that farmers can combine and perfect an organization for their benefit, more effective than the Patrons of Husbandry, which possesses fundamental laws more in harmony with the genius of our republican institutions, and which can be maintained at a greatly redueed cost; in short, that the farmers can get along much better without than with the present pretentious, extravagant, and vicious government of the Order."

Farm and Garden.

Corn for Fodder.

Mr. W. C. Hinkham, gives in the Cincinnati Gazette his experience in sowing corn for fodder. He says:

I select a rich soil, such as would produce a good crop of corn. I plow it any time in May, when the soil is not to wet, and let it lie till weeds begin to show themselves. I then harrow it thoroughly, which generally destroys the weeds and makes the surface level and mellow. About the middle of June I again plow it shallow, just enough to destroy all the weeds and make a mellow seed bed. I sow immediately after this plowing, running the harrow once over it, which is generally sufficient to cover the seed.

I have sown three bushels, and also two and a half bushels shelled corn per acre. I think the latter quantity about the right amount, if all of it is well covered. I gave it no further culture. It is surprising how quickly it will germinate, and with what rapidity and luxuriance it will grow.

I aim to harvest it after it is in tassel, and after the pollen has been shed, but a few days or weeks later I consider not important. My opinion is that, at this stage, by the law of its nature, the stalk is most fully charged with that nutriment which is intended for the grain, and if cut at this time, and properly cured, this nutriment is retained in the stalk and leaf, and therefore in its best condition to have the most value as an article of fodder. I cut it with the common reaping sickle, laying it in swaths evenly.

Now comes the most difficult and critical part of the whole thing, viz., to get it well cured and dry before rain or damp weather causes it to mold. If the weather is dry, I prefer to let it lie in the swath for a day. Then I stand it up in small stooks, tying it firmly at the top. Previous experience has taught me never to bind it in bundles, as in that way it will be almost certain to mold. I usually let it stand in the field till wanted for winter feeding. If, however, it becomes thoroughly dry before then, I haul it into the barn. But at any time I find it will not keep without moulding if stowed away in a horizontal position. It must stand perpendicularly, in order to admit a greater ventilation.

I have never ascertained the product in tons per acre, but it is always very large, and sometimes quite enormous. I am confident it quite exceeds our best timothy meadows. Neither am I able to say what its nutritive value is, compared with meadow hay, but I know by observation that no fodder is apparently better relished or eaten with more avidity by both horses and cattle; and I feel convinced that no other fodder keeps the stomach and bowels of horses in a more healthy condition.

The ease with which the crop may be grown, the large product on a given acre, and its excellence as a winter forage, makes me free to commend its culture to every farmer having suitable soil. It also leaves the ground in admirable condition for potatoes, or strawberries the following year.

—It is always well to brush cows before milking, especially at the season of the year when they are changing their coats. Some dairymen always provide milkers with a little broom, to dust off any loose hairs or dirt that would be liable to fall into the milk-pail while milking. It is a neat practice, and one to be recommended.

Home and Health Hints.

The following is said to be a very superior method for staining any kind of wood in imitation of walnut, while it is also cheap, and simple in its manipulation. The wood, previously thoroughly dried and warmed, is coated once or twice with a stain composed of one part, by weight, of extract of walnut-peel, dissolved in six parts of soft water by heating it to boiling, and stirring. The wood thus treated, when half dry, is brushed with a solution of one part, by weight, of bichromate of potash in five parts of boiling water, and is then allowed to dry thoroughly, and is to be rubbed and polished as usual. Red beech and elder, under this treatment, assume a most deceptive resemblence to American walnut. The color is fixed in the wood to a depth of one or two lines.

Lovers of house plants, will be sorry to learn that the oleander is a dangerous plant. But so it is. Children have been poisoned by eating the flower petals; cattle have been killed by browsing on the foliage; a single drop, it is said, of the milky acrid juice that exudes when a twig or leaf is broken off is sufficient to produce the death of an infant. The odor exhaled from the blossoms is also deleterious to the health. These are sufficient reasons, beautiful as the shrub is, for banishing it from the house and garden.

Valuable Receipt.—The following was given us by a mother whose infant child, she is sure, has been cured of a wasting diarrhoea by its use. In many cases of the kind it has been found an invaluable remedy when all others have failed. In one pint of port wine dissolve a half-pound of loaf sugar; mix with a tablespoonful of flour three or four of water; stir till smooth; add this to the wine and sugar, and scald all together. Keep in a cool place. For a dose give a teaspoonful three or four times a day. The port wine must be genuine, not a mixture of logwood and bad whiskey.

All sorts of vessels and utensils may be purified from long-retained smells of every kind, in the easiest and most perfect manner, by rinsing them out well with charcoal powder, after the grosser impurities have been scoured off with sand and potash.

Sydenham recommends the application of alcohol to burns, especially for children, where immediate relief is most desirable. The alcohol should be applied for one or two hours constantly, as the pain returns when dry. In case of large burns, care must be taken lest the alcoholic vapors stupefy the child.

It is said that a free use of asparagus will cure rheumatism and gout.

Ink stains may be removed from books by wetting the spot with a solution of oxalic acid, one oz., water half pint.

A Cure for a Felon.—A simple and very effective remedy for felon can be made with equal parts of castile soap and maple sugar; heat and stir them together until they make tolerably thick salve. It should be applied as soon as possible after discovering the presence of the felon. Spread it thick on a strip of cloth or soft leather, and apply while warm as can be borne; renew in a few hours, and continue till the pain ceases. If you have not castile, any soap will do.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentlcman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal; or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages jnst issned by him, purporting to give a full and accurate acconnt, from personal knowledge, of tne Morgan 'abdnction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this conntry, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"We are acqnainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—'The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abdnction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason

By REV. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Chur ,

WORCESTER, MASS.

This is our first German tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

ENOCH HONEYWELL'S TRACT

TO THE YOUNG MEN OE AMERICA. Postage, 3 cents per 100 Tracts. Tracts Free.

Publishers' Department.

Make Hay While the Sun Shines.

It has been a general testimony of friends who have canvassed for the Cynosure that one of the most favorable times for obtaining Cynosure subscriptions is immediately after Anti-masonic lectures. During the few weeks immediately before and after the Pittsburgh Convention there will be lectures at numerous points. We especially request those who deliver the lectsures to see that some efficient friend who desires to promote this reform canvasses the community carefully and obtains as large a list of subscribers as possible. We will be glad to supply on application all lecturers and others who will canvass for the paper with sample copies, subscription papers, circulars and prospectuses. Do not allow one of the best methods of promoting this reform to pass unimproved for want of a little thought and effort. An intelligent Anti-masonic friend said, before the Cynosure was started, such a paper might have a list of ten thousand subscribers in less than a year. There are enough earnest friends throughout the country to obtain such a list. Our experience has shown that this is "easier said than done," for still the subscription list lingers at about 4,000; and the paper does not now pay expenses though published with as much economy as possible.

If all who have an opportunity, improve it in working for the increased circulation of the Cynosure during the next month we feel that the subscription list might be greatly enlarged and this reform materially advanced.

The first of July we expect to give our quarterly report of the number of Cynosure subscriptions. Will you do all that you can to make the report encouraging?

THE GRANGE EXPOSITION is now completed and the pamphlet of 96 pages will be completed this week and our first edition of 2,000 copies ought not to last a month. We call especial attention to our offer to fill all cash orders for ten copies or more, received before June 1st at the 100 rate, 10 cents each, postage or express charges extra. The postage on 10 copies is 25 cents. This offer will not be continued after June 1st. Those who have not carefully noticed this exposition in the Cynosure will see by the table of contents in this paper, that it is a book of unusual interest to every friend of our cause. Shall it not have a very wide circulation?

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING MAY 22d, 1875, from—John Allen, Jno Acheson, Wm Ault, James Bower, A Bedford, J M Bishop, Job Burnap, Guernsey Camp, James Donaldson, Edward V Downey, Rufus Day, D Dempsey, S W Fisk, J B Freeland, C Gray, John P Gibson, C D Graham, D B Giles, Samuel Hale, Step Higginson, E Harrow, E Johnson, John T Kiggins, David Longman, Donald McLaren, Thos Moore, Wm McConnell, John McAulley, John Miller, John Manville, Oliver Macy, O D Ogleby, S Y Orr, E T Preston, E B Palmer, Wm P Pease, Lucy Packard, Mrs S J M Robinson, J L Rawson, F W Smith, Burger Smith, Conrad Stegner, W H Smylie, W R Tippin, Geo W Taylor, C H Welch.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

Twenty subscriptions for six months count the same as ten for a year.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2,50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

C&N-W LINES

This great corporation now owns and operates over two thousand miles of road. With one branch it reaches Racine, Kenosha, Milwaukee, and the country north thereof; with another line it pushes through Janesville, Watertown, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Escanaba, to Negaunee and Marquette; with another line it passes through Madison, Elroy, and for St. Paul and Minneapolis; branching westward from Elroy, it runs to and through Winona, Owatonna, St. Peter, Mankato, New Ulm, and stops not until Lake Kampeska, Dakota, is reached; another line starts from Chicago, and runs through Elgin and Rockford, to Freeport, and, via the Illinois Central, reaches Warren, Galena and Dubuque, and the country beyond. Still another line runs almost due westward from Chicago, and passes through Dixon, Sterling, Fulton, Clinton (Iowa), Cedar Rapids, Marshaltown, Grand Junction, Missouri Valley Junction, to Council Bluffs and Omaha. This last-named is the "GREAT TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE," and the pioneer overland line for NEBRASKA, COLORADO, UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA,

CALIFORNIA and the PACIFIC COAST.

It runs through the Garden of Illinois and Iowa, and is the best, safest, shortest and quickest route for OMAHA, LINCOLN, and other points in NEBRASKA; and for CHEYENNE, DENVER, SALT LAKE CITY, VIRGINIA CITY, CARSON, SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, and all other points west of the Missouri River.

If you want to go to Milwaukee, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, De Pere, Ripon, Baraboo, Eau Claire, Hudson, Stillwater, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Breckenridge, Morehead, Fort Garry, Winona, Plattville, Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Sioux City, Yankton, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, or a hundred other northren, north-western or western points, this line is the one you should take. The track is of the best steel rail, and all the appointments are first-class in every respect. The trains are made up of elegant new Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Coaches, luxurious Day Coaches, and pleasant lounging and smoking-cars. The cars are all equipped with the celebrated Miller Safety Platform, and patent Buffers and Couplings, Westinghouse Safety Air Brakes, and every other appliance that has been devised for the safety of passenger trains. All trains are run by telegraph. In a word, this GREAT LINE has the best and smoothest track, and the most elegant and comfortable equipment of any road in the West, and has no competitor in the country. It is eminently the favorite route with Chicagoans traveling west, north, or northwest, and is acknowledged by the traveling public to be the popular line for all points in Northren Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Dakota, Western Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California and the Pacific Slope.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway leave Chicago as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, Four through trains daily, Pullman cars on night trains.

For Winona and points in Minnesota, One through train daily.

For Dubuque, via Freeport, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Dubuque and La Crosse, via Clinton, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Sioux City and Yankton, Two trains daily. Pullman Cars to Missouri Valley Junction.

For Lake Geneva, Four trains daily.

For Rockford, Sterling, Kenosha, Janesville, and other points, you can have from two to ten trains daily.

Topics of the Time.

The affairs of the British kingdom are running so smoothly that Parliament found time to adjourn last Wednesday for a horse race,—for "Derby day" with all its traditional honors is nothing else—and we do not hear a lisp of objection. A year or two since Thomas Hughes protested from his seat in the Commons against the dishonor of a similar action. This degrading sport, made popular by the English nobility, has become a sort of mania, and even Church of England ministers are its zealous patrons. At the last St. Ledger race the winning horse was owned by a Rev. Mr. King, a man eighty-two years old This clerical sportsman pocketed stakes amountiug to nearly $23,000 on the occasion. We have not yet learned to appreciate such business but the preaching and practice of the Beecher-Murray theologians draws strongly in that direction.

Rankin, the deposed Custom House architect has written a long letter of self-vindication to the Chicago Tribune, whose reporters here and at the quarries near Cincinnati, made a sorry case for him. He claims that the stone is all right and the work well done and nothing but official spite at Washington is the matter. From his interest in the farce of last 24th of June there is no doubt that Mr. Rankin is a good Mason if not a good mason—good in the "speculative" sense, but not in the practical; and the renown of his achievments culminated when Grand Master Hawley, assisted by "Blessed Charity" Creiger, interposed the nuisance of his Masonic stuff between the people through the representatives, and their building. We hope Mr. Rankin is not practicing the sort of Masonry with the public he did with the gentlemen who protested against his corner-stone business—full of fair promises with no other intention but to evade them.

The continued refusal of England to send a delegate to a conference of European governments at St. Petersburg on the Brussels international code has led Russia to abandon the convention. The proposed code, it is said, makes large standing armies a necessity of national existence and is therefore strennously opposed by the smaller powers on the Continent; its adoption would strike at the interests of peace. Although Christendom bristles with bayonets and millions of men are drawn away from the productive classes and to learn the vices of idleness, yet the late protests of France, Germany and Russia against the thought of strife may be in good faith carried out if the dogs of war are not beyond the control of their masters. The growth of science and international visitation and above all the increased interchange of Christian sympathies and labors involve the decay of war. Enforced national economy stands aghast at its endless drain on the public treasury, and true religion is everywhere hostile to its passions, its vices, and its destruction. The possibility of peaceful arbitration of national disputes will soon become a certainty, and ere another generation we may see the day when nation against nation shall no longer draw the avenging sword.

"Neither shall they learn war any more," closes the prophetical description of the grand and holy days of peace. To all "the pomp and circumstance of glorious war," to West Points, "Grand Armies," cadets, State guards, and their youthful imitators of the tin sword and mullein-stock mankind will nod adieu. Knights Templars will find their occupation gone, for the Christianity of which they are the ungodly defenders will, in spite of them, prevail to separate from the minds of men that regard for tinsel and pageantry on which their reputation hangs; and the age that endured them will be remembered for its taint of barbarism. The churches of Christ need an awakening touch from the Divine Spirit on this question. Their King is the "Prince of Peace," and his realm is over a world whose instruments of savagery and blood are turned to the uses of quiet life. What are they accomplishing in the name of their Master for this end?

Secret Societies in History.

BY REV. S. WILDER.

Whence originated secret societies? The first institutions of this nature with which we are acquainted were the heathen mysteries originating in Egypt. These societies then had a pagan origin. The Egyptians (see Rollin's History, vol. 1, p. 114) pretend to be the first institutors of festivals and processions in honor of the gods. The figure of Harpocrates in the Egyptian sanctuaries with his finger upon his mouth seemed to intimate that mysteries were there enclosed the knowledge of which was revealed to very few. Their pyramids, pillars, and statues and all public monuments were usually adorned with hieroglyphics or symbolic writings. Every maxim of morality, every tenet of theology was wrapt up in a veil of allegory and mysticism (Encyclopedia of Rel. Knowledge, Art, mysteries). They were a gloomy race and delighted in darkness and solitude. They worshiped the crocodile, cat, dog and ox.

Among the ancient Greeks and Romans those who were initiated into the impure and abominable mysteries at the feasts of Bacchus were obliged under the most horrid imprecations to keep them inviolably secret. Both sexes were associated in these mysteries, and licentiousness and disorder so increased under cover of the night that the Senate put a stop to those sacrilegious feasts by the most severe penalties.

The feasts of Eleusis or Ceres were accompanied by mysteries into which only Athenians were admitted. But each age, sex and condition were received. Their initiation was preceded by bathing in the river Illissus, by prayers and sacrifices. They were initiated in the night. Wonderful visions were seen and strange voices heard. Apparitions, claps of thunder and earthquakes heightened the terror and amazement. A sudden splendor illuminated the darkness of the place and disappearing immediately added new horrors to the gloom, equalling if not excelling the orgies of Masonry. The candidate, stupified, sweating through fear, trembling, heard mysterious volumes read to him. Disorders attended these rights, but the severe law of silence imposed upon the initiated prevented these from coming to the light. The Athenians initiated their children of both sexes into these rites and would have thought it criminal to let them die without such an advantage (Rollin, vol. 1, p., 33 and 34). They believed those who were not initiated suffered greater evils in this life and in another world were doomed to wallow eternally in dirt, filth and excrement. Diogenes the cynic was, however, an unbeliever. "What," said he, "shall Ageslaus and Epaminondes lie among mud and dung while the vilest Athenians because they have been initiated possess the most distinguished places in the regions of the blessed." Socrates had courage also to oppose such a system of credulity and would not be initiated into these mysteries. It was a capital crime to divulge these secrets and mysteries. Whoever violated the secret was avoided as a wretch, accursed and excommunicated.

Horace says in one of his odes;

Safe is the silent tongue which none can blame
The faithful secret merit fame.
Beneath one roof ne'er let him rest with me
Who Cere's mysteries reveals.
In one frail bark ne'er let us put to sea,
Nor tempt the jarring winds with spreading sails.

When pagan rites were forbidden by Christian emperors they were still practiced in retired and hidden places, but for what length of time we are unable to say. We may, however, notice that many of the peculiarities of modern secret societies were manifest in these most ancient, pagan mysteries. In modern times, Voltaire, endeavoring to destroy Christianity, formed a secret society. They called each other by feigned names and their secret password was "Ecrosses l'infame," "Crush the wretch." In their secret meeting they professed to celebrate the mysteries of Mythra. Their real end was to destroy the religion of Jesus, to eradicate from the human heart every religious sentiment.

In 1776, Adam Wieshaupt, professor of the University of Ingalstadt, originated the secret society of the Illuminati. Their professed object was to propagate the purest principles of virtue and reinstate mankind in the happiness which they enjoyed in fabled golden ages. Their real object was to overthrow every government and every religion. It exacted blind obedience of the novices and assumed the absolute power of life and death which was seceded to it by its devotees. (Enc. of Rel. Knowl. 1 art. Illuminati.) It had a great number of degrees, novices, manuals, minor and major Illuminates, epopts or priests, regents, magi and man kings. They had feigned names and pretended to have received many things from ancient patriarchs and philosophers. The last secret communicated by Wieshaupt to his followers was that he himself was the sole author of those mysteries which had been attributed to ancient patriarchs and philosophers and to Christ, in going through the inferior degrees.

In the beginning of the fourteenth century, others say the 19th, there was a cabal or sect of philosophers who assumed the name of Rosicrusians. They bound themselves together by a solemn secret which they all swore inviolably to preserve. They pretended to know all sciences and especially medicine; to have many important secrets, especially that of the philosopher's stone, which should turn everything it touched into gold. They professed to derive their knowledge from the ancient Egyptians, Chaldeans, magi and Gymuosophists. They pretended to lengthen human life by their nostroms and to restore youth and were called Immortals. This society is said to have originated from the writings of Andrea, a German, who amused himself with tales of spiritual wonder and mystical glory as a literary hoax. This folly was greatly admired in England and some men of strange fancy and some who were learned and some professing the "black art," or astrologers, sought to introduce into England some of the peculiarities of the Rosicrucian society. Among these was Elias Ashmole, an antiquary, William Lilly, the astrologer, and Robert Fludd.

ORIGIN OF FREEMASONRY.

In London for centuries about thirty different trades and crafts were in the habit of meeting in clubs for improvement in their trades and for social enjoyment. Each craft had its public hall, its admission fee, its coat of arms and its charity fund. (See Reis Cyclopoedia under company.) Out of eighteen of them whose government is mentioned, sixteen are governed by a master, two wardens and number of assistants. Twelve of these societies were the oldest and richest, having had the honor of kings and princes to be their number, and their halls were sufficiently magnificent to entertain a monarch. The Lord Mayor of London on his election makes himself free of one of these twelve. But Masons were not among these twelve. Their rank was the thirty-first. Some of these clubs were chartered. The oldest charter is that of Parish Clerks, A. D. 1233, in the reign of Henry III. The Bakers in 1307 under Edward II., five others in the 14th century, eighteen in the 15th, and forty in the 17th, among them that of stone masons in 1677 in the reign of Charles II. (See Light on Masonry, p. 13, Address of H. D. Ward.) There were clubs of stone masons before this time but they had not attained sufficient importance in comparison with the other clubs to obtain a charter and for many years after it was only a stone mason's club though others not of the craft were occasionally admitted. Elias Ashmole, before spoken of, was admitted into a club of Masons in Basinghall street in 1646. Thirty-one years after this it obtained the charter spoken of. But this club which obtained the charter has been only a stone mason's club to this day. William Lilly, his friend, was made also free of the Salter's Company. This Ashmole was a Rosicrucian, a famous zealot in the belief of the philosopher's stone which he declares "is to convert the basest metals into pure gold and silver, and flints into rubies, sapphires, emeralds and diamonds." He wrote also upon "vegetable, magical and angelic stones with which Adam and the fathers before the flood with Abraham, Moses and Solomon doubtless wrought many wonders, yet the utmost of their virtues they never understood." Ashmole died in 1692. Others probably after him made use of his writings and his Rosicrucian theory and united them with the tools of a Mason, the trowel, level, square, compasses and leather apron. About the year 1717 four companies who had been engaged in building the proud edifices of London after the fire of 1666 met together, the lodge that had worked on St. Paul's church being at the head, and formed the Grand Lodge of London, and elected their officers, June 24, 1717. To increase their numbers and influence they voted to accept men of other trades and professions as members of the society. This was the first grand lodge. Three years they sought to accommodate the Rosicrucian theory to the emblems of a handicraft mason, adding also whatever pleased them from ancient pagan mysteries and then in 1720 burnt their papers for the benefit of the mystery. Three years after this three men—a Scotchman, Anderson, and a Frenchman, Desaguilliers, reputed men of low character and of a base spirit—published to the world the first printed book extolling the high pretensions of Masonry and blowing the first blast of Masonic vain glory and unearthly mystery. From this time the lying wonder began to run to and fro in the earth, wherever British commerce could carry it. In 1729, it was introduced into the East Indies; in 1730, into Ireland; in 1731, into Hague; in 1733, into Boston; in 1736, at Cape Coast, Africa. The higher degrees were added in France about 1740. They were introduced into the United States in 1760. They became more general about 1796.

ORIGIN OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

This order, which originated in 1813, in Manchester, England, has been equally bold with Masonry in claiming antiquity. In the introduction to the constitution of the Niagara Lodge, Buffalo, we find language like this: "In all ages and in all countries our order has stood forth the champion of liberty and religion. Thousands of years ago the Egyptian astrologer found in our temple the secrets of astronomy, and the Chaldean shepherd at his watch at night as he gazed upward to the starry heavens drew from our oracles the sublime truth that there were worlds unknown." In an address before the Wm. Tell Lodge, No. 4, Baltimore, is this language: "This institution (Odd-fellowship) is the most ancient of all moral, social, political, literary and benevolent societies."

Its real history is as follows: Towards the close of the 18th century and in the beginning of the 19th, there were clubs, called Odd-fellows, formed in England which were merely social clubs for the promotion of mirth and good-fellowship and for Bacchanalian reveling. In 1803, the lodges in two cities, London and Liverpool adopted a uniform system of regulations in their meetings. The previous charter of these societies was not changed till 1813, when intelligent men in Manchester, who had united with the Manchester Lodge, endeavored to reform the club and banish convivial excess and festivity; but they could not reform the other lodges. They therefore separated from them and formed the Independent Order of Odd-fellows. The institution now instead of a place for festivity became a means of mutual self-advantage and an engine for the purpose of ambition and power in which were inculcated many truthful sentiments of morality.

Some lodges in the United States were formed before 1813 after the plan of the London lodges and the first lodges in England. From this time until 1842, most of the lodges in the United States were connected with the Manchester lodge, England. In 1842 this connection was dissolved. The permanent establishment of Odd-fellowship in the United States dates back scarcely earlier than 1819. But it is a fact in the recollection of hundreds that it was not until 1825 that it attracted for a moment the concern of the public. It was not till 1820 that the first legally constituted lodge of Odd-fellows received their charter, Washington Lodge, No. 1, Baltimore. (See Holmes on Odd-fellowship, p. 156.) Odd-fellow lodges were originally instituted for mere social enjoyment. Among the things of first importance to the order in America required by duty and a decent respect for the opinions of mankind was the abolition of all social and commercial parties at lodge meetings. This they claim gave it honor and character.

A Woman's Plea against Secret Societies.

There are two or three things connected with secret oath-bound societies which has puzzled us no little. One is that secret the wife may never know, the secret to which the husband is admitted. A man may live with the wife of his bosom fifty years and yet jealously refuse speaking about this great secret. Every other matter can be talked over freely, but this benevolent institution for the good of mankind must be kept secret from her who is "bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh." It is strange if it does not produce an alienation of feeling and coldness of heart.

If the secrets of Masonry must be kept from the wife and family, the supposition is that it is something which the wife should not know. Then we ask what right has the husband to enter into an association which excludes his wife, or the workings of which he most carefully guards from her, if as is asserted the object of said association be to do good and relieve the poor. Are not women as charitable as men? as capable of doing good as men?

But says one, the men hold the purse strings and therefore have the right to use the money for initiation fees, regalia, etc., if they choose? We will suppose a case. A man marries a women with property; he has none. He wishes to become a Mason. It will cost him from $25 to $100 to be initiated, and ever after for dues from ten to twenty-five cents per week; money which the wife and family may need very much. Now what right has that man to be a Mason? The property belongs to his wife and children. Yet she must meekly submit to its being spent in such a foolish way; but, forsooth, because she is a women she must not ask him about the lodge lest she let the secret out.

There is another feature of this secretism even more objectionable than the first named: the absence of the husband and father or son from the family while attending lodge meetings so frequently. We ask what husband would like to have his wife leave her home and family at night, to attend lodge meetings? And if right for the husband, why not for the wife?

But says the sterner sex, it is the mother's place to take care of the children. So we admit, but is it not equally as true, that the husband and father has a duty to perform too in this matter? He has promised to protect his wife, and relieve her of some of her burdens; yet in how many cases do we see her toiling from day to day to keep her family nicely, and when night comes, she can sit down alone at the fireside, husband having to go up town to lodge meeting. He has no time to listen to the story of her little trials, no cheer for her, it must be expended on cold-hearted men, who care little for his sympathy. We ask is it just or right, to say nothing of the sin of such associations. For we are told in God's Holy Word, "Let not the light that is in you be darkness."

Let Masons make an estimate of the money spent in becoming a Mason or Odd-fellow and the expenses attended on the weekly meetings for a life time. Let the money be put at interest and it be used to relieve the cases which come under their notice, and it will do more good, relieve more destitute ones, and amount to more than the secret orders give away, besides saving time to be spent in reading and in instructing the family. "Charity begins at home," as well as in the lodge. A man may spend half his time in such places and bestow his own or his wife's money in relieving poor Masons and Odd-fellows, and yet have no blessing on what he gives, because Christ is not acknowledged in all his ways. Any association which excludes our Lord and Saviour is rotten and will fall; and such are Masons and Odd-fellows. For "neither is their salvation in any other."

Sixteen Reasons why Freemasonry Should be Opposed.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

1. Its secrecy is suspicious. No good cause requires concealment.

2. It makes men uncandid and untruthful and impairs the mutual confidence that should exist among brethren.

3. It enslaves the conscience by unknown obligations.

4. It involves its members in a position from which it does not permit them to recede.

5. It is a spurious system of benevolence, excluding from membership all real objects of charity and enjoining a higher obligation to a member of the lodge than to a member of the church.

6. It requires the taking of extra-judicial and profane oaths.

7. It confers pompous and unchristian titles, such as Worshipful Master, Grand High Priest, etc.

8. It perverts history; teaching as historically true what is manifestly false, and contradicts the plain statements of the Bible.

9. It teaches a religion in which there is no atonement, no mediator, and no mention of Christ.

10. It regards all religions as but the different sects of the religion of Masonry, and gives Christianity no preference over heathenism.

11. It perpetuates the ancient heathenism, teaching principles and enjoining ceremonies essentially like those of the ancient heathen mysteries.

12. It sanctions heathen worship, teaching that God revealed himself as Baal and On, just as truly as Jehovah.

13. It mutilates the word of God and changes its language so as to make it teach another gospel than that of Christ.

14. It professes to regenerate men, make them holy and fit them for the "Grand Lodge above," by Masonic ceremonies.

15. It enjoins ceremonies which are at once childish and profane.

16. It exacts obligations that are contrary to the word of God and to civil equality and enforces these obligations by penalties that are inhuman and wicked.

Rome and the South.

An opinion of Dr. J. H. Vincent in a letter to the Western Christian Advocate, and the remarks of the Methodist Advocate of Atlanta, Ga., upon it, are upon a subject not to be overlooked or neglected. He says: "In view of the perils of our common Protestantism from the plotting of Romish priests, it behooves us to drop all minor issues, and with united zeal and energy to defeat the bad schemes of a corrupt and dangerous church in that region. Rome fears Methodism. The divisions and alienations between the northern and southern branches of this great Protestant wing of the church delight Rome. God help us to disappoint her!"

We give Dr. Vincent's letter to the Western Christian Advocate, because we attach very great importance to his suggestion in reference to Romanism in this country. The question is one to which we have devoted some thought, and in regard to which this paper has not been silent. From time to time this matter has been presented in our columns more frequently than in any other paper in the church, or in the South. During the past week or two we are glad to see many of our religious exchanges giving unusual attention to this subject.

The Roman Catholics of this country, allied as they are to the confederate element, are able at this time to dictate in the nomination of a candidate for the Presidency of the United States, with a strong probability of his election, a fact about which many, even of the religious journals of the country, seem either oblivious or indifferent. Romanism has a strong hold upon the former ruling class in the south. That church was in harmony with their views of slavery and aristocracy, and in ardent sympathy with the Confederate cause. Rome was the only power which recognized the government of Jefferson Davis, and it now hates and fears, as it always has, free schools and Republican institutions generally and the people of the Northern States as bitterly as the most devoted friend to the "lost cause." It has labored incessantly since the war to keep this "cause" alive in the minds and hearts of its supporters preparatory to another struggle for the control or the disruption and final destruction of the American government, and if the masses can be deceived into acquiescence in the political movements of the day, a tool of the Pope will be placed at the head of our national affairs. All that is needed is to lull the people to sleep with songs of peace and security, and at the same time work upon their ungrounded fears of "Caesarism" and of Republican corruption. These schemes are so far working effectually. Nor should it be forgotten that there are now in the South thousands of Protestant ministers, and tens of thousands of members of evangelical churches who would rather aid in the election of a President who would be acceptable to the papal priesthood, than of any staunch Republican. We may, perhaps, be called a "liar," and a "vilifier of the South" by "Christian" men, for this sentence, and some of our sensitive brethren in the North will probably add we ought not to say this if it is true, for fear of giving offense, while to us, nothing is more evident than that such facts ought to be kept before the public. We never felt more sure of anything in the future than of a coming fearful struggle in this country, in which Romanism will play an important part. The efforts to deceive and mislead the people, to operate upon their prejudices and use them contrary to their wishes, are astounding. So deep-laid, adroit and brazen are some of these methods, that they can justly be ascribed to Satanic influence. As we have said years ago and frequently repeated, there ought to be fraternal relations and co-operation between all evangelical churches in America in reference to this matter. If the party of disunion should come into power, supported by strong churches and largely controlled by Romanists, with the old issues supposed to have been settled by the war, re-opened, all but the blind can see that the peace of the country is threatened, and that our institutions of freedom are in jeopardy. It is to be feared that the friends of Union, Protestantism, education and iberty will not be awakened to a sense of danger until aroused by more bloodshed by the enemies of the Government, who just now, for effect, talk lovingly of peace.

If the Methodist Episcopal church had made as vigorous and direct efforts in behalf of the white people of the South as it has for the colored, the aspect of things would now be greatly changed. It has had it in its power to have made the common people feel and know that the North was their best friend, but that the church has not comprehended the situation or done its full duty toward these, will not be doubted by any who are acquainted with tho facts. We who are in the South can only work with such appliances as we have, and pray and wait, trusting in God.—Meth. Advocate.

Varley on the Bible in Schools.

After all the years of man's government, there is not a nation under heaven, can touch the question of its people's righteousness. All that you can attend to here in your great Republic is to look after property and life, and that very imperfectly. I do not blame you. I can say that of my own country. Christian England! No, sir. It is a lie. Cross the Channel; Christian France! No, sir! emphatically no. Christian Spain, Austria, Italy; No! Come over the Atlantic,—the United States,—No! distinctly, no. I do not speak hastily. As God lives, the time of human rule has reached its crisis. It is breaking down the world over. Why, they are putting God's Book out of the national schools!

Has God's Book no reference to the history of the world? Are you going to bring up your children idolators? You answer, no. Well, remember the first commandment is God's protest against idolatry. The second, against idolatry in detail. The third is a protest against blasphemy. The fourth constitutes a day of rest, which is a necessity for our physical well-being, as well as a moral responsibility. The fifth touches our filial relationship. The sixth touches the defense of life. The seventh inculcates chastity. The eighth protects property. The ninth protects character, and the tenth is God's protest against selfishness. And are you going to put that out of the schools? You will then have a society constructed without backbone,—a society, that, as God lives, you will live to rue. You sow to the wind and you reap the whirlwind.

The editor of the Christian Advocate, Dr. Curry, has said he is, from principle, opposed to secret societies. In a late number of his paper he says:

"There is a perfect rage now in Europe in the establishment of secret societies to counteract in part the numerous clerical orders of the Catholic church, which are absorbing the working classes by the hundreds of thousands. The church has always fought and is now fighting, the order of Masons, which seems to flourish under the opposition. Not long ago the Oddfellows were introduced to the continent, and have spread considerably. But the "Order of Druids" seems to find the most favor at present and is spreading rapidly. It was first founded in London in 1781, and is now gaining a firm footing in Germany, though only two years old there. It publishes an organ known as the Archdruid, and lodges have been established in the principal cities of Germany. Their inaugural ceremonies resemble those of the Masons, and the platform runs as follows: 'The elevation of humanity; the awaking and nourishing of the Divine spark in the human breast; the combat against blind belief, superstition and egotism; the practice of philanthropy, without distinction of faith or regard to the social position of the individual.' Their principles are given in the device, 'Truth, Justice, morality and philantbropy,' and a striving to attain these they make their ideal work and effort. The whole movement seems to be a protest against bigotry and persecution, and an effort at least to obtain the ordinary rights of man."

No, not the "ordinary rights of man," but those extraordinary rights which only secret societies warrant. Catholicism has a secret, centralized power and uses it, and the secret conclaves o Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, Druids, Jacobins, and Communists are a match for them in "traps" and secret wires. The Catholics go into senseless mummeries around a crucifix, and the other orders of secretism reject both the crucifix and and all mention in prayer and charge and song of the name of the crucified Christ, by whom alone this world can be saved from endless woe.

Then let not these counter-movements be called by a Christian journalist a protest against bigotry, unless it is admitted that bigotry fights bigotry, and "pot calls kettle black."—Wesleyan.

INSTANCES OF SUCCESSFUL ARBITRATION:—The success of arbitration as a preventive of war has been already abundantly demonstrated. Within the last one hundred years many national quarrels have been settled by this method which otherwise would have resulted in bloodshed.

The following are a few of them:

In 1794 the question of the Northwestern boundary between the United States and the dependencies of Great Britain.

In 1822 the question of restitution or compensation for slaves found on board of British vessels during the war of 1812. The matter was referred to the Emporer of Russia and his award accepted by both nations.

In 1858 a difficulty between the United States and the Government of Chili and Peru was referred to the arbitration of the King of the Belgians, and settled by his award.

In 1869 the claims of the United States and Great Britain to land property in and about Puget Sound.

In 1871 the well known Alabama Claim, which produced so much ill-feeling between the United States and England, and threatened to involve the two countries in a terrible war.

President Grant, referring to the settlement of this claim, said in his Message of Dec. 4th, 1871, "This year has witnessed two great nations, having one language and lineage, settling by peaceful arbitration disputes of long standing, which were liable at any time to bring nations to a bloody conflict. The example thus set, if successful in its final issue, will be followed by other civilized nations, and finally be the means of restoring to pursuits of industry millions of men now maintained to settle disputes of nations by the sword."

Observations of the Working fo Secret Society Principles in the Evangelical Association.

In 1843, I was converted to Christ. and united with the Evangelical Association. At that time the members of this denomination were entirely opposed to secret societies, as far as I know. Rev. John Seybert, the first Bishop of this church, once said in a private conversation in the presence of the writer in reference to temperance secret societies, "They will do but little good. The principle on which they are founded is wrong. The Washingtonians would have done a great deal more good, as the organization was founded on republican and Christian principles. Secret societies are wrong, as they are anti-Christian and anti-republican in their influence."

This was the opinion and conviction of one of the most active and hard-working fathers of this church. In those days when any one was converted who belonged to such societies, they left them, as they looked upon the workings of the lodge as degrading to the new life of Christ in them. A lay brother, a true soldier of the cross, who had been a Freemason before his conversion, remarked in the writer's presence, in Erie, Pa., "a Christian has no business in the lodge, it is no place for him!"

These were the fruits and results of conversions in those days. They were founded in the deep conviction that man's nature is entirely sinful and all human religious forms were of the same nature; that it was necessary for a new convert to depart from all iniquity, and that a new life in Christ requires a total separation from the maxims and spirit of the world. This firm conviction by the aid of the Holy Spirit was the cause that the conversions of those days were so radical in their change, and so potent in their effects. Now, converts and professors of sanctification can attend lodges from the finest to the lowest and most abject forms of secretism, and the voice of the warning spirit of God is hushed in heart and pulpit; and against the few earnest ones who raise their voices against this tide of sin the word is raised: "Hold still! Hush up! you'll split the church; we must have peace, quietness at any cost." "Man of God, there is death in the pot!" and unless the voice of conscience, the pulpit and press is raised against this abomination it will crush the Christian life out of the churches.

In the first year of my ministry I often heard my seniors in office mention among other sins that Christians must shun secret societies as sinful in their influence. How does this correspond with the resolutions on secret societies in the last general conference at Naperville, Ill., where the true word sin or sinful is carefully avoided? Was this the spirit of the fathers? Verily not. They called the thing by its right name without fear of consequences. They well knew that it was not right to dally with sinful influences; and God was with them.

I will now state the fact that the Evangelical Association was at one time on the eve of becoming an anti-secret society church in its discipline. In the General Conference of 1847 a resolution was presented that there shall be a rule inserted in the discipline against secret societies, similar to the rule against slavery, that as the church is an anti-slavery church it is also an anti-secret society church, and this fact should be acknowledged by a rule in the discipline. This was opposed by delegates from the Eastern conferences; some who had formerly belonged to Masonry. The main argument used was, that there was no danger from the influence of Masonry, as the murder of Morgan had killed it; so that oath-bound societies could not again become popular in church or state; and such a rule would keep good men who belong to such societies out of the church after their conversion. But on the other side of the question the societies were declared wrong and sinful. These arguments prevailed and the resolution was passed in the latter part of the day. Some of those who had opposed the resolution sat down and wept, saying that they could not remain in the church with such a clause in the discipline. The resolution went upon the record. The next day Bishop Seybert moved a reconsideration of that resolution, stating his reason, that those oath-bound societies were dead and that they would never be able to get a hold in church or state, and therefore it was useless to burden the church with such a rule. It was then reconsidered and lost.

Bishop Seybert was undoubtedly honest in his convictions; he was a strong Anti-mason. The same opinion he expressed to the writer some years after at a conference sitting in the city of Pittsburgh, in a private conversation at our boarding-place. If he had had any idea that oath-bound societies, as they were then called, would ever assume such power in church and state, he would not have given away in the least from his course. He was a man of sterling integrity and pure morals, and firm in his convictions; yet easy to be entreated and where he saw no danger for the cause of Christ he was ready for the sake of peace to give way. He hated contentions, but where he saw the cause of Christ in danger, he was firm as a rock and bold as a lion; for in his ministry he faced death more than once from mobs. As some of those opposed to the rule were his spiritual sons in the Gospel, it may have wrought upon his sympathy and produced the change. Let it be here stated that not at General Conference where at the time these things happened, nor yet preaching, but working in a shoe shop in the city of Erie, Pa., the writer gathered these facts from sources that can be mentioned when necessary. I was then but 20 years of age. In the next I shall state a second attempt by the Ohio Conferenc, to get a rule into the discipline of the church against secret societies.

—The great effort of a man should be to keep his mind by study and daily exercise to its highest key of activity, so that it may be effectively engaged at any moment. This is all-important to success in every department of life.

The Carpenter Donation.

Not long since we had the pleasure of a brief visit from Dr. Wishart of Mansfield, President of the Ohio State Association, and his estimable lady. Bro. Wishart is heartily engaged against the lodge monopoly and was anxious to see the prospective home of the National Association. The following letter to the United Presbyterian is his emphatic opinion of the necessity of carrying out this plan, and a merited tribute to Mr. Carpenter's generosity. Let his appeal to the United Presbyterian brethren be read as if addressed to friends of whatever denominational name:

It is known to many of the readers of the United Presbyterian that Mr. Philo Carpenter has proposed to give to the National Christian Association, Opposed to Secret Societies, a "house and home" in Chicago, provided the friends of the cause throughout the United States will give in good subscriptions, a sum sufficient to keep up the property and carry on the business of a national printing house and a book and tract concern. On our return some weeks ago from a visit in the West, we stopped in Chicago and took the trouble to go and see this house; and hence we speak what we do know, and testify what we have seen in relation to it. It is a beautiful and substantial building situated on West Madison street, and eminently suited to the purpose for which it is given. The whole property (house and lot), was estimated after the great fire of 1871 at $30,000, and rented for $5,000 per annum. This munificent donation Mr. Carpenter offers on no selfish conditions. He asks nothing for himself, but something for the cause. In order to furnish an inducement to others to aid the great and good cause, he requires that the sum of $10,000 shall be donated by the first of April next, at which time the National Association shall have full possession of the property and shall receive the rents, issues and profits thereof up to the first day of April, A. D., 1878, and then, if $20,000 more shall be donated, he binds himself to convey to the Association or corporation a good and sufficient warrantee deed. And certainly these conditions are most reasonable. If Philo Carpenter alone donates a property worth $30,000 as a house and home for the cause of anti-secrecy, should not the other friends of the cause throughout the United States donate at least as much in order to make this house available for the purpose to which it is given?

We present this cause, then, to the readers of the United Presbyterian as one which is the most worthy of their prayerful consideration and liberal aid. The National Christian Association Opposed to Secret Societies has already accomplished much good; it has called the attention of the nation to the subject of secret societies; has unveiled their immoral nature and corrupting influence both in the church and in the State; and not to mention other things, it has, in a special manner, encouraged and strengthened the hands of those Christian denominations which have seen the anti-Christian nature of these secret orders and have excluded those who adhere to them from their communion. But much is yet to be done. "We must revolutionize the minds of forty millions of American people, a majority of whom will be with us when they know the truth. We must bring this country to see that every strange oath is a blasphemy and every strange worship idolatry. We must cast out Freemasonry from the church, the jury box and the ballot box, because that while its secret empire is nascent treason, it is the most respectable and least suspected of our national evils." We need not say to any intelligent person that, in order to the success of any great cause in these days, we must furnish cheap literature in the form of books and tracts to be circulated and read everywhere, and that in order to provide such literature we must have an efficient publishing house and book concern.

Readers of the United Presbyterian, and friends of light and liberty who will have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, we have laid the necessities and demands of the good cause before you; will not those whom God has blessed with means give a liberal response? We trust they will.

Notices.

Important Notice to Delegates.

Persons attending the Anniversary of the N. C. A. at Pittsburgh, June 8th to 10th, can procure for themselves and for members of their families special rates over the Pennsylvania Railroad and all its branches, the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati & St. Louis R. R., and all its branches, the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R. and all its branches, including Mansfield, Mich., and Coldwater. To do this persons must send their names with a stamped envelope directed to themselves, in advance. Those intending to pass over the Pennsylvania road or any of its branches will apply as above to Rev. S. Collins, No. 55, 9th St., Pittsburgh, who will immediately inclose a certificate and return the stamped, directed envelope. Persons intending to pass over either of the other main lines or their tributaries will apply by letter to H. L. Kellogg, No. 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

N. B.—You must apply as above and obtain your certificates before applying for your ticket at your home office, as no reduction will be made to any one not furnished with a certificate before buying his ticket. The principle points connected with Pittsburgh by this arrangement are New York City, Philadelphia, Cleveland, Erie, Toledo, Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, etc. Certificates will be honored not only at principal stations but at any station on the entire lines and their branches.

J. P. STODDARD.

New Castle, Pa., May 18th, 1875.

Pennsylvanians Observe.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania Christian Association opposed to secret societies, our worthy brother, Rev. A. L. Post of Montrose, Susquehanna Co., was unanimously chosen to represent this body to the National Christian Association, to meet at Pittsburgh on the 8th to the 10th of June, 1875. He was also appointed to see as many of our Pennsylvania anti-secret men as practicable, and solicit aid to complete the sum of $500 to pay our agent, Rev. James W. Raynor of Uniondale, Susquehanna Co., Pa. On the same day brother Raynor was appointed by the Christian Association of northeast Pa., to represent this body at the Pittsburgh meeting and also our State society.

NOTICE is hereby given that the next quarterly-meeting of the north-east Pa. Association, will be held at Dalton, Luzerne Co., Pa. (on the D. L. & W. R. R.), June the 17th and 18th, and will commence at 2 o'clock, p. m., on Thursday the 17th. Lectures will be given on the evenings of the 17th and 18th, probably by some able man from abroad.

At the same place the Executive committee of the State society will meet for business on the 18th of June, at a time to be agreed on when assembled. Let no business hinder a general rally to this meeting.

An Important Feature of the Anniversary.

PITTSBURGH, May 22, 1875.

The Christian ministers of this city need help to meet and overcome the lodge power, and some are anxiously looking to our approaching convention for that aid. It has been my good fortune to meet a number of them personally at their homes, where they have expressed deep convictions and earnest solicitude on account of the usurpation and open affrontery of these orders. They shrink not from an open encounter with the "whiskey fiend' and arraign the sins of almost every grade and hue at the tribunal of God's Word, and insist that their own people at least shall desist from their practice, but this sin of sworn secrecy with its inevitable concomitants has received comparatively few open rebukes. This state of things cannot however long continue. The lodge is forcing itself upon the attention of the people and especially upon the ministers of this city by advertising a grand parade before their eyes, and a grand dance in the most popular hall in the city. The issue is being pressed and the space allowed to ''neutrals" exceeding strait. This parade in full armor and equipments, is either for Christ or against him, and this grand "dance" will be either for the glory of God, or it will not, and the guardians of the people's morals cannot shut their eyes and withhold their utterances in the very presence of such exhibitions and be innocent. If men can excuse themselvse while the lodge vails itself in secrecy, they certainly cannot remain silent when its flaunts its banners in their faces on the public highways, displays its helmets, and unsheathes its weapons of death in the light of day, and then proclaims a night of revelry and dancing as the closing scene in this exhibition of its work. The lodge has thrown down the gauntlet, and the ministry of this city are not the men to refuse such a challenge. Their convictions are on the side of right and they are looking to our approaching convention to furnish them facts and arguments with which they may intelligently and successfully meet and vanquish this foe. J. P. STODDARD.

May 28, 1875.

The divines assure us that this is a world of change, and persons in this city have seen a most striking exemplication of this truth in the past twenty-four hours. Yesterday at noon might be seen what was intended to be an imposing display of chivalry by the "Sir Knights." For some time this coming event had been heralded as a grand affair when the valiant and unterrified were to make a exhibit of their military and terpsichorean proficiency, "over two thousand strong.' Well, they came with fife and drum and banners flying; not however 2,000 but about 600 strong, and marched and countermarched and after a day which to a man of ordinary muscle and endurance would be a day of weariness, they disbanded and repaired to Library Hall for a repast and installation and night on "the light fantastic toe."

Now the wonder is how the Rev. Dr. Patterson and other D. Ds. who were reckoned with these dancing dignitaries of yesterday can be so suddenly transformed into only common place ministers of to-day; and how men with waving plumes and spangled all over with jewelry and fully armed with cutlass and sword only twelve hours since are now only ordinary mortals, some only clerks, butchers, and possibly only draymen or hucksters. But strange as it is, it nevertheless is true and the sensible people of Pittsburgh are some of them inquiring, "How can these things be?" J. P. STODDARD.

FINDLEY'S LAKE, N. Y., May 26, '75.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I would be pleased to say to the readers of your excellent paper that we have been favored with the labors of Rev. J. L. Barlow for a few days past in the Western part of Chantauqua Co., N. Y. His lectures have produced a telling effect on the slaves of the lodge. He showed Masonry to be a religion by its own acknowledged leaders. He further showed that it was a rival religion and an anti-Christ and that it was anti-republican and anti-social. As a matter of course it made a sensation among the sons of Hiram, for they do not like to be dragged out into Anti-masonic light. One Mason commenced conversation about the lecturer; he said not one out of a thousand that joined the lodge thought they were joining a religious institution. I answered him, "Why should they, when they are told before they enter the lodge that Masonry will not interfere with politics, or religion, or duty to family, country, or God? You know that a Mason's oaths and obligations do interfere with all these duties and relations if they are lived up to. Another Master Mason tried to convince me that Masonry was a splendid institution by telling me a story that he heard related in a lodge by a professed minister of the Gospel of Christ. The story was this: That this minister was sent as a missionary to the heathen country and while engaged in trying to preach to them, one day they became very much enraged at him, and were about to murder him, when he bethought himself that he was one of the sons of Hiram. So he made the grand hailing sign of distress, and to his amazement and surprise and great relief they all went back to their seats and very soon a revival of religion broke out among them. O what a pity it is that the apostles and early ministers of our Lord did not understand this way of preaching the Gospel! It would have saved them from so much opposition and cruel persecution by this time the world might have been converted. Rev. J. S. AMIDON.

Freemasonry no Longer a Mystery.

On May 21st E. Ronayne, late Past Master, of Key-stone Lodge, Chicago, came to Crystal Lake Crossing and publicly initiated a candidate into the sublime mysteries of the ancient and dishonorable institution of Freemasonry, in due form and in the usual custom of the lodge, with the hoodwink, cable-tow and slipper, before a large and appreciative audience of ladies and gentlemen; and also delivered one of the most interesting and telling lectures on that subject I ever listened to. He has promised at no very distant day to come again and give the candidate the benefit of the grand and sublime degree of Master Mason by knocking him down and killing him, then burying him in the rubbish about the temple till midnight, then burying him in a grave (supposed to be on Mount Moriah) six feet deep due east and west, then after a lapse of fourteen days will raise him from the dead on the five points of fellowship and bring him to life by whispering ''Mah-hah-bone" in his ear. I wish to say he performed the initiation more perfectly than I ever saw it done in the lodge.

Yours truly, LINUS CHITTENDEN.

The Work in Michigan—A Cheering Letter.

YPSILANTI, Mich.

DEAR CYNOSURE—: As my name no longer appears on the editorial staff of the Reformer and Free Press, it may be well for me to say that I resigned voluntarily. The warmest friendship prevails between the conductors of the Free Press and myself. However, as the publishers of the Free Press have failed to state the cause of the removal of my name from the editorial list, I felt called on to make the above statement.

I expect to start about the first of June for Pittsburgh. I have engagements in Pittsburgh and vicinity commencing on the 4th. I expect to lecture some in Ohio on my return from the convention.

So far as I know, Bro. Rathbun has not yet signified his intention to accept the appointment of State lecturer. The delay is an affliction to many in Michigan. In various ways, the good seed has been quite generally sown in this State and an abundant harvest may be expected.

So far as agencies are concerned, our principal want is a capable, persevering lecturer and a general circulation of the Cynosure, and other suitable publications. We are earnestly hoping that Brother Rathbun will see his way clear to come to Michigan. The interest in the struggle for liberty in this part of the country is deep and unyielding, judging from the character of the many letters I get from various places.

The presence of Bro's. Stoddard and Blanchard at our State convention was a great help to us. They and their like are always sure of a hearty welcome among us. The Michigan Convention appointed several delegates to the National Convention, I think. Being very busy at the time, I failed to get the name of any other than myself. Will some one inform me who the other delegates are? I wish to communicate with them. I hope to write frequently for the Cynosure. May the blessing of God attend us. I am praying that the Pittsburgh Convention may be under the direction of God's Spirit. We need to be filled with the Holy Spirit. The love of Christ was among us at Fenton. May it be shed abroad abundantly in the national gathering!

Your companion in toil and hope,

Can Masons Explain It?

The mystification worshipers of the United States perhaps may be able to decide whether the Royal Arch oath has had anything to do with the "secret co-operation" alluded to in the following extract from the N. Y. Witness:

It is somewhat suspicious to find that the counterfeiter McCartney has again escaped out of the hands of the United States officials. There is an impression that his connection with the employ of the Government has not been quite creditable to the sworn servants of the public. It seems that on the occasion the counterfeiter was in charge of a U. S. Marshall, who was bringing him from Tyler to Austin, Texas. The details of the manner in which he liberated himself are not yet known. But there has of late been so much secret co-operation found to exist between the persons who break the laws of the United States and those appointed to detect such criminals and bring them to justice, that it will not be surprising if it is discovered that McCartney has had "friends" among his pursuers and captors.

We would inquire of the lodge if the U. S. marshall and the counterfeiter were both Royal Arch Masons, would not the marshal by his Masonic oath, be bound to let the counterfeiter escape? PLAIN QUESTION.

Temperance Work in the Lodge.

Major Calkins, of the State Sentinel, a temperance paper published at Leavenworth, Kan., delivered lately a lecture in Ottawa. After some correct statistical remarks and conclusions drawn therefrom, he lauded secret societies as the especial power to do the work, but feeling the force of the objection that we were unblae to see their fruits. He said, that being secret their fruits were not so readily seen. He illustrated this by a string of wagons passing down one of the streets of Leavenworth city, laden with corn and potatoes for their needy brethren, the contributions of some secret associations. Not one wagon hauling load after load, but a large number, sufficient to attract Mr. Calkins attention and lead him to inquire the cause, and to publish it all over the State in his lectures, and perhaps his paper—very secret! This contribution was only for the members of their society—very charitable! But what has the church done, of which there is no such notoriety given? and perhaps even half, or more, of that he so lauds was drawn from the church. Such bosh may suit the thoughtless or those who are too young to know the great injury the Sons of Temperance and "Temperance leagues" have been to the temperance cause. Both are now dead; but what feeders they have been to Freemasonry, as well as to Odd-fellows. Last year we in this little city, without any Good Templars, elected a temperance mayor. This year with a lodge, temperance falls, saloons are open. This has always been the case since the first secret temperance society, the Sons of Temperance. The old Washingtonian society was doing much good, when the Sons of Temperance were arguing, all know what for; not for temperance. Then temperance life went out in public show and secret works without fruit. Let it be known once for all, that God's work is not a success when attempted to be done in secret. The Master ever speaks openly. How can God's children reconcile their position in the lodge with this?

R.

Non-conformity to God's Law.

The nations of this world continue to maintain their attitude of hostility to the Lord and his anointed. The policy of all nations in Christendom, however different in the internal elements of their respective forms of government, is to ignore the sovereignty of the Mediator, the obligations of his law, and the claims of his church. Those who bear civil rule, and those whom they represent in general, are everywhere harmonious in this impious conspiracy.

An individual who makes no profession of Christianity is not reputed a Christian. The same can be said of a nation. And it must not be forgotten, that a Christian character is a holy character, and a holy character can come from no other source than from God, through Christ, and by sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth. And there is no such thing as sanctifying the individual or the nation without him. It is not true that the heart of the nation can be purified without faith. It is true that the heart of the individual is sprinkled from and by the blood of Christ. But it is not true that the heart of a nation can be so cleansed without the blood of Christ. And it is true, not only that Christ shall sprinkle many individuals, but it is said, "so shall he sprinkle many nations."—Isaiah lii. 15. And when it is said that Christ shall sprinkle many nations, it means that he will sanctify them, will sprinkle their hearts from an evil conscience, will purge their conscience from dead works to serve the living God. Heb. ix. 14; x. 22. God says to nations, as well as to individuals, "Incline your ear and come unto me; hear and your souls shall live."

If the majority of the constituency, the ruling power of the nation, be righteous and exercise their power in disfranchising the visibly unrighteous, making them ineligible to office; and if they exercise their power, in electing only those who are visibly righteous, to administer a righteous constitution; then that is a righteous nation. But on the contrary, if a wicked constituency be a ruling majority in the nation, and the visibly wicked be eligible to office; then the wicked every time and all the time, will be elected; and the constituency and the rulers being wicked, so will be the nation. And then "the wicked will be like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt."

That a nation may have a Christian character, God must be their God in covenant. "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."—Ps. xxxiii. 12. And that nation must be God's inheritance. "Thou shalt inherit all nations. But it is certain that a nation cannot have God as their God, unless they have the true religion as their religion. It is the true and not a false religion that saves the soul. Salvation includes deliverance from false religions. Without this there can be no salvation. Then if an individual or nation be saved it must be, not by a false religion, but by a true religion, not by "liberal," but by evangelical principles.

Now we say, that this nation is entirely destitute of all the true marks on Christian character. It is true that many individuals in the nation have a true Christian character, but the nation as such has not one of these marks—not recognizing the subjection of the nation to God or his law. Christ is the head of all principality and power. Prov. viii. 15. "By me kings reign and princes decree justice. By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth." Christ's official capacity is infinite. Col. ii. 9. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." The grand object of Christ is to build his temple, the church and he has given instructions in his word for the civil ruler in all his administrations to be subservient to the church. (Isaiah ix. 12). For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee (the church) shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted." Christ has said, (2 Samuel xxiii. 3): "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God." He requireth that the civil ruler be regulated by the law of God in his administration. (Deut. xvii. 18.) Civil government should not only build houses for the common education of children, but also build houses for public worship, where the people may be taught the doctrines of his word, and the duties required therein. (1 Kings viii. 19.) There ought to be a friendly connection between church and state. The Old Testament scriptures are instructive in the duties of church and state. There was a co-operation of the king and the priest, Moses and Aaron, Joshua and Eleazer, David and Abiathar, Solomon and Zadok, Hezekiah and Azariah, Zerubabel and Joshua, are examples of harmony for the present day.

OUR MAIL.

Gen. J.. W. Phelps Brattleboro, Vt., writes:

"There seems to be an impression studiously inculcated by the fraternity, that Masonry is valuable because, though knavish in its ways and means, it is an opponent of Romanism. Are not the Puritans also opponents of Romanism, without demoralizing society by the same artful tricks that are played off in common by Jesuits and Masons?"

H. J. McMaster, Luana, Iowa, writes:

"The Sons of Temperance have taken advantage of the temperance movement and organized a lodge here. After the lodges there is not much time or money for religion or anything else. The prayer meeting has died a lingering death; the Sunday-school goes begging in vain. We need a lecturer to arouse the people."

C. H. Welsh, Degraff, O., writes:

"I have had very good success in canvassing—have got twenty-two names now, and have the promise of as many more, and will still try to get subscribers for I love the cause."

James Donaldson, London, Ontarlo, writes:

"Nothing has ever tried my faith so much as the state of things in this country. The pulpit and press are completely muzzled by the Masons. I am glad you have a few subscribers in this Province."

Wm. Atkinson, Saybrook, Ill., writes:

"Secretism reigns almost supremely here, but thank God, there are a few names even in Saybrook that have not defiled their garments. But they seem to lack moral courage to come out and take a bold stand. We have a faithful minister this year. His labors have been crowned with success. During last winter there were one hundred and fifty professed conversions. He is not a secretist man. I still hope and pray that the cause of right in which you are engaged, will prevail over the works of darkness."

Donald C. McLaren, Geneva, N. Y., writes:

"Your's is a Christian paper. It ought to be supported by the United Presbyterian church in its needed self-defense."

Mrs. S. Childes, Ponca, Neb., writes:

"I cannot think of doing without your paper. I have tried to get subscribers, but the times are hard and grangers plenty. I scatter my own paper however, in every direction. God being my helper I intend to oppose secret societies while I live. Your paper is next to my Bible. We all read it. It does me good to see that people are wide awake in their opposition against the works of darkness. May God help and strengthen the people in the glorious work is my prayer."

L. Hakes, Clay, N. Y., writes:

"I had supposed that I was almost alone in never dying opposition to the great sum of all villainy, Freemasonry, until I learned there was a man at Syracuse, N. Y., spending his time lecturing against the order. I am glad that Anti-masonry is not dead yet. Now it the time for a revival of its principles, to let the present generation know what iniquity is being fostered right under their noses. I know whereof I speak when I speak against the institution of Freemasonry, having witnessed all the ceremonies of initiation, and heard all the oaths taken, grips and pass words given, up as high as Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, and Royal Arch degree; and after witnessing all this I was ready to agree with the sentiments of a Christian preacher that I heard give his opinion of Freemasonry in the following words; 'It is one of the most God-offending, heaven-daring, hell-deserving, and man-degrading insititutions that ever God suffered to exist on the face of the earth.' I have not forgotten the time of Morgan's abduction, and I have no doubt I had one or more neighbors who had a hand in it. I am too old (being near seventy-five years old) to do much, but it does my heart good to learn that there are those who are sounding the warning voice against so great an evil. It is claimed by the fraternity that the institution of Masonry is as old as the world, and that it dates from the Garden of Eden. It may be so, but if it held its first meeting there, I think the gentleman that stood on his tail and conversed with grandmother Eve, was the first Grand Master, and all others since that time are legitimate descendants of his Royal Arch Highness, and true representatives of the present stock. But as I am certain that truth and right must and will at last triumph over all evil, I pray God speed the day when oath-bound societies of whatever name shall cease to curse mankind."

Samuel Hale, Mallet Creek, O., writes:

"The Masonic experience of my son, L. R. P. Hale, whose letter was published lately in the Cynosure, has cost me not less than $1,000, and cost him some eight years' labor of the best of his life; and the Masonic power entails my profits not less than $500 per year, since we have agitated this question. In this they are consistent with themselves and their obligations. Their great error is the first step in taking Entered Apprentice oaths. The Entered Apprentice swears true allegiance to the dictates of Masonry and the lodge power, and renounces all allegiance to any other government, human or divine. I think our writers and lecturers touch this point too lightly. Masonry is a conspiracy of the devil, gotten up to promote the devil's cause; and if we take any other view of it we make it inconsistent with itself. For instance, some admit that it obligates the Mason to look after his indigent brother, their widows and orphans. But in so doing; they concede to a most cunningly devised lie. What value would there be in a note made payable at the option of the maker?"

Conrad Stegner, East Castle Rock, Minn. writes:

"I can assure you that my whole soul is in your cause. My means are small, but my opportunity and will to do good are large. The Lord be with and bless you in your glorious work, for Jesus' sake."

Geo. W. Taylor, Gibsonburg, O., writes:

"From the first reading of your paper, I have taken such a liking to it that herewith I send my subscription. I am a member of the German Baptist or Dunker church, and find that your paper agrees precisely with my belief. I believe that Freemasonry is the biggest mass of corruption in the whole world, and I am afraid they will find it out only when it is too late. I cannot see how any Christian man when reading the Bible can feel himself clear while oath-bound in any secret crime."

Wm. P. Pease, Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

"I am highly pleased with the paper. Its deep Christian tone; its unwavering and steadfast course in opposition to the works of darkness, and its open defense of the principles of truth and justice and right, certainly ought to command the respect and esteem of all the lovers of truth, and the admiration even of its enemies. I love the reform, and am glad to see the success with which it is moving forward to victory over the evils of organized secrecy. May the good Lord bless you and your efforts, and the cause in which you are engaged, abundantly."

Thos. Moore, Milnersville, O., writes:

"I am in for the present reform both heart and soul, as I was in the anti-slavery reform. I am pleased with the Cynosure, —do not think any language too strong made use of in it against infidelity. I am now in my seventy-ninth year, and do not expect to live much longer, but I do desire if the Lord will, to see the triumph of the reform you are engaged in."

Burges Smith, Clifford, Pa., writes:

"The grange has just made its appearance here. They have organized a lodge and bought a piece of ground to build upon. I think that we are well provided for in this little village. We have one Freemasonry lodge and one tavern, and now the grange, all based upon the same platform. It all takes nicely. The deacon of our Baptist church is a Mason and a granger, as well as a number of the members. Our spring is very cold and backward. Vegetation has hardly started yet. The farmers are almost discouraged."

Geurnsey Camp, Durham, Conn., writes:

"I feel interested in your paper. I think it is doing more good than any other paper published. I will see what I can do about getting subscribers. I am seventy-five years old."

Wm. Ault, Transitville, Ind., writes;

"Your paper is creating a great excitement in our place. The people are reading and commenting, and the Masons hate it worse than they do the devil. We want you to send us a lecturer. He shall find a home at my house and the United Presbyterian church for as many lectures as he wishes. The Anti's are waking up. Men, women and children would turn out."

John Miller, Wauseon, Ohio, writes:

"I can succeed better getting subscribers for the Cynosure, by furnishing the money, they promising to pay at their earliest convenience. This I can afford to do for the sake of spreading the light. Men who love the truth as it is in the Cynosure, will pay when they can."

A. Bedford, Ridgebury, Pa., writes:

"I am heart and soul with you in the work of light. I pray God to hasten the day when all shall know him. I will do what I can for the cause."

Michael Good, Fayettville, Pa., writes:

"I do not wish my name struck off the list, because your paper has the spirit of Christian principle, and can be recommended as a family paper, containing sound doctrine; bold in publishing the truth and fearless in exposing sin in all its forms."

A. R. Malcolm, Pittsburgh, Ind., writes:

"I would like to call your attention to some of the maneuverings of the powers of darkness in this place. One of my neighbors, a worthy Mason, was sorely afflicted in his family; his wife low with consumption, now dead, and he prostrate with erysipelas at the time of her death. Neighbors were attentive and kind, but not a Mason I suppose attended upon that family, with one exception. And yet at the funeral of that brother's wife pall-bearers were appointed to conduct the body to its last resting place. Offers were made to hire one of the neighbors to attend the sick until the lodge could make arrangements. Why, a man might die before the arrangments were made. The offers were spurned with contempt. It is said the individual received $25 from the lodge, and paid $15 or $20 for a burial lot."

Lesson for June 13th, 1875.—A King Desired.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Samuel, 8:4-9. Commit 4-9; Primary Verse, 7.

4 Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah,

5 And said unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy sons walk not in thy ways; now make us a king to judge us like all the nations.

6 But the thing displeased Samuel, when they said, Give us a king to judge us. And Samuel prayed unto the Lord.

7 And the Lord said unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they say unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them.

8 According to all the works which they have done since the day that I brought them up out of Egypt even unto this day, wherewith they have forsaken me, and served other gods, so do they also unto thee.

9 Now therefore hearken unto their voice: howbeit yet protest solemnly unto them, and shew them the manner of the king that shall reign over them.

A Murder List.

[From the Anti-masonic Almanac, Philadelphia, 1831.]

The first revelation of Masonry, after its establishment in 1717, was by Pritchard in 1730. The publication of his "Masonry Dissected" produced an extraordinary excitement. The public feeling was shocked with the fooleries of its ceremonies and the wickedness of its penalties. Pritchard's life was sought; and he was forced to conceal himself from their vengeance for a length of time. During his concealment it was reported that he was murdered; but when he afterwards appeared in public, the Masons took advantage of the report to promote their own designs—said he was absent selling his book, and having made his fortune had returned. He was subsequently cruelly murdered, and the previous report covered the deed, the people supposing it to be a hoax—the untruth in the former case discrediting the truth in the latter. The revelation of Pritchard, however, for a time sunk Masonry in England, but revelations began to be discredited by the tricks of the fraternity (they pretending to publish them), it again got up and spread its influence. When it was known as a fact that the Masons had murdered Pritchard, the public indignation rose to a great height in London and over the British Empire. In 1736 to 1740 "Freemasonry" says Mr. Ward "was the scoff of the apprentice boys of London. They came out in savage ornaments, and paraded the street in ridicule of Masonry; but the society, by special vote, suspended its festive ceremonies, suffered the storm to pass, and grew all the while like willow by the water courses."

PRIEST was murdered for being concerned with Pritchard in the same publication. SMITH published "Jachin and Boaz" in Vermont. He resided in Manchester, in that State. He was a Master Mason, and was expelled from North Star Lodge for the publication aforesaid. "After his expulsion, he set what the Masons call a clandestine lodge; he was harrassed and threatened continually, so much so, that he thought best to sell his property and leave the country. A day or two after he left the place, a Mason of high standing in conversation with me, said that Smith had started for Kentucky; but, says he, "mark my words, he'll never reach Kentucky." In the course of a few weeks news arrived of the death of Smith. The same gentleman called on me again, and thus addressed me; "Did I not tell you Smith would not reach Kentucky? By G–d he has gone where every damn'd perjured scoundrel will go who has said what he has." There was a young man, a neighbor of mine who went with Smith. After Smith died he returned, and from him I obtained the particulars of his (Smith's) death. He stated that they stopped at a public house on the Allegheny mountain. Smith was taken suddenly ill, and expired in a few hours afterwards. I shall never forget the feelings I had in consequence of the conduct of Masons at that place. When the news of Smith's death reached them, it was a day of rejoicing with them. H. LIVINGSTON was a native of New York State. He was a Mason. "Jachin and Boaz" had fallen into his hands. He did not know the true nature of his penalties, or how far his brethren would proceed in their execution. Knowing Jachin and Boaz to be true, he did not apprehend danger from stating the truth. He said so; soon after which he was summoned to the lodge. Since his leaving his family to attend to that summons, he has never appeared. Various rumors were sent abroad respecting his mysterious disappearance; but his family having read the same book, knew the nature of Masonic oaths and penalties, and attributed his disappearance to the fraternity. They were then charged with his murder and meekly bore the charge without vindication.

MURDOCK. The facts relating to this murder, if the deed had been done by an individual would have convicted capitally, though only presumptive evidence. Capt. Ariel Murdock was a Mason. His wife, an intelligent, respectable woman (still alive, 1831) obtained a copy of Jachin and Boaz. She learned it to a considerable degree of perfection, could talk it correctly, which she frequently did—and often, for the entertainment of her neighbors, would act the lodge in going over the ceremonies. Mr. M. had a difference with a brother Mason, who had borrowed from, and then defrauded him out of a sum of money. This man had before been his bosom friend. On account of this difference he absented himself for some months before his death, from the lodge. The man who had cheated him, hated him; and it was supposed that through him he was represented as having instructed his wife in the mysteries and ceremonies she had learnt from Jachin and Boaz. The day previous to his death, Masons called on him. They were a long time closeted with him. Their errand or conversation, they never accounted for. During the same day, Mr. Murdock left the house, supposed with the Masons, and never returned. His absence created great uneasiness in the family, but the Masons hovered around, and consoled them, and promised his return, bidding them be composed. The next morning Masons brought word that he was found a corpse in the adjoining woods. He was found with a bruise on his head —his throat horribly cut and had several stabs under his left breast. The ground around where he lay was much disturbed as if he had struggled. Blood had spouted from him on a tree near where he lay, and had been whittled off with his knife! His family found difficulty to approach him, the Masons making them stand back! They pretended that all was suicide. The knife was in his hand as if he had himself done the deed—which was impossible! They procured a coffin at their own expense; he was laid out in the woods, and borne from thence the same day to the place of interment. No reason was given to the family for this extraordinary conduct. The murdered man had on a new linen shirt. It was cut across from one side to the other, according to the obligation of a Master Mason!

As soon as this tragedy was over, Mr. M. was calumniated. He was represented as having murdered himself; as having been deranged, and by other means. One of his supposed Masonic murderers was many years afterward seen in Philadelphia, a wretched vagabond. On being asked how he came on, he exclaimed—"Good God! only look at my condition—I have not enjoyed a happy day since I left Rensellaerville," (the place where Murdock was murdered.)

ARTEMUS KENNEDY was made a Mason up to the Templar's degree in Groton and Boston. In February, 1829, he seceded publicly from the order. Sometime after his renunciation, he was told that the fraternity would murder him. It is a Templar's rule that whoever secedes from, or exposes their secrets, will not live over a year and a day. He was allured by Masons from his house on the very day which finished his year after renouncing, and being from home the party made him delay his return until 12 or 1 o'clock at night, when on his way home he was knocked on the head, and thrown into Milton river, about the distance of low water where the tide ebbs and flows! An investigation of this subject was made; it developed a scene of hypocrisy, and circumstances so alarmingly suspicious, that the populace were enraged, and the fear of detection made the men who were most concerned and last with him, immediately fly the country. A number of Masons, his neighbors, stuck by him all the day and evening—made him drink, play cards and spend his time so as to place himself at their mercy. The last tavern they halted at, several of the Masons, his companions, left the premises, and, as is supposed, went before him, waylaid, and destroyed him. The investigators were left no other inference, and the belief is universal, except with Masons, that he was Masonically murdered.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and the Association hopes to raise this sum by June 10th next; and $20.000 as soon thereafter as possible to secure the ownership. Send on contributions.

Read the Notices on 4th Page.

INFORMAL MEETING OF DELEGATES.—The General Agent, Mr. Stoddard, is requested by the National Committee to provide for an informal meeting of the delegates to the Anniversary in some room in the building where the National Association meets, to which the delegates can repair for social converse as they arrive, before the hour set for the opening, which is Tuesday evening, 8 o'clock, June 8th. Some of our most profitable meetings have been of this description. When the delegates are met in any considerable number let them put some brother in the chair, as we did at Oberlin, and pray, sing, or consult as they may be led.

THE ILLINOIS CONGREGATIONAL ASSOCIATION at Rockford is misrepresented by the daily press. The tone of the meeting was good. A resolution endorsing the National Christian Association and approving Mr. Carpenter's proposed donation of a head quarters of reform, was laid over to be considered next year at Quincy, on motion of the mover of the resolution. It must therefore go into the printed minutes to be considered by the churches. It will come up as unfinished business next year and doubtless the reform will be endorsed.

We have received a supplement of the American Freeman (Mr. Needels' paper) Albany, Mo., nominating the senior editor of the Cynosure to head our National ticket in the next Presidential canvass, subject to the decision of the mass meeting to follow our anniversary at Pittsburgh. We thank the Freeman for the courtesy. The Cynosure will support MR. CARPENTER for the nomination if he can be induced to run; and measures will be taken to ascertain whether he will accept the nomination before leaving for Pittsburgh. We could rally the last voter among us to his name. And if the Temperance men, who are resolved to make the issue at the polls, can be united with us in Mr. Carpenter's support, we can together poll a vote in 1876, which may, at least, turn the scale between the two old parties. And our men never will go back when once launched on this line.

MINISTERS WILTING BEFORE THE BLAZE OF THE LODGE—ILLINOIS STATE CONGREGATION ALASSOCIATION—OUR ANNIVERSARY AT PITTSBURG—MR. CARPENTER SICK!!

ROCKFORD, ILL. May 27th, 1876.

DEAR CYNOSURE:

The State Congregational Association is in session here. I give what will interest your readers.

This body has uttered the strongest possible condemnation of secret associations from time to time, since May, 1837, twenty-eight years ago at Farmington, Ill., where we voted that "An organization requiring an oath or pledge of secrecy of its members, is, by that fact different from and opposed to a republican State and Christian Church;" and we therefore warned our members to "have no fellowship with secret societies but rather reprove them."

This plain, pointed action of the State association has been re-affirmed and endorsed by similar action by this body at Jacksonville, Geneseo, here at Rockford, thirteen years ago, and in Ottawa in 1867, where we adopted Prof. Bartlett's resolution that, "Freemasonry, is in its nature, as we suppose, hostile to good government and the true religion." Moreover, Henry M. Storrs, D. D., agent of the Am. Home Missionary Society, who is here, eight or ten years ago while at Cincinnati, was chairman of the committee which issued a tract in my name against secret societies, and Mr. Storrs wrote a considerable part of the tract himself, but preferred it should appear as mine. Also at our last triennial Congregational Seminary Convention in Chicago, on motion of Rev. S. B. Goodenow, the Congregational representatives of eight States voted to request their Education committee not to aid theological students who are Masons or Odd-fellows. And the Aurora Association a little while before, refused to license a candidate, otherwise acceptable, because he wss a Freemason, and said he would not give up his lodge.

Such is the record of Illinois Congregationalists now in State Association in this city of Rockford. And their record is a good one; of which their children will feel proud. It proves that in their judgment, the lodge is anti-Christ.

But during all this time our poor ministers, in the words of Mr. Stoddard concerning the minister of another denomination, have been "wilting before the lurid blaze of the lodge." And by the inconsistency of a right testimony and a wrong practice, they are weakening their churches, confounding their members, and strengthening the lodge. To one who knows, as I do, the real worth of these men and brethren and who knows intimately, as I do, the state of their churches, their condition is enough to move one to tears: and the dire and terrible effect of the lodge on this body of Christians and their future, is a vision from which I would gladly turn away.

In the first place, the Advance, their organ, is also the organ of the secret temperance lodges, and proposed lately to members of those lodges to give one dollar in cash to each lodge, for every ubscriber who was a member of the lodge. This, of course, closes the mouth of the Advance against all secret lodges by its being the organ of one of them; and the ministers are thereby kept in ignorance of the reform, and in terror of the lodge.

I yesterday moved a resolution commending Mr. Carpenter's proposed donation of a Printing House and home of the cause. Prof. Bartlett hesitated to adopt the resolution because he was ignorant of the constitution of the "National Christian Association." Other members of the Association were as ignorant as he. Their paper, the Advance gives them no information about the reform which has been discussed and voted upon by the Association for twenty-eight years, ever since it was formed! And this though General Howard has employed as his special contributor, a leading man of the secret temperance lodges, and is himself in favor of these lodges. I am told also by Rev. Mr. Cobb of Washington, D. C., that Gen. O. O. Howard belongs with Colfax to the Odd-fellows. I could not believe that Gen. O. O. Howard was guilty of membership in that bastard Masonic order, but my informant Mr. Cobb insisted that he knew of his personal knowledge that General Howard did belong to that loathed secret order.

I have privately remonstrated with Gen. Howard of the Advance, whom as also his brother, I have held in the highest esteem. But the Advance must do differently, or our churches must have another organ, or the the western Congregational churches will be, in the words of a high Mason, "disintegrated by the lodge." I ought to say that Prof. Bartlett yesterday, manfully repeated his testimony against secret societies.

But the State Association is being honey-combed by the lodge. There are Freemasons here, delegates of Congregational churches, sitting as full members of the State Association; sitting in silent opposition and biding their time. General Dustin, of Sycamore, is one of these. Healy of Chicago, the Knight Templar, is not present, but there are a few of the ministers here who have gone into the accursed dens of anti-Christ, and they rage bitterly in private conversation, whenever their lodge is referred to. Of course this means disaster.

Rev. Mr. Cobb, State Home Mission Superintendent from Minnesota, who seems to be a good man, referred in his speech to the secret societies in his State, and condemned our practice of assailing the lodges, on the ground that "fighting an 'ism' built it up."

Of course opposing an evil strengthens it, apparently, till it falls. So Moses and Aaron aggravated the bondage of the Jews in Egypt, and the timid and unbelieving cursed them for it. They compelled them to make brick without straw; and as an ordinary method of of opposing social error and wrong, Mr. Cobb is right. Paul at Mars Hill set up the knowledge of the true God in the minds of Athenians and idolaters, before attacking their idols. But he attacked their idols; and we must attack the idolatries of the lodge, or perish before it, as have the seven churches of Asia, which have been heathenized by worships and ceremonies of the same nature and from the same source.

ROCKFORD, May 28th.

This morning Rev. Henry M. Storrs of New York, Secretary of the Home Missionary Society, spoke feelingly of the Rev. Dr. Storrs for fifty years pastor in Braintree, Mass., who was his fosterfather. I added the venerable Dr. Storrs' testimony concerning secret societies, given me awhile before his death. I asked Dr. Storrs if he had a clear recollection of the opinions and feelings of the New England ministry, half a century ago concerning Freemasonry. "Very," replied the good old patriarch, "my grandfather Williston, of East Haven used always to say that a Freemason was hand in hand with the devil!"

"Did his ministerial brethren generally sympathize with your grandfather in his abhorrence of the lodge?" I asked.

"Yes," was his calm and decided reply.

I said farther, that I thought it due to his memory that his dying testimony on this point should be given.

A young man arose, and, with some emotion, said that venerable father, if back here, would probably modify his opinion; and he (the speaker) protested against the introduction of such topics here. He was not a Mason but he protested in behalf of Masons on that floor who were good Christians. The speaker's parents were earnest, excellent Christians and my personal friends. If this writing should ever meet the son's eye, without going into an argument, I request him to consider this simple fact, that the Freemasons of Rockford and elsewhere are selling secrets that are not secrets, because they are all and everywhere revealed. And further, that their professed secrets are worthless in themselves: and that they charge and collect a high price for such secrets from every initiate. I submit to him as a business man, whether this is not swindling; obtaining money upon false pretenses, and meaner and more sinful than lottery gambling? And if so, how he answers to his conscience and his God for his endorsement of the piety of men who are carrying on such practices?

THE PITTSBURGH ANNIVERSARY.

But I must close. This is your last number before our Pittsburgh meeting. We hope in God that Mr. Carpenter's health will be restored, and that he will be with us. The State Association was led by Rev. Dr. Bascom in a most earnest prayer for his recovery.

God willing, we will be at Pittsburgh, and we are sure the Ruler of men and nations will be with us. Let every one who can possibly do so attend, and bring the Saviour with him. Let us pray especially for the ministers of Christ. The evil spirits who rule the lodge pay their profoundest attention to them; but if faithful men Christ holds them in his right hand.

Yours in Christ,

J. BLANCHARD.

JUBILEE YEAR.

During the great popular movements attending our national centennial anniversaries, those high ritualists the Romanists and Masons will be actively at work in forwarding their own interests. The Romanists have already begun by making cardinals and arch bishops, and instituting a jubilee of their own; and the Masons seem determined o seize upon Bunker Hill as their own property on the 17th of June, rendering that anniversary, as far as possible, a Masonic one. They are also preparing to draw the attention of the whole nation upon their own peculiar annivert sary the 24th of June, in our grea national emporium, New York.

Ought not Anti-masons, therefore, to be on the alert on these occasions? Who have a better right to give direction to the influences of these occasions than we as Americans? We would suggest, therefore, to our Anti-masonic friends in Boston and New York to do all in their power by fair and open means to oppose the machinations of these foreign institutions Romanist and English. Shall we while celebrating Bunker Hill, receive into our midst this wooden horse, Masonry, yes, a treacherous gift from England? The press is muzzled, the book-stalls and news-stands are void of our publications, and our society makes no imposing demonstrations to delight, awe and control the multitudes.

We would suggest quiet, yet determined and effective measures. Let our friends in Boston and New York and vicinity, aid enterprising young men and women wanting employment in organizing themselves into bands of colporteurs to distribute tracts, pamphlets and books, and the Cynosure. Thousands upon thousands of American citizens might be reached in this way, and put on their guard against the sly and insidious movements of these foreign institutions that are seeking to destroy our religion and our liberties.

Our publishers can put these publications so low, that active colporteurs can easily make fair profits by their sale, while most effectively aiding our cause. Some of these works are got up with especial reference to ready circulation. A greater variety is offered than has ever before been in print in this or any other country. It is here, in this land of freedom, that Jesuitry in all its thousand-fold forms is making the greatest efforts to plant its own pernicious principles, and it is here that the greatest spirit (except perhaps in Prussia) has become aroused to oppose its cunning and artful devices.

Let our Anti-masonic friends arouse then, and give our anniversary crowds food for thought and reflection. Our publishers offer Gen. Phelps' "Secret Societies," and other similar works suitable for crowd sale, on such terms that nearly one hundred per cent may be cleared by colporteurs. At a trifling expense they will throw in thousands of tracts, so that where books or pamphlets are not bought, tracts may be given away instead, with the view of bringing the subject, as far as possible, home to the thoughts of every man and woman in America; and to show that this new world is not the proper soil for the degenerate and worthless institutions of the old.

They will agree, as publishers, to furnish any works named on their list, suitable for street circulation, in large quantities to responsible parties, and will take back after three months all copies that shall remain unsold and uninjured; so that no loss may occur to parties who may order them. We believe this to be the surest and most effective way of spreading the information of our American movement among the people, and thus aiding our cause.

Appeal for the Cynosure.

BY THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE N. C. A.

To all Friends of this Cause:

We call your especial attention to the Christian Cynosure, the organ of the National Christian Association, as a large, ably conducted journal, published at two-thirds the cost of papers of its size, yet receiving a very meager support. As a public educator, not only pointing out clearly the evils we oppose, but ably discussing the best modes of warfare against them, and setting forth the plans and purposes of the Association as well as giving the current history of this struggle, the extensive circulation of the Cynosure is a FUNDAMENTAL necessity to this reform. We fully believe in the wisdom of the following resolution adopted at the first national meeting held at Pittsburgh seven years ago: "Resolved, That it is the sense of this Convention that we need a paper promptly started, ably edited and widely circulated, which shall make opposition to secret societies a speciality." And, whereas, such a paper was promptly started, ably edited and published by this Association, for about four years, till the fifth annual meeting at Oberlin, when with the agreement that it should as heretofore be the official organ of the Association and receive its undivided support, at the urgent request of the Executive Committee, by the unanimous vote of that National Meeting its publication passed into the hands of Ezra A. Cook & Co. And, whereas, they have not only redeemed their promise to conduct the paper on the same principles on which it wass tarted, and as the subscription list would warrant it, improve the paper in the amount and variety of reading matter, but have also ventured to do more, having greatly enlarged and improved the paper, trusting to the increase in subscriptions to follow the enlargement; and, whereas, the subscription list of the Cynosure is now, over fourteen months after the enlargement, but a trifle over four thousand, viz., 4,027, we therefore believe that the interests of the Association demand for its official organ a very wide circulation, hereby urge upon every delegate to the Pittsburgh meeting and every friend of this cause the absolute and pressing necessity of doing all in their power to increase the subscription list of the Cynosure to at least ten thousand. H. L. KELLOGG,

Secretary Board of Directors.

NOTES.

—This is the last number of the Cynosure that will reach our readers before the Anniversary. Those among them who can are doubtless prepared to attend and have in mind some suggestions for the advancement of the work. If these are presented in a brief, clear manner, their force will be doubled. Arrange among your neighbors to bring home a lecturer. Before and after Anniversary Conventions is the most favorable time to secure speakers on their way eastward or westward. Settle in your mind the amount you can give toward the Publishing House fund, and expect a blessing on your soul if the Lord inclines you to give more at Pittsburgh. Remember our paper and carry to the publisher all the names and renewals you can get at home or on the way; also if any books are needed for circulation in your locality, make up the list. Above all and first of all let prayer be unceasing for the blessing of Divine grace and wisdom upon the convention in every individual member. If we have not this we had best remain at home.

—Bishop Weaver of the United Brethren is now on the Pacific coast. He writes to the Telescope of prevailing worldliness and inactivity among the churches. We hope his mission for the United Brethren church will be abundantly blessed. It was understood that the Bishop would deliver a few addresses against the lodge if occasion served. He will no doubt be welcome in a number of localities for this reason, as well as on acount of his special mission.

—We learn by the Anti-masonic Christian Herald that Merchant Kelly of Bentonville, Ind., died at 2 o'clock, Thursday morning, May 27th. Mr. Kelley was one of the most ardent workers against the lodge in an individual capacity in our acquaintance. He assisted Mr. Wallace in removing the Herald to Bentonville, and has largely sustained the burden of its publication ever since. During the past three years he has purchrsed more Anti-masonic books and tracts, than any other one man that we know of in the United States, a great part of which were given away. We sent him 20,000 pages of tracts a few weeks since.

—The lecture and exposition of Mr. Ronayne at Wheaton were attended by good audiences. Our notice of the interesting lecture of the first evening and the lodge work of the Entered Apprentice and Master Mason's degrees is necessarily brief for want of room, but the letter of Father Chittenden and the notices of previous occasions will give a general idea of the manner, substance and effect of these meetings.

Political.

ALBANY, Mo.

Editor of the Cynosure:

In your issue of May 13th Bro. Cogswell of Mansfield, Ohio, seems inclined to object to the Cynosure publishing so many articles on politics. No doubt exists in my mind that he is as thoroughly opposed to the secret rings that are ruining our government as I am, but it seems that he has forgotten that our Pilgrim fathers talked, prayed and voted alike. They did nothing without first inquiring of God what was best and would be most conducive to his honor and their own good, They had his word and will at hand, and if we are rightly informed they examined it on all occasions and always found that when the wicked rule the people mourn; and to-day mourning is to be heard throughout the land, and why? Because the Christians of our land say, You must keep quiet or these cliques and clans will say we are going to mix politics and religion together. Would to God that every man in our nation would bring his religion with him to the polls (if he has any), and then ask God to help him vote aright! Look back and think of Presidents who prayed and honored God in place of smoking cigars, drinking whiskey, and belonging to the different secret rings, that the devil invented for the ruin of our race and to check the spread of the gospel of Christ. As I have once said before, I consider a man's religion vain if he yields it to any other power on earth. If his religion has to be laid aside for politics, then of course his politics is of more importance than religion. What do we care what Masons may say about us? No doubt the devil will do his best to get every secret clique in the land to sneer and scorn at every movement we may make towards uprooting this giant evil, but we are commanded to be as bold as a lion, therefore let us not falter by the way, but as soon as our Christian Association adjourns at Pittsburgh let us meet as a political body and nominate candidates for President and Vice-president who have nerve and manhood enough to say whether he accepts our platform and principles or not. We have plenty of as smart men in our ranks as our present incumbent; plenty as well versed in national affairs as he was when elected. If they have not a national reputation, let us make them one. Let us so act that we can expect God's blessing and that, as with our Pilgrim fathers, he may lead us to certain victory. G. W. NEEDELS.

UNIONDALE, Pa., May 20, 1875.

I hope surely that a political basis will be made at Pittsburgh, so that we can put candidates on it for righteousness and truth in our civil affairs. The wish is to make nominations in this section; so our North-east Association feels, and we hope decided action will be taken on this point. If we advocate reform on moral and Christian grounds it ought surely to carry our action and influence as citizens. The evils we oppose affect our civil rights, and we must therefore aim to check all such encroachments upon, and perversions of justice.

Be sure and prepare the field for political action, that we may labor consistently and in all our relations for religion and humanity, for the church and for our country. J. W. RAYNOR.

The Home Circle.

"Blessed is the Man whom Thou Chasteneth."

The following beautiful and instructive lines are from the pen of the late Right Hon. Sir Robert Grant, late Governor General of India.

O Saviour! whose mercy, severe in its kindness,
Has chastened my wanderings, and guided my way,
Adored by the power which illumined my blindness,
And weaned me from phantoms that smiled to betray.

Enchanted with all that was dazzling and fair,
I followed the rainbow—I caught at the toy;
And still in displeasure thy goodness was there,
Disappointing the hope, and defeating the joy.

The blossom blushed bright, but a worm was below;
The mooulight shown fair, there was blight in the beam;
Sweet whispered the breeze, but it whispered of woe;
And bitterness flowed in the soft flowing stream.

So cured of my folly, yet cured but in part,
I turned to the refuge thy pity displayed;
And still did this eager and credulous heart
Weave visions of promise that bloomed but to fade.

I thought that the course of the pilgrim to heaven
Would be bright as the summer, and glad as the morn;
Thou show'dst me the path—it was dark and uneven,
All rugged with rock, and all tangled with thorn.

I dreamed of celestial reward and renown,
I grasped at the triumph which blesses the brave;
I asked for the palm-brauch, the robe and the crown;
I asked—and thou show'dst me a cross and a grave.

Subdued and instructed, at length to thy will
My hopes and my longings I fain would resign;
O give me the heart that can wait and be still,
Nor know of a wish or a pleasure but thine!

There are mansions exempted from sin and from woe,
But they stand in a region by mortals untrod;
There are rivers of joy—but they roll not below;
There is rest—but it dwells in the presence of God.

Unsanctified Talent.

BY B. F. NEWTON.

The church is full of it, especially in our large cities. To be a member of some denominational church, is popular, often lucrative. Wealthy merchants, lawyers, doctors, ministers, editors, professors in colleges and seminaries, men of giant intellect are on the church book, surround the communion table, partake of the dying emblems of a crucified Jesus,—and still are mere nominals—unsanctified; they go and come, come and go, like a door on its hinges! Take one church in New York city by way of illustration, on which our mind's eye is now fixed.

Look at it; here are men of science, learning, talent, men of towering intellects, medical men, ministers, on the shelf, law expositors, students preparing for the ministry, writers for the press, but what are they?—where are they in things spiritual, heavenly and divine, in consecratedness to God's service? They are dwarfs, pigmies, in holy things, skeletons, with scarcely a single breath of the sanctified or baptismal grace. Instead of entering the holy of holies, they are groping about in the outer court.

Suppose these giant minds were wholly sanctified, set apart exclusively for soul-saving, on God's altar, continually, unreservedly,—full of faith and the holy Spirit, like Barnabas, would not salvation stream, the heavens rend, mountains often flow down, as when the melting fire burneth? All heaven would ring hallelujahs! The unsanctified talent in the house of God, instead of being a blessing to the church and the world, is a curse. Church members, having a name to live, while dead, destitute of the purifying, sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, stand in in the way of a revival, are stumbling blocks, hindrances, clogs to the wheels of salvation, Achans in the camp! They neither enter the kingdom themselves, nor suffer those to enter that would enter. "Salt is good; but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be seasoned." "Prophesy upon these bones; say to the wind, thus said the Lord God: Come from the four winds, O breath! and breathe upon these slain, that they may live. O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord." Ezk. 37:9. "While men slept the enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat and went his way." Matt. xiii. 25.

"The church and world amalgamate,
A union worse than with the State,
Though motives are the same;
The love of pleasure and of gold,
On some professors have such hold,
They oft forget their name."

"We have seen ministers in high standing play hours at croquet, and at evening, before the people, lead the social prayer-meeting. We have seen three doctors of divinity, and one promising candidate for that honor, playing nine-pins at the same alley. We have seen leading ministers of different denominations, in a large parlor, lead the assembly in 'amusement' at charades, conundrums, and other like sports, and with no misgivings preach and administer communion a Sabbath after. We are growing in the wisdom that attains flowers without thorns—and without fruit. We are adopting a cross disarmed of its nails and wreathed with roses, a flowery bed of ease, whereon to be carried to the skies. In absence of the music of heaven, we are lulled and charmed by the music of the opera. The sword of the Spirit, 'sharp and piercing to the dividing asunder of joints and marrow,' is muffled with flowers of poppy, a wand of sensuous soothing and spiritual numbness."

But Do They Separate?

The motto of the Peninsula and Oriental Steamship Company is, Quis Separabit?—implying that neither distance nor oceans can effectually separate the great East and the great West from mutual intercourse and friendship, whilst constantly connected by a powerful fleet of excellently commanded and punctually sailing mail steamers. In like manner, the apostle Paul also triumphantly exclaims, Quis separabit?—"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulution, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness or peril, or sword?" Many afflicted Christians in all ages, have as triumphantly made the same satisfactory confession, have felt that neither trials, nor poverty, nor illness, nor distress, have been able to separate them from their Lord, who loved them and gave himself for them.

But are there not always many Christians, especially in these days, who would have gravely to pause before replying satisfactorily to the self-examining query, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ?" Shall health and vigor, worldly activity, a good business, a round of pleasant social engagements, travel, visits, absorbtion in science or secular literature, or the snares of the pursuit of money? Are not these pleasant things much more perilous, oftentimes, to the Christian than the painful list enumerated by the apostle? And the Christian has not merely to ask, Shall these things separate us? but, Do they separate us? Is it a matter of fact, that such attractive things are really occupying our time and attention to such an extent, as to prevent us from giving to Christ's service that amount of devotedness which his spirit and his word teach us ought to be given by us? If our consciences do not enable us to return a peaceful reply to this needful self-interrogation, may we earnestly seek, in prayer, for the assistance of the Holy Spirit to "help our infirmities," and enable us to keep nearer to Christ henceforth.—*Can. A Parable.

Mr. Leupelt, in his narratives of missionary work at Benares, India, gives an instance of a caviller silenced by an effective parable:

Among the cavillers there was a Mohammedan, who, under pretence of requiring information, disturbed us a good deal. The information which he required was an explanation of the Trinity. When he first came I argued the point with him, but, though he had nothing to reply, on his return he always asked the same question again. At last I declined arguing the point with him any longer, and as he appealed to the people I settled our dispute by a parable. Of late he has been a silent hearer. The parable is substantially as follows:

A fatal disease is devastating the kingdom; every remedy applied by the people proves ineffectual. The king, therefore, devises a specific, and commissions several people to administer it to the dying people. But a learned man, unconcerned about the people, urges upon one of the physicians to give him information about the king and his mysterious existence. The physician complies with the request, and spends his time in explaining inexplicable mysteries; meanwhile his patients die. The king, hearing of this, sends for the physician, and addresses him thus: "Sir, what is your commission?" Answer: "To administer the specific to the sick." "Did you do it?" "Please, your Majesty, no; for a learned Moulvi required information about your Majesty's existence and life, and in giving that I had no time to administer the medicine." "What, then, became of the people?" Answer: "They died." Hearing this the king looked upon the man with indignation and said, "What? you saw the people dying around you, you had the remedy and knew that there was no other by which the people could be cured, and yet you spent your time in conversing about mysteries far beyond your comprehension? The people indeed, died in their sins, but you are guilty of their death and their blood rests upon your head; away, therefore, with you!" "Now say, my friends, did this fellow not deserve death?" "He did," was the exclamation of some. But I continued, "What is the meaning of this parable?" "You need not explain this," said a young man, "its meaning is plain. Instead of disputing about the Trinity you wish to preach the Gospel, for we are the dying and the Gospel is the remedy." "You are right," said I, and opening my New Testament and pointing to it, I said to my opponent, "here is my commission, it is to preach the Gospel. The people are dying and I must administer the specific." He tried once or twice more to interrupt us, but the people said, "Silence, they have to administer the medicine."

What Kind of Books shall I Give to my Children.

Who can duly estimate the benefits which would flow in upon us, if parents, even for one year, would withdraw from their children's hands all works of fiction, and substitute those which contain only the truth? Long and general habit has corrupted our taste, enfeebled our minds, perverted our judgment, and dethroned in our hearts that high regard for the truth which is so generally found in the human mind until counteracted by education.

Let us consider what a change would be produced in any family taught to value the truth, and reject fiction as necessarily inferior in value. The weak, unnatural, and often injurious works of novel writers, large and small, would give place to books of history, travels and science. The mind would be trained to contemplate the character, habits, and deeds of men, and the varied, useful, wonderful and glorious works of God, as well as the powers of our own minds, and our relations to our Maker, and to each other. Now, how many of us enter upon scenes of duty ignorant of ourselves, our fellow men, and the objects around us, with false ideas, erroneous principles, and unfounded expectations!

If we would ensure to our children a life of disappointment, mortification, and unhappiness, a downward course to the grave, and the loss of hope beyond it, we might teach them to prefer the vagaries of fiction writers to the observations of sense, the discoveries of science, the treasures of learning, and the revelations of God. But if we would regard the mind according to its nature and capacities, we should be among the advocates of the sound taste, useful truth, and the men of learning and labour who have claims on our high regard, and, above all, adherents to the Bible, as the richest treasure the earth contains. Brought to this as the touchstone, how soon will the brazen counterfeits of taste and learning expose their worthlessness and the corroding canker which would poison us and our children!

On this subject we have a fund of reflections to make, of arguments to display, and of interesting examples to quote, when opportunity shall present. We can only add a warm wish to see our countrymen waking to the pernicious influences of that prevailing taste which produces such various and extensive evils.—Ex.

Memory.

Mithridates, king of Pontus, had an empire in which two-and-twenty languages were spoken; and it is asserted that there was not a province in which he could not administer justice, nor a subject with whom he could not converse in his own dialect, and without the aid of an interpreter. But the royal linguist was eclipsed by the late Cardinal Mezzofanti, who died as recently as 1849. This wonderful man was the son of a carpenter at Bologna, and acquired his first knowledge of the classical languages by listening to the scraps of Latin and Greek which came through the open casement of a schoolroom window near which he was working. To the boys inside the tasks were irksome enough, but the stolen waters were sweet to the poor lad who could not pay for such learning; and with his wonderful retention of words, and with a grammatical intuition which has never been thoroughly explained, he went on acquiring till, at the age of seventy, he could converse in upwards of fifty languages, besides possessing some knowledge of at least twenty more. Basque is the most difficult language of Europe; but Mezzofanti was at home in both its dialects. Germans he could address either in high Saxon or in the patois respectively of Austria and the Black Forest. With Englishmen he never misapplied the sign of a tense—a feat of which few Scotchmen or Irishmen can boast. When Dr. Tholuck visited the Vatican he was amazed at the correctness with which Mezzofanti kept up the dialogue, first in Arabic, then in Persian; and to mention nothing more, he was so thoroughly master of the Chinese that he could preach in the college of the Propaganda to the students from the celestial Empire.

Of Dr. John Leyden, the distinguished Orientalist, many mnemonic feats are recorded. Amongst others it is mentioned that after he had gone to Bombay a case occurred where a great deal turned on the exact wording of an act of Parliament, of which, however, a copy could not be found in the presidency. Leyden, who before leaving home had had occasion to read over the Act, undertook to supply it from memory; and so accurate was his transcript that when, nearly a year after, a printed copy was obtained from England, it was found to be identical with what Leyden had dictated.

Richard Porson had a remarkable memory. On one occasion when some friends were assembled in Dr. Burney's house at Hammersmith, in examining some old newspapers which detailed the execution of Charles I., they came on sundry particulars which they fancied had been overlooked by Rapin and Hume; but Porson instantly repeated a long passage from Rapin in which these circumstances were all recounted. Once, when in the shop of Priestly the bookseller, a gentleman came in and asked for a certain edition of Demosthenes. Priestly did not possess it, and as the gentleman seemed a good deal disappointed, Porson inquired whether he wished to consult any particular passage. The stranger mentioned a quotation of which he was in search, when Porson opened the Aldine edition of Demosthenes, and after turning over a few leaves, put his finger on the passage. On another occasion, calling on a friend, he found him reading Thucydides. His acquaintance asked him the meaning of some word, when Porson immediately repeated the context. "But how do you know it was this passage I was reading?" asked his friend. "Because," replied Porson, the word only occurs twice in Thucydides; once on the right hand page—in the edition which you are using—and once on the left. I observed on which side you looked, and accordingly I knew to which passage you referred."

Within the range of our own experience most of our readers must have encountered examples of ready or retentive memory. The last time that the writer visited a college contemporary distinguished for his scholarship, he found him with a Greek Testament in his hand. On asking him if he had not got it all by heart, he replied that he scarcely thought he had, but he believed that if any phrase were given he could tell the chapter and verse where it occurred, and repeat the context. We tried him with passages till we were wearied, but it was impossible to puzzle James Halley; and we believe that the trial might have been extended to the Greek tragedians and Homer with scarcely inferior success. A gentleman who used to attend our church once offered to repeat verbatim any sermon, on the following day, without taking a single note; the only stipulation which he made was that he should be warned beforehand, so as to keep his attention fixed at the time. Frequently these powerful memories are filled with matters of questionable value. An appraiser, who lately lived at Hampstead, could enumerate all the shops from the Pump in Aldgate; and from being able to tell all about every corner house in London, who lived in it, and what business was carried on it, he went by the sobriquet "Memory Corner Thompson." Mr. Paxton Hood knew a man in London who could repeat the whole of Josephus; and Wm. Lyon, an itinerant actor well-known in Edinburgh a hundred years ago, used to gain wagers by committing to memory, overnight, the Daily Advertiser, and repeating it word for word next morning.

Many psychologists maintain that if an impression is once made upon the mind, it remains forever. And there are certain seasons of life or certain circumstances when—if we may use the metaphor—the receiving surface is peculiarly susceptible, and when the impressions made are deep, and sharp, and definite. So is it in childhood and youth. The objects then familiar, and the texts, the hymns, the languages then mastered, become a lifelong heritage, and, like the footprints of the cheirotherium in the sandstone of Saxony, it may have been a pulpy tablet on which they were first projected, but in the interval it has petrified, and they are now engraven in the rock forever. We might go further, and add that, on the whole, people remember the things in which they are really interested, or the things which it is very much for their interest to remember. In the one case, like the fine mixture of argillaceous sand left by the retiring tide, and ready to take in and retain the minutest traces—the mental tablet or mnemonic organ is in a state of spontaneous receptivity, and without any trouble on your part the interesting object will make its own mark, and will survive for days, for years, perchance through all existence. In the other case you have, very probably, to deal with a resisting recipient; but if at last you prevail, you may find him none the less a faithful conservator. The church of Rome has studded Europe and the Holy Land with fossil footprints—with the life-like impress, heel and toe, of saints and scripture worthies. But although Protestantism alleges that the footmarks on St. Paul's Rock and elsewhere are more indebted to monkish tools than to miraculous sandals, there can be no doubt that now they are made they are sufficiently permanent. And as there are subjects for which our minds are not always soft and plastic, we must have recourse to the hammer and chisel. A schoolboy has no difficulty in recollecting in the month of May every bank and bush where a nest is built or in progress; and he can tell the exact number of eggs which were that morning reported in the census of ever so many separate establishments—wrens, titmice, finches and linnets. These facts are interesting and impress themselves. But "The verb agrees with the nominative before it in number and person"—"9 times 6 are 54, 9 times 7 are 63"—although facts important and indisputable, are not particularly captivating; and yet the ingenious youth has an interest in retaining them. Pains and penalties are involved in forgetting them. Accordingly, by dint of diligence, he does after a fashion get them inscribed on the reluctant stone—chipped and chiselled into the mysterious Runic pillar where, long after the statistics of birds' nests have crumbled away, rules of syntax and multiplication tables stand forth with triumphant distinctness.—James Hamilton.

Children's Corner.

Evening Hymn.

O little child, lie still and sleep!
Jesus is near,
Thou need'st not fear.—
No one need fear whom God doth keep,
By day and night.
Then lay thee down in slumber deep
Till morning light.

O little child, thou need'st not wake;
Though dangers come
Around thy home.
And watch-dog's bark the silence break,
Jesus is strong,
And angels watch thee for his sake
The whole night long.

O little child, lie still and rest,—
He sweetly sleeps
Whom Jesus keeps,—
And in the morning wakes, so blest
His child to be,—
Love every one, but love him best:
He first loved thee.

O little child, when thou must die,
Fear nothing then,
But say Amen!
To God's command: and quiet lie
In his kind hand,
Till he shall say, "Dear child, come fly
To heaven's bright land."

Then with thine angel wings quick-grown,
Shalt thou ascend
To meet thy friend—
Jesus the little child will own—
Safe at his side!
And thou shalt live before the throne
Because he died! Amen.

Children in the Bible.

One of the most remarkable and most significant features in the Bible, as far as children are concerned, is the fact that it has no less than nine different expressions to denote a child. These nine words are by no means synonymous, but describe the various possible stages of the child's life, from its birth to manhood, thus showing the tender care with which the Hebrew parent watched and marked every period in the child's growth and development. There is the word ben, "son," feminine bath, "daughter," which is the general term for a child of any age. Then we have the more characteristic and specific yeled, the "new-born child," indicating by its name the fact of its arrival. A further stage of the babe's existence is expressed by the name yonek, "suckling." As still denoting the nursing period, but expressive of the age when the child is about to be weaned, is the name olel. Gamul, "the weaned," the fifth name, marks the period when it becomes independent of its mother. Equally expressive are the remaining four names, which describe the successive stages of the child's life, from the time he begins to run about to his development into maturity. Thus taph, "the quickly-stepping," "the little trotter," is the name of the little one who has ceased to be carried by the mother, and who makes short and quick strides to keep up with the pace of his parent. Elem, "the strong," the seventh appellation, describes him when he has developed his strength, and is ready to assist his parents in their labors, though not prepared for independent action. Naar, "the free" (from naar, "to shake off," "to become free"), the eighth name, describes the grown-up youth, who, though still assisted by his parents, is no more at their side, but has attained to that age when he can walk about freely, and defend himself; and bachur, "the matured," "the ripe," the ninth name, describes him when he has attained his majorty, is marriageable, and fit for military service.—Rev. Dr. Ginsbury, in the Bible Educator.

A Story Told by Dr. Krummacher.

A little incident occurs to me which I hardly withhold, on account of its simplicity and beauty. The mother of a little girl, only four years of age, had been for some time most dangerously ill. The physicians had given her up. When the little girl heard this, she went into an adjoining room, knelt down and said: "Dear Lord Jesus, O make my mother well again."

And after she had thus prayed, she said, as though in God's name, with as deep a voice as she could: "Yes, my dear child, I will do it gladly!"

This was the little girl's amen. She rose up, joyfully ran to her mother's bed, and said, "Mother, you will get well!"

And she recovered, and is in health to this day. Is it, then, ever permitted for me to pray thus unconditionally respecting temporal concerns? No· thou must not venture to do so, because thou canst still ask and doubt. But shouldst thou ever be inclined by God's Spirit to pray thus, without doubt or scruple, in a filial temper, and with simplicity of heart, resting on the true foundation, and in genuine faith, then pray thus by all means! No one dare censure thee; God will accept thee.

Good Enough for Home.

"Why do you put on that forlorn old dress?" asked Emily Manners of her cousin Lydia, one morning after she had spent the night at Lydia's house.

The dress in question was a spotted, faded, old summer silk, which only looked the more forlorn for its once fashionable trimmings, now crumpled and frayed.

"Oh, anything is good enough for home!" said Lydia, hastily pinning on a soiled collar, and twisting up her hair in a ragged knot, she went down to breakfast.

"Your hair is coming down," said Emily.

"Oh, never mind. It's good enough for home," said Lydia carelessly. Lydia had been visiting at Emily's home, and had always appeared in the prettiest of morning dresses and with neat hair, and dainty collars and cuffs; but now that she was back again among her brothers and sisters, and with her parents, she seemed to think anything would answer, and went about untidy and rough in soiled finery. At her uncles she had been pleasant and polite, and had won golden opinions from all; but with her own family her manners was as careless as her dress; she seemed to think that courtesy and kindness were too expensive for home wear, and that anything was good enough for home.

There are too many people who, like Lydia, seem to think that anything will do for home. Young men who are polite and pleasant in outside society are rude to their mothers, and snarl at their sisters; and girls who, among strangers are all gaiety and animation, never make an exertion to please their own family.

It is a wretched way to turn always the smoothest side to the world, and the roughest and coarsest to one's nearest and dearest friends.—Child's World.

Temperance.

The Aztecs on Drunkenness.

H. H. Bancroft in his "Indian Races on the Pacific Coast," gives an account of tne way in which the ancient Aztecs treated drunkenness. They were ahead of the Christian nations of the present day in this respect:

The young man who became drunk was conveyed to jail, and there beaten to death with clubs; the young woman was stoned to death. In some parts, if the drunkard was a plebeian, he was sold for a slave for the first offense and suffered death for the second; and at other times the offender's hair was cut off in the public market-place, he was then lashed through the streets, and finally his house was razed to the ground, because, they said, one who would give up his reason to the use of strong drink, was unworthy to possess a house, and be numbered among respectable citizens. Cutting off the hair, as we shall see, was a mode of punishment frequently resorted to by these people, and so deep was the degradation supposed to be attached to it, that it was dreaded almost equally with death itself. Should a military man, who had gained a distinction in the wars, become drunk, he was deprived of his rank and honors, and considered henceforth as infamous. Conviction of this crime rendered the culprit illegible for all future emoluments, and especially was he debarred from holding any public office.

A noble was invariably hanged for the first offense, his body being afterwards dragged without the limits of the town and cast into a stream used for that purpose only. But a mightier influence than mere fear of the penal law restrained the Aztec nobility and gentry from drinking to excess: this influence was social law. It was considered degrading for a person of quality to touch wine at all, even in seasons of festivity, when, as I have said, it was customary and lawful for the lower classes to indulge to a certain extent. Wine-bibbing was looked upon as a coarse pleasure, peculiar exclusively to the common people, and a member of the higher orders who was suspected of practicing the habit would have forfeited his social position, even though the law suffered him to remain unpunished. These heathens, however, seem to have recognized the natural incongruity existing between precept and practice, fully as much as the most advanced Christian.

The Tobacco Plague:

The twin of rum is tobacco. Both are poisons, which, in doses large and powerful enough, cause stupefaction and death. Against the former the crusade is active and powerful. Opposition to the latter is feeble; many, even among temperance men, make none at all, but prostitute themselves and many others by using large quantities of the abominable stuff. The nuisance is becoming very general, amounting to a well-nigh universal tobacco-plague.

We regard the use of tobacco as inimical to the progress and consummation of a true temperance reformation. It would be too much to affirm that all tobacco users are or will be dram-drinkers or drunkards. But it is not too much to say that it is very rare to find a confirmed drinker of alcoholic liquors who did not precede or who does not accompany the drinking habit with tobacco. What the track is to the railway train, that is tobacco to alcoholic inebriety.

The use of tobacco not only leads thousands to strong drink and to inebriety, by inducing an inflamed, diseased condition of the nerves of taste, an unnatural craving, to appease which alcohol is resorted to, but it greatly hinders the reformation of many who, seeing their danger, would gladly abandon their drinking habits. A careful investigation would show conclusively that a very large percentage of the failures to keep the temperance pledge, and of relapses on the part of those who have sought aid in inebriate asylums, are due, primarily, to tobacco.

It is the deliberate testimony of so eminent physician as Dr. Willard Parker, of this city, that the death-victims of tobacco are even more numerous than those of alcohol. Especially should there be an earnest endeavor to save children from the contamination. It is not uncommon, in our metropolitan streets, to see boys six or eight years old with cigars in their mouths. Who can doubt the increased risk of an immoral tendency and an unhappy future for such youths? The clergymen who chews or smokes, the church member or the temperance man who cultivates or deals in tobacco, hinders, by his practice and example, the prevalence and progress of true temperance. The valleys of Connecticut and Virginia, alike, which are given up to the cultivation of the tobacco plant, are misappropriated and should be put to better use.

We invoke the help of thoughtful and conscientious men and women everywhere to inaugurate some more effective effort to stay the ravages and stop the progress of the tobacco plague. —Natl. Temp. Adv.

Some one has gleaned from the government statistics the following interesting information which is commended to the class of Christians who think religion very expensive, and who keep dogs, go to law, chew and smoke tobacco, and "do as they please" about grog-shops and whisky: Salaries of all ministers of the Gospel, $6,000,000; cost of dogs, $10,000,000; support of criminals, $12,000,000; fees of litigation, $35,000,000; cost of tobacco and cigars, $610,000,000; importation of liquor, $50,000,000; support of grog-shops, $1,500,000,000; whole cost of liquor, $2,200,000,000.

"I drink to make me work," said a young man; to which an old man replied: "That's right. Hearken to me a moment, and I will tell thee something that may do thee good. I was once a prosperous farmer. I had a good, loving wife, and two fine lads as the sun ever shown on. We had a comfortable home, and lived happily together. But we used to drink ale to make us work. Those two lads now lie in drunkard's graves. My wife died heart-broken, and she now lies by her two sons. I am seventy years of age. Had it not been for drink, I might have been an independent gentleman; but I used to drink to make me work, and, mark it, it makes me work now. At seventy years of age, I am obliged to work for my daily bread. Drink! drink! and it will make you work!"

At a temperance meeting in Philadelphia, P. T. Barnum said: "I will undertake and give bonds for the fulfillment of the contract, that if the city of Philadelphia will stop selling liquor and give me as much as was expended here last year, to run the city next year' I will pay all the city expenses; no person living within her borders shall pay taxes; there shall be no insurance on property; a good dress and suit shall be given to every poor boy, girl, man and woman; all the educational expenses shall be paid; a barrel of flour shall be given to every needy and worthy person, and I will clear a half million or a million dollars myself by the operation! It will be the best business speculation I was ever in. Unfortunately, they wouldn't give it to me. As Benjamin Franklin said, 'We are paying too dear for our whistle.'"

Miscellany.

—It is generally known that among many trades in Europe no work is done on Mondays. Dr. Boyd, preaching on behalf of the hospitals of Devonshire, in Exeter, lately, calculated that the loss to the work people engaged in the woollen manufacturers, the cotton trade and the bricklaying trades alone, by "Idle Monday," amounted to 7,300,000 pounds, about $36,500,000 per annum.

—The official returns of the population of Prussia for 1871, show that the kingdom had, three years ago, 24,639,000 inhabitants. Of these 8,268,000, or one-third, were Roman Catholics, and the bulk of the remainder of the Evangelical State church. Excluding the Jews, who number 325,000, as well as the Roman Catholics, there are not 50,000, formally recognized Nonconformists in Prussia. In the German Empire, of which the total population at the same date was 41,058,000, the proportions are about the same. The Evangelicals are 25,580,000, or 62 per cent. of the whole, as against nearly 65 per cent in Prussia, while the Roman Catholics are 36 per cent. as against 33 per cent. in Prussia. The Dissenters and persons disclaiming any creed were in the Empire a little under 100,000, and the Jews numbered 512,000. Out of the 25 millions of Prussians, a little more than 2,500,000, or ten per cent., were either "illiterates" or only able to read and write "imperfectly." By far the highest proportion of these were the Roman Catholic population.

—Few persons have any idea of the extent of the flouring business at Minneapolis, Minnesota. Twenty years ago there was not a single habitation on the south side of the Mississippi River, where that city now stands, and to-day it has a population of 35,000. Very much of the Spring wheat flour comes from Minnesota, and is ground at one of the seventeen mills of that place. The total capacity of these mills is 7,500 barrels per day. To bring this quantity more exactly within the comprehension, it should be stated that would load, every day, ten trains of ten freight cars each! This is 250,000 barrels per year, enough to load one train of cars reaching from Minneapolis to Pittsburgh. The great "Washburn Mill" there is next to the largest in the world, and has 40 run of stone which will grind about 6,000 bushels a day and requires 200 men to work it. The largest mill in the world, we believe, is in France and is composed of 60 run of stone; but there is now in course of erection at Minneapolis a mill that will exceed in its capacity nearly double, having 104 run of stone.

The Celestial population of San Francisco is about 20,000, packed together in what is called "The Chinese Quarters," comprising about four four squares with numerous courts and alleys. Here they have their shops and display their perpendicular signs in Chinese characters, and live just as they do in their native land. The Chinese quarters is a city in a city—an Asiatic city in the heart of an American one. There are in San Francisco no less than 272 Chinese laundries. Probably there is an average of ten men to a laundry, so that nearly one-sixth of our Chinese population is employed in cleansing our soiled linen. Then there are 42 Chinese cigar factories. There are 130 Chinese groceries, 29 Chinese clothing stores, 22 drug stores, 21 shoe and 11 slipper manufactories, 31 tailor shops, 48 stores of general merchandise, 12 dry-goods stores, 14 jewelry stores, 20 lodging-houses, 2 hotels, 13 physicians, and the same number of butchers, 10 barbers, 6 engravers and carvers, 9 restaurants, 7 tin shops, 5 employment offices, 3 pawnbrokers, 3 bakers, 6 carpenters, 2 umbrella makers, 3 confectioners, 3 money brokers, 1 painter, 1 photographer, 1 opium dealer, etc.

Proceedings of the Indiana State Executive Committee.

Pursuant to a call of the chairman (Wm. Small), the Executive Committee of the Christian association of the State of Indiana, met at the house of Jesse Small, near Marion, Grant Co., Ind., and was called to order by the chairman (all the committee present). On motion Wm. Hall was chosen secretary.

By request, J. T. Kiggins, State lecturer, briefly stated the object of the meeting, after which the following proceedings were had, to-wit: Marion, Grant county, Ind., was selected as the place for holding the next annual meeting of the State Association, to commence on Tuesday evening, October 12th, 1875, at 7 1-2 P. M., and continue over the 13th and 14th. Isaac Elliott, David Hillsamer, Jeremiah Howell, Jacob Ring and A. T. Middleton, were appointed a committee of arrangements; Wm. Hall, J. T. Kiggins and Halleck Floyd were appointed to prepare an address and send to all religious bodies in the State (so far as practicable), who are in sympathy with us, and request their co-operation by sending delegates to the said annual meeting of the association. J. T. Kiggins was authorized to appoint one or more persons wherever practicable to solicit funds for the use and benefit of the State Association and to pay or forward the same to the State Treasurer. Rev's. H. Floyd and J. T. Kiggins were appointed delegates to the meeting of the National Association, to be held at Pittsburg, Pa., June 8th.

Adjourned to meet at Marion, Ind., Wednesday, September 15th, 1875, at 10 o'clock, a. m.

By order of the Com.

Religious Intelligence.

—J. W. Bedford is a traveling preacher connected with the West Virginia M. E. Conference, who, when he applied for an appointment, was told there was no place for him. He asked to be given a circuit that nobody else would take, and thereupon was given one in the mountains. In a year he traveled 2,500 miles on foot, as many miles on horseback, and was the means of instituting revivals wherever he preached, admitting to the church 203 persons on probation, and forty-five to full membership.

—It is reported from Beyrout that upon March 9 a large number of Mohammedans, of both sexes, armed with stones and knives, assembled in a suburd of the town and attacked every Christian they met, and broke the windows of the houses they passed. The mob was so violent that the Christians of the neighborhood shut themselves up in their houses, fearing another massacre similar to that of 1860. It was two hours before the police arrived. They were unable to control the rioters until reenforced by a body of horse and foot soldiers. The commander, finding the country roads to be filled with Mohammedans, stationed soldiers at short distances to prevent any further outbreak. Twelve Christians were found to be badly injured. Six Christians and five Mohammedans were arrested, but no accusation being found against the former, they were released. About the same time as this outbreak the English Consul at Damaseus was attacked by three Mohammedans in broad daylight. The Consul, Mr. Green, ran, pursued bp one of them with a drawn dagger. The spectators rushed into their shops and shut the doors. Finally the man ceased from pursuing him. The assailant was afterward arrested and handed over to the police. The affair produced great excitement in Damaseus. Crowds of Mohammedans came to the Consulate to congratulate Mr. Green on his escape, and to express their horror of the attempted crime.

—A revival in South Foxboro, Mass., began with the conversion of an intemperate man who had been induced to sign the pledge by his little daughter. He immediately began to labor for his companions, and rejoiced in leading a number of them to Christ.

—Pearsall Smith, a Pennsylvania manufacturer and member of the Presbyterian church, has been speaking in Berlin with the aid of an interpreter. A Berlin newspaper says of his work:

"It is hardly too much to say that he has produced so deep an impression on the religious life of the city as will make his name a household word in religious circles for many years to come. In these six days Mr. Smith held twenty-one services; sometimes in private circles before a few score, but generally in public halls and churches, before hundreds and thousands. An aged Geheimrath, who has watched the religious life of the city for decades, declares that with the exception of the meetings of the first Berlin Kirchentag, in 1853, the religious feeling of the city has not been aroused as it has been during Mr. Smith's ministrations.

—Bishop Harris, who has reeently made a missionary tour around the world, observes that every iudication is favorable to the spread of Christianity in Japan. The people themselves are very religious. The bishop traveled by a special pass about seventy miles beyond the precincts allowed to foreigners, and found temples everywhere and none of them were entirely deserted at any time. Some devotees were always to be found in attendance. The Christian religion though formally shown exerts great influence in Japan.

—From Berlin Mr. Smith went to Basel, Zurich, Karlesrube, Stuttgart and other points in Germany and Switzerland, preaching four and five times a day to crowded audiences. Mr. Smith's reeeption on the continent is remarkable from any point of view. That an American lay preacher, hardly heard of in his own country, and unable to speak either French or German, should be able to stir up churches on the Continent through on interpreter and make his words a power among them is not one of the ordinary run of incidents.

—The old Dutch church on Fulton St., New York, the home of the Fulton Street Prayer-Meeting, which has become an historical gathering, so interesting to many a sojourner, the sacred spot where gather the children of God to commune with heaven, has been sold and is being torn down to make way for business houses.

—An unusual number of religious bodies have been assembled within the last fortnight.—The Pastor's Union of the M. E. church composed of members from all parts of the country, has just adjourned at Evanston, Ill. The General Conference of the Methodist church, non-episcopal, met at Princeton, Ill. The Iowa diocesan convention of the Episcopal church meeting in Cedar Rapids has elected Dr. Eccleston of Philadelphia, its bishop. The Presbyterian General Assemblies, North and South, have been meeting in Cleveland and St. Louis with no hope of immediate union. The United Presbyterian General Assembly at Wooster, Ohio, held a successful and harmonious meeting; as also the Reformed Pres. Synod in Coulterville, Ill. The International Y. M. C. A. convention has been held in Richmond, Va.

News of the Week.

General.

Navigation on the lakes opens slowly. It is computed that 500 vessels will be idle at upper lake ports all the summer, as they could only run at a loss under present rates.——About the beginning of the year, Daniel P. Harris, a Custom-house inspector, was tried on a charge of assisting in smuggling 20,000 cigars into New York. He was convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment with hard labor. The President has lately, without consulting the District Attorney, pardoned Harris. It is useless to try to break up the powerful rings known to be conducting smuggling operations at this port if this indiscriminate pardoning of persons having political influence is continued.——About a hundred indictments have been found against C. L. Lawrence for smuggling. He was connected with a gang who have smuggled about $3,000,000 worth of goods into New York, defrauding the government of about $1,000,000.——A terrible explosion occurred last Wednesday in a large drug store in Boston. The building was wholly demolished three persons were killed and 25 wounded. The cause of the accident is unknown.——One of the most terrible disasters in the history of Massachusets occurred last Thursday night, in the burning of the French Catholic church at South Holyoke, during the evening service. The exercises had nearly closed, and a vesper service was being sung, when the draperies on the altar caught fire from a candle, and the wall being low and the flames streaming up, the building was set on fire. The audience numbered about 700 people. In the body of the church the people escaped, but on the stairway leading from the gallery human beings were packed in a dense mass, struggling to reach the floor. As the flames rushed toward them, many leaped to the floor beneath, and were trampled to death. The gallery skirted both sides of the building, with only one entrance from the front. The scene was fearful while it lasted, for the whole was over in twenty minutes. Seventy-one were burned to death, 22 fatally burned, and 27 otherwise burned and wounded.——The Pennsylvania State Republican convention last week endorsed the administration, repudiated third-termism and renominated Gov. Hartranft. Pres. Grant has written a letter in response to the convention disclaiming any wish for a third term.

Foreign.

It is reported from Vienna that seventy-six out of a company of one hundred and thirty-five Roman Catholic pilgrims were drowned while crossing the river Mur in a ferry boat to visit the shrine opposite Judenburg.——Mr. Disraeli has formally announced in Parliament that the British Government had received a satisfactory reply to a note sent to Germany in favor of that Government maintaining friendly relations with France. President McMahon has issued a circular note to the various European powers, stating that France has no inclination to engage in war or even unfriendly correspondence with her neighbors.

Home and Health Hints.

Mutton vs. Pork.

There is a strange prejudice among the people of this country against mutton as an article of food. We are able to account for this state of feeling only upon the assumption that it results from the absence of habit. We all know that taste, to a very large degree, depends upon use; and we know also that pork, in some form, has been the great staple upon the farmer's table; and that mutton has found its way there only occasionally, and often then only of a very inferior quality, and in such condition as to impart a strong, sheepy flavor to the meat.

The sheep and lamb are among the most beautiful, and at the same time, the most cleanly of animals; while all physicians agree in recommending the use of mutton or lamb as among the most healthful of all the animal foods. A large proportion of the tillers of the soil drag out miserable days simply because they persist in eating salt pork, salt hams and shoulders, in spring and summer, when a good dish of mutton would give them new life and strength. Salt meat of every kind, and especially salt pork, is very hard of digestion, and affords a very small amount of nutriment. When eaten by those of weakened digestion, it often becomes an actual injury to the system by disturbing the stomach and preventing the healthful action of the digestive organs.

A pound of good, tender, juicy mutton can be produced for half the cost of the same quantity of fat pork; and one pound of mutton will impart to the system about as much nutriment as two pounds of pork. The Cotswold is a large, fine, mutton-sheep, and would shear from ten to sixteen pounds of wool; the carcass often weighs over 200 pounds at 2 years old, and makes sweet, juicy, nutritious meat. The Southdown, for both mutton and fleece, are fully equal to any other breed. They do not shear quite as heavy a fleece, nor make so heavy a carcass as the Cotswold, but both fleece and carcass are worth more per pound, and are ready for the butcher at any time from 3 months to 5 years of age. The Leicesters are also a very fine, heavy mutton sheep, and put on flesh very fast. When a sheep is butchered, the poorer parts may be used fresh, the better parts slightly salted, like beef, and the hams smoked, which are equal to fine venison. By smoking this portion most families can dispose of the four quarters in an economical manner.

To Bleach Cotton.—A very good way to bleach cotton cloth is to soak in butter milk for a few days. Another way is to make a good suds, put from one to two tablespoonsful of turpentine in it before putting the clothes in. Wash as usual, wringing the clothes from the boil, and drying without rinsing. By using one tablespoonful of turpentine in the first suds on washing days it will save half the labor of rubbing, and the clothes will never become yellow, but will remain a pure white.

Sometimes a taint, almost imperceptible, will be found on the chicken killed yesterday and meant for dinner to-day, or on the last of the steak in the bottom of the jar. If it is a really suspicious taint, real decomposition, throw it away; but, if not, it can be easily removed in boiling. When you put it on to cook, take cold water, into which you have put few lumps of charcoal, tied up in a thin white cloth. After it has boiled awhile take out the charcoal. The meat will be found all right. In cooking corn beef or pork, or a boiled dinner, if the smell annoys you, and you have to keep out of the kitchen, it will be found effectual to put a bit of red pepper in the boiling pot, say twice the size of your thumb-nail.

Farm and Garden.

Seasonable Hints about Fruit and Vegetable Gardening.

The Gardener's Monthly says: If large fruit is wanted, thinning assists. Strawberries are increased in size by watering in a dry time. Fruit trees should be allowed to bear only according to their strength. If a transplanted tree grows freely it may bear a few fruits; but bear in mind growth and great fruitfulness are antagonistic processes.

Handsome forms are desirable in fruit as in ornamental trees. No winter pruning will do this exclusively. It may furnish the skeleton—but it is summer pinching which clothes the bones with beauty. A strong shoot soon draws all its nutrition to itself. Never allow one shoot to grow that wants to get bigger than others. Equality must be insisted on. Pinch out always as soon as they appear such as would push too strongly ahead, and keep doing so till the new buds seem no stronger than the others. Thus the food gets equally distributed.

When the strawberry crop is about to ripen, mulch with clean straw, to prevent rain soiling the fruit. Short grass from the lawn is often used; but it mildews as it decays and detracts from the flavor of the fruit. Hot suns increase flavor, and strawberry tiles were once in fashion to put around the hill, which by absorbing heat, added greatly to the fruit's rich quality. All that we have said of strawberries supposes them to be fruited on the hill system, with the runners kept off. Those who desire the best results will grow them no other way, but many grow them very successfully in beds, believing that though they may not have as many large fruits, they may have a greater weight in proportion to the labor bestowed.

Blackberries and raspberries set out in spring may kill themselves by overbearing. It is pardonable to wish for some fruit the first year. If the tree seems to be growing freely, some fruit may be left. Cut out black-knot, or any symptom of disease that may appear, as they appear.

Cabbage, cauliflower and broccoli are now set out fall crops and endive sown for winter salad. Lettuce also for summer and fall use. This, however, must be sown in very rich soil, and in a partially shaded situation, or it will go to seed. Peas, beans and other crops, should be sowed every two weeks. They do much better than when a large crop is sown at one time, and then have too many on at one time to waste.

Melons, cucumbers, corn, okra, squash, beans, sweet potatoes, lima beans, pepper, egg-plants, tomatoes, and other tender vegetables that do not do well till the sun gets high, and the ground warm, should go into the soil without delay.

Bean poles should be set before the beans are planted. Mr. Penniman of Michigan, uses no poles, but cuts off the runners as they appear, and the plant bears abundantly as a bush. Tomatoes do well tied to poles. In sowing seeds it is well to remember that, though the soil should be deep and finely pulverized, a loose condition is unfavorable to good growth. After the seeds are sown, a heavy rolling would be of great advantage. The farmer knows this and we have often wondered that the practice never extended to garden work.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Price. $1.35.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages just issned by him, pnrporting to give a full and accnrate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abdnction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no donbt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y.,, and a membcr of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

HAVE YOU AN ASSORTMENT OF ANTI-MASONIC BOOKS?

We have occasionally, on visiting friends opposed to secret societies, been disappointed in finding no Anti-masonic literature in their libraries or on their tables. These persons are candid and earnest in their desire to promote the Anti-masonic reform. Still they neglect one of the simplest and most effective means of promoting it. They have not, perhaps they say, time to read. They forget that they may have; and when the hour or half day comes in which they might read, it will be occupied in some other way if this literature is not within their reach. The time to protect one's roof against leaks is in dry weather. We feel that the great necessity of this reform is not so much the enlightenment of the careless as of the friends. "I was always opposed to secrecy" many say, but can give no forcible reasons for such opposition, to intelligent questioners.

Then some seem to forget the salutary influence such publications will have upon guests and members of their families. An intelligent woman who was much occupied with family cares, said to me, "I do not have time to read much, but when the paper is lying around I absorb a good deal." This is very true of mothers and daughters while sons are pretty sure to read sooner or later. Some of these books and pamphlets make a profound impression even on the little ones. Our attention was one day attracted by our precious little two-year old, who in her search for new pictures among our books, had found the wood cuts in Morgan's Exposition of Freemasonry, and was saying "Shame, shame," in a very positive, indignant manner. She was looking at the pictures of the candidates in preparing for initiation, and immed ately called on us for an explanation of them; and we think a lasting impression of the evils of Masonry was made upon that young mind. Much greater would be the impression made upon the more mature minds in a family. No man, we hope, would be so contracted and selfish as to ignore the welfare of all in his family except that of himself in purchasing literature. Reading they will have and if parents do not provide such as will be beneficial, with less judgment and knowledge the children select for themselves. We wish that there was no private or public library in the country unsupplied with Bernards' Light on Masonry, Phelps on Secret Societies, The Broken Seal, and other books which may be found on our list.

Have you a good assortment of Anti-masonic books? If not will you not improve your earliest opportunity for supplying yourself with them.

"From a Commenwealth to a Kingdom" is the title of an article that Rev. Leonard Bacon, contributes to The National Sunday School Teacher for June. It touches upon that transitional period of Jewish history just now being studied in the Sunday-school, when the Israelites were passing a theocracy to a monarchy. Rev. W. A. Bartlett writes upon "Saul," and Dr. Patton upon "The Prophet Samuel." The Editorial Miscellany and the various departments of "Sunday School Gleanings," "Sunday School Work," and "Teacher's Meeting" are filled with matters of interest to teachers. TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

CLUB RATES, INCLUDING POSTAGE.

Twenty subscriptions for six months count the same as ten for a year.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

C&N-W LINES

This great corporation now owns and operates over two thousand miles of road. With one branch it reaches Racine, Kenosha, Milwaukee, and the country north thereof; with another line it pushes through Janesville, Watertown, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Escanaba, to Negaunee and Marquette; with another line it passes through Madison, Elroy, and for St. Paul and Minneapolis; branching westward from Elroy, it runs to and through Winona, Owatonna, St. Peter, Mankato, New Ulm, and stops not until Lake Kampeska, Dakota, is reached; another line starts from Chicago, and runs through Elgin and Rockford, to Freeport, and, via the Illinois Central, reaches Warren, Galena and Dubuque, and the country beyond. Still another line runs almost due westward from Chicago, and passes through Dixon, Sterling, Fulton, Clinton (Iowa), Cedar Rapids, Marshaltown, Grand Junction, Missouri Valley Junction, to Council Bluffs and Omaha. This last-named is the "GREAT TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE," and the pioneer overland line for NEBRASKA, COLORADO, UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA.

CALIFORNIA and the PACIFIC COAST.

It runs through the Garden of Illinois and Iowa, and is the best, safest, shortest and quickest route for OMAHA, LINCOLN, and other points in NEBRASKA; and for CHEYENNE, DENVER, SALT LAKE CITY, VIRGINIA CITY, CARSON, SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, and all other points west of the Missouri River.

If you want to go to Milwaukee, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, De Pere, Ripon, Baraboo, Eau Claire, Hudson, Stillwater, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Breckenridge, Morehead, Fort Garry, Winona, Plattville, Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Sioux City, Yankton, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, or a hundred other northren, north-western or western points, this line is the one you should take. The track is of the best steel rail, and all the appointments are first-class in every respect. The trains are made up of elegant new Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Coaches, luxurious Day Coaches, and pleasant lounging and smoking-cars. The cars are all equipped with the celebrated Miller Safety Platform, and patent Buffers and Couplings, Westinghouse Safety Air Brakes, and every other appliance that has been devised for the safety of passenger trains. All trains are run by telegraph. In a word, this GREAT LINE has the best and smoothest track, and the most elegant and comfortable equipment of any road in the West, and has no competitor in the country. It is eminently the favorite route with Chicagoans traveling west, north, or northwest, and is acknowledged by the traveling public to be the popular line for all points in Northren Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Dakota, Western Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California and the Pacific Slope.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway leave Chicago as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, Four through trains daily, Pullman cars on night trains.

For Winona and points in Minnesota, One through train daily.

For Dubuque, via Freeport, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Dubuque and La Crosse, via Clinton, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Sioux City and Yankton, Two trains daily. Pullman Cars to Missouri Valley Junction.

For Lake Geneva, Four trains daily.

For Rockford, Sterling, Kenosha, Janesville, and other points, you can have from two to ten trains daily.

Cardinal McCloskey's Oath.

Below will be found what purports to be a true copy of the oath which the new "American" Cardinal must have taken at his installation. It is taken from the text of the copy furnished Lord Palmerston in 1850, by the British minister at Turin.

I,——Cardinal of the Holy Roman Church, do promise and swear that, from this time to my life's end, I will be faithful and obedient unto St. Peter, the Holy Apostolic Roman Church, and our most Holy Lord, the Pope, and his successors, canonically and lawfully elected; that I will give no advice, consent or assistance against the Pontifical Majesty and person; that I will never knowingly and advisedly, to their injury or disgrace, make public the counsels intrusted to me by themselves, or by any messenger or letters (from them;) also, that I will give them any assistance in retaining, defending and recovering the Roman Papacy and the regalia of Peter all my might and endeavor, so far as the rights and privileges of my order will allow it, and will defend against all their honor and state; that I will direct and defend, with due form and honor, the legates and nuncios of the Apostolic See, in the territories, churches, monasteries, and other beneficies committed to my keeping; that I will cordially co-operate with them, and treat them with honor in their coming, abiding and returning, and that I will resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who shall attempt anything against them; that I will by every way and by every means strive to preserve, augment and advance the rights, honors, privileges, the authority of the Holy Roman Bishop our Lord the Pope, and his before-mentioned successors; and that at whatever time anything shall be decided to their prejudice, which it is out of my power to hinder, as soon as I shall know that any steps or measures have been taken (in the matter,) I will make it known to the same our Lord or his before-mentioned successors; or to some other person by whose means it may be brought to their knowledge. That I will keep and carry out, and cause others to keep and carry out, the rules of the Holy Father, the decrees, ordinances, dispensations, reservations, provisions, and apostolic mandates and constitutions of the Holy Pontiff Sixtus of happy memory, as to visiting the threshold of the apostles at certain prescribed times, according to the tenor of that which I have just read through. That I will seek out and oppose [persecute and fight against. Latin—omni conatu persecuturum et impugnaturum] heretics, schismatics, against the same our Lord the Pope and his before-mentioned successors with every possible effort.

The remainder of the oath provides in detail not to sell or give away or otherwise alienate, any church property without due authority: to maintain the "constitution of the blessed Pius," of 1567; and the declarations of his successors, particularly those of Innocent IX, 1591, and those of Clement VIII, 1592. It also engages to maintain the Papal claims to various Italian cities, and closes with the words: "I will not seek absolution from any of the foregoing articles, but reject it if it should be offered me, (or in no way accept it if offered,) so help me God and these most holy gospels."

Thus it appears that if Mr. McCloskey does not begin a crusade against American heretics it will be because he breaks his oath, or thinks it not yet time to begin. It will be a difficult task, also, for the priests and press of the Romish church to explain how such complete subjugation to a foreign potentate can be reconciled to honest allegiance to our National and State constitutions. They will not undertake it; for it cannot be done, except as the lodge does, by wholesale denial. On this point the Independent remarks:

"It is well known that Pius IX. has never acquiesced in the annexation of the former States of the Church to the Kingdom of Italy, that he still claims to be their temporal sovereign, and that he has placed Victor Emmanuel under the ban of excommunication for having deprived him of his temporalities. Papacy in the person of the Pope has not relinquished a single one of its pretentions to the civil power. What has been lost in this respect has been lost against its consent, and with no other concurrence than that which necessity has forced. The Pope still insists that he is by right a temporal sovereign; and the cardinalate is theoretically a secular as well as a religious office, and in both respects it acknowledges the duty of absolute allegiance to the supreme and infallible authority of the Roman Pontiff.

In this view of the question we are not a little at a loss to see how Cardinal McCloskey can reconcile his official oath as a cardinal with his duties and obligations as a citizen under the Constitution of the United States and of the State in which he resides. If the Pope should attempt to recover his so-called possessions from the King of Italy, if filibustering expeditions were organized in this country to aid his Pontificial Majesty in the effort, and if the President, as it would be his duty to do, should issue his proclamation forbidding all such organizations, what would Cardinal McCloskey do in such a contingency? Would he merge the citizen in the cardinal, and thus keep his faith with the Pope; or the cardinal in the citizen, and obey the executive authority of the United States? Would this Eminence 'resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who' should by force dispute the civil authority of 'our Most Holy Lord, the Pope?' How about seeking out and opposing, persecuting, and fighting agninst heretics and schismatics against 'our Lord the Pope?'

The Dark Veil.

BY L. C. KOCHLER.

The secret societies hide the workings of their respective lodges under a dark veil, which those not belonging to them are not allowed to lift. But still, dark and thick as the veil is, it is now full of holes and dark works and profane language inside of it have become known to the world. It could not be helped by the guardian, that the blasphemous oaths were spoken too loud and sounded to the ears of the public. The loudly praised order was at once revealed as dangerous to mankind. God let his people know, and clearly see that the devil was trying to show himself as an angel of light, but was detected as the "Prince of darkness and lies."

God in his grace, pitied his people that so many came under the ban of sin by these dangerous, secret-society tricks and therefore God, of pure love showed us that there is falsehood growing in these lodges. Falsehood in the secret societies is the warning sentence; whatever fine name they may have as their sign to attract others. What a great contrast to the Gospel! Must not all Christians mourn, that such societies proclaim to have their lodge law built on the basis of God's law when it is clearly to be seen, that it is contrary to that law? Where the Bible forbids swearing, they swear; where it forbids murder, they swear to cut throats, take out hearts, etc.; where it forbids lying, the laws of secret societies compell its members to lie boldly. Is it not clearly to be seen here, that they are all partners of the devil? And does not the Bible state that the devil was a liar from the beginning?

If you are, or wish to be, a true patriot and work for the benefit and for the welfare of your fellow citizens, you are opposed by members of secret societies, for they alone wish to be the govenors as they alone are the wise men and partisans and you are a plebian, a fool, and not fit to have an office. Just so, it stands with secret societies. Do you not think therefore it is time to work? I know you think so; but do you get yourself ready to work in earnest? If so, you will do much good to your fellow men and your country and for the church.

I know there are many, who would feel happier never to have joined a secret society, but still they are afraid to secede. Why afraid? Because the despotic, barbaric law under which they swore themselves entirely (as they think,) by blasphemous oaths. But be not afraid, my friend, there is a stronger, better and more faithful guardian around you, who will protect and guard you in making divergent steps from the secret societies; who is Jesus, your best and —hear well!—your Saviour. You are not bound at all by the ties of devilish slavery of any secret society, as Jesus loosened all the ties and became the conquerer of death, sin and the devil, and if you sinned in joining such societies, go to Jesus at once, he is the forgiver of all sins and does not wish that one man's soul shall perish. Step forward, you members of secret societies and go out of the dark hole near the precipice of hell and become true members of Christ's church where nothing is kept nor spoken in secret, and where the young, middle-aged and old, the sick and the cripple, the poor and the rich are allowed to enjoy the same rights and blessings. Neither the great order of Freemasonry, nor Odd-fellows, nor Good Templars, nor grangers, nor Carbonari, nor Jesuits, can afford to lead you to such a place of blessings and make your hearts so happy as Jesus will and can do. Therefore accept the precious offer of your Saviour, the treasure of earthly and heavenly happiness and you will be rewarded with a crown of the King of heaven and earth.

One who studies the Bible much, with a prayerfull, humble mind, will not be apt to go wrong in matters generally. It is not what the church "will let you do," but what Jesus Christ sanctions, that must be your guide. Sunday school teachers and others should remember this advice.

A Proclamation of Decoration Day.

Ex-Lieutenant Governor, and ex-volunteer General Thomas, ex-Democrat of Vermont, a man very respectable for his general services and character, recently issued a proclamation, the object of which is to "show ourselves [the Grand Army of the Republic, so called] worthy citizens of our country saved by their [the dead soldiers'] valor, and seek to instil into our hearts, and the hearts of all, especially of the young, the inspiring lessons of fortitude, patriotism and devotion; at the same time forgetting all animosities and sectional feeling, that our entire nation may be of one heart and one mind, seeking only the common good." Brave, good words, surely.

But the state of the case is this: The loyal men, women and children of the nation rally to defend the common national homestead against a desperate set of burglars. After the fight, a part, a small part of the male defenders of the homestead, leaving out the women entirely, organize themselves into a secret society; term themselves the "Grand Army of the Republic;" appoint grand commanders and officers without the vote or sanction of the Legislature or the people, and proceed to institute "public services" in honor of the defenders who fell in the strife, and to teach the nation how, in what manner, the fallen are to be honored, teaching the young, especially, lessons of fortitude, patriotism, devotion, etc. That is, a small part, and generally the poorer part too, of the defenders of the national homestead make themselves a secret society, a thing of intense selfishness, ostentation, demonstration, self-laudation and sham, for the purpose of giving instruction in the virtues of patriotism; and in this instruction they seek to confound all distinctions, by bestowing their "honors," so called, on the defenders and burglars alike, thus making no difference between loyalty and treason. They seek to make "the entire nation of one heart and one mind" by destroying and confounding all moral and legal distinctions!

This is characteristic of secret societies, always. They seek to take the kingdom of Heaven by violence, and manage its affairs by neutralizing its living principles through the craft and cunning of an ingeniously devised combination or Ring. By making burglary equal with rightful possession; treason with loyalty; rebels with patriots, they pretend to be seeking unity and peace, and security for "the common good.' Is it true that by their ostentatious display, these secret society men are seeking "only the common good," or are they not merely making a self-advertisement of show over the dead for the purpose only of their own good? What honor to the dead is there in such demonstrations of political speech-making and insinuation as they exhibit? Had not this secret society better leave it to the American people to decide what honors shall be paid to their dead?

This new disguise of Masonry and Jesuitism, this "Grand Army of the Republic," is, like all other secret societies, totally unnecessary for paying honors to the dead, or for inculcating patriotic virtues, or for any other useful purpose. The country does not need its officious "services," to be taught how to honor their dead; and least of all does it need to be taught that the best way to inculcate patriotism, peace and unity is to honor traitors.

So long as ex-Lieutenant Governor, ex-volunteer General, ex-Democrat Thomas might leave his teachings of patriotic duty to his own personal example, we would willingly give him our full tribute of honor and respect; but as the tool, grand commander, or what not, of a secret society, we must regard him as imposing a great injury rather than a benefit upon the youth of the country, and teaching them lessons which they must utterly set at naught if they wish properly to honor the dead and themselves. Let rebels, if they will, engage in the public work of scattering May flowers upon their dead; but let us loyalists honor our dead by striving to live up to the personal example which they have set us of self-sacrifice and devotion to the country and the principles on which its institutions are founded.

The memories of our worthy dead is wholly desecrated by being seized upon for the uses of a secret society; as much so as our government itself has been formerly desecrated by being perverted to the interests of the slave-power; and that day therefore called "Decoration Day," which some States noted for their Democracy and their Masonry have enacted into a holiday, and which is made use of to decorate the characters of living politicians rather than the memory of dead patriots, had better be called "Desecration Day," when spoken of outside of the lodge. For this is the real character of this new Masonic institution: it desecrates the memory of the dead by hollow artificial observances directed by the word of command, and by seeking, hyena-like, to batten and make itself fat upon the sacred remnants of the grave.

One word in behalf of General Thomas—he is undoubtedly honest and has no idea that by giving countenance to secret societies, he is making of himself and his State merely one of the cog-wheels in the great machinery of Jesuitism, and that he is thus helping to destroy that Puritanical character of the State, upon which its own glory, and that of its dead, entirely depends.

F. H. C.

One of our exchanges is not sharp. It fails to see a difference where an editor ought to see it. One Methodist minister was deposed for stealing water melons, and another was not deposed for being chaplain in a Masonic lodge. There is a reason in things. The difference is plain. One of them violated a moral law which heathens also recognize. The other only violated the Christian faith, about which heathens care nothing. That is another thing. Stealing water melons is an offense which entails loss of reputation. Being priest in an anti-Christian association may even bring honor and profit. The former is a very small thing in itself compared with the latter, but when popularity is taken into consideration the case becomes entirely different. Stealing melons subjects a minister to disgrace: denying Christ does not, especially if he can make long prayers and feel glorious. That's the difference. If teaching the religion of nature in opposition to the religion of grace rendered a preacher unpopular, Methodists would probably deal as summarily with him as with a melon thief.—Lutheran Standard.

Observations and Experiences of Secret Society Principles and Men in the Evangelical Association.

BY REV. H. W. HAMPE.

In May, 1851, at the Ohio conference, held at West Salem, Wayne county, as the recommendations were under consideration, Rev. Henry Longbrake one of the presiding elders, introduced a recommendation to General Conference for a church law against secret societies. In giving his reasons for introducing it, he said that such societies were sinful in their nature, and demoralizing in their influence, both in church and state; that the church should, as a witness for Christ against sin, have a law against those societies as well as against the sin of human slavery and other popular evils of the day. An animated discussion took place. One was of the opinion that it was of no use for the church to have such a rule; that such societies had lost their hold upon the people in church and state by the Morgan affair, hence there was no danger from them. Another said that the time was too short, as the General Conference would meet in the fall and the eastern conferences had already been in session, and therefore this could not get the required majority to come before that body in the fall of that year.

To this, it was replied by the mover that there was danger, as those societies were multiplying throughout the land, that the churches were in danger of being demoralized by them; that spiritual life could not prosper where such societies were prevalent, and in regard to the action of General Conference, that body could take it up and recommend it back to the annual conferences, if it would introduce such a rule. Bishop J. Long being in the chair, took a rising vote; all but three members of conference voted for the recommendation; it passed by quite a majority through the western conference; at General Conference the committee on recommendations, reported it among the lost recommendations, not having the required constitutional majority to come before that body.

Let me here state that Bro. H. Longbrake was a man of strong character, firm convictions, a strong Anti-mason, and a powerful preacher, both in German and English, and worked hard for the extension of Christ's kingdom. The writer was well acquainted with him as he was presiding elder of the district and lived on the circuit where I traveled the first year of my itinerant life. A few years afterwards Brother Longbrake was called home by the Master and is resting from his labors.

The circuit to which I was appointed that year became a part of the territory assigned that fall to the Pittsburgh conference, which was then formed. I became a member of that body. For some years after this nothing happened to draw attention to this subject, the slavery question drawing away the mind of the nation and absorbing all the attention outside of church matters. I think it was in the year 1852 that a cornerstone was laid by the Masons at Tamaqua in eastern Pennsylvania, for a church of the Evangelical Association. Bishop Long sent a well-seasoned and salted article to the Botschafter at the time against the affair, which caused quite a stir among the brotherhood, especially in the East. The presiding elder of that district was said to be a high Mason; who afterward attacked one of the tenets of the church, which at last called forth a firm and severe, though just article from Bishop Long in the Botschafter against him, which resulted in such actions by that man against the superintendents of the church which only a Masonic spirit is capable of performing; this caused quite a stir in the church at the time, to which I may incidentally refer hereafter.

In 1864 the writer located on account of bodily infirmities, and moved on to a farm, where I rested for three years from itinerant labors, till my health was restored.

In my next article I shall state some of the causes which led me to protest against the influence of secret society principles and men, in the Pittsburgh conference.

The African Purrow.

Rev. D. K. Flickinger, editor of the Missionary Visitor, now with the African missions of the United Brethren church, writes to his paper an interesting account of this savage secret order:

The readers of the Visitor will remember that our missionaries in Africa occasionally speak of the Purrow society, in their published letters. Rev. B. Root, who is a native of Sherbro, and a passenger on our steamer, and who is returning to his native land as a missionary, after spending eleven years in America, receiving an education, gave me the following facts respecting this society: It is a secret society, exerting a wonderful influence over the civil and religious institutions of that country. The three particular things it teaches are, resolution, reticence and endurance; and it is composed mostly of freemen (of late some slaves have been admitted), and the better or smarter members of society. The chiefs are generally Purrowmen, and the society controls them and indicates the policy they must pursue in most matters of importance. Certain families are compelled to become Purrow "societyites," that is, the male members, as women are never admitted. Boys are initiated at quite a tender age, and then, again, when they can understand the obligations of the society. There are but three degrees, two of which are not regarded as very important, but the third is all-important and binding. When the Purrow decides a matter, it is as though the Supreme Court did so in our country. It is the highest authority known; and woe to the man who goes contrary to its requirements, unless he has power to prevent the penalty which it imposes being inflicted.

This society impresses the uninitiated and lower classes with a fear which is remarkable. This makes them easy victims to any oppression or injustice which it may impose upon them. Mr. Root says it often conserves the peace and purity of society and especially of its own members. There are times when to use an impure word is a punishable offense, and those who do it are made to feel the power of the Purrow.

The large Caulker family, from which all the great chiefs of the Sherbro country came during the present century—and many of whom were men of considerable ability, superior to the present ones,—were Purrowmen. Mr. Root thinks this society is of great antiquity, coming to the west coast of Africa from Egypt. That it puts out of the way by assassination,—sometimes by a party of men going and murdering outright, or by administering poison through persons who are regarded as fast friends of the party to be deposed, but who have been bribed by agents of the Purrow,—objectionable chiefs and head-men, there is no doubt. It is, in short, a powerful organization, and one which, like slavery and polygamy, will require time to destroy. At Shengay its power has been seen more than once by our missionaries. It stole one of our first converts, and carried him away and concealed him, at two different times, and the last time, by force, made him a Purrowman, and put him through a severe drill. He finally saw a way of escape, and left the Purrow-ground, a dense thicket, and came back to the mission, where he was at last accounts.

Some may remember that during my first stay in Africa, and soon after I got there, the Purrow brought me to account for having interfered with some things belonging to it. I wandered into a forbidden place, and took into my hands an object which no uninitiated fingers were allowed to touch; and I was reported to head-quarters by a boy. But for an old missionary, who was my attorney, it would have given me much trouble and cost me considerable money. As it was, it required several hours of palaver, considerable pleading, and a little money, to fix up the matter.

"Strength of character consists of two things: power of will and power of self-restraint. It requires two things, therefore, for its existence—strong feelings and a strong command over them. Now, we very often mistake strong feelings for strong character. A man who bears all before him, before whose wild bursts of fury the children of the household quake, because he has his own way in all things, we call him a strong man. The truth is, he is a weak man; it is his passions that are strong; he, mastered by them, is weak.

You must measure the strength of a man by the power of the feelings he subdues, not by the power of those that subdue him. And hence composure is often the highest result of strength. Did we ever see a man receive a flagrant injury and reply calmly; that man is morally strong. Or did we ever see a man in anguish stand as if carved out of solid rock, mastering himself? Or one bearing a hopeless daily trial remain silent, and never tell the world what cankered his home peace? This is strength. He who, with strong passions, remains chaste; he who, indignation within him, can be provoked and yet remain himself, and forgive these, are strong men, the moral heroes.

Secret Organizations.

Secrecy and treachery are the bane of society, the overthrow of churches, and the downfall of nations. They wear a slimy, snakish appearance; and hence a secret organization cannot exist without affording at least a pretext for evil surmising; while we are exhorted, by the great apostle, to abstain from all appearance of evil.

It is admitted that our American institutions and official positions are greatly controlled by such organizations, by which the wheels of government are retarded, and even the churches are trampled in their influence for good.

It is evident that all secret organizations partake, more or less, of the nature and character of a conspiracy, and are, to some extent, tinctured with the spirit of Judaism; for all are grasping for government power, and claiming supreme allegiance, and have somewhat similar modes of operation, though ranging from treasonable associations down to the grangers; the latter being, perhaps, among the mildest forms of these dark associations. Claiming to be oppressed, they take the world's plan of trying to beat their oppressors at their own game, in place of overcoming evil with good. Although the object may be a good one, the end does not justify the means; even as in taking carnal weapons to defend a good cause.

The early promoters of Christianity had the fiercest opposition to meet in attaining their great end, in the midst of a wicked and gainsaying world; yet the openness of their work was their great boast. "The king knoweth of these things," said Paul, "before whom also I spake freely; for I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him, for these things were not done in a corner."

Our Saviour expressly declares "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue, and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort; and in secret have I said nothing." Nowhere do we find an apostolic example of secrecy (Judas being accepted). Hence all secret organizations are without Gospel foundation; yet they, like slavery, claim Scripture justification; mostly resorting to the history of Judah's rebellious kingdom for a pretext, where we read of covenants, leagues and conspiracies, derisions, strifes and contentions, which finally result in the downfall of their church and the overthrow of their nation.

The churches and nations can not be too cautious of following their fearful and disastrous example. Several religious denominations are already firmly opposing these secret bodies in their unchristian mode of operation.

Will not the Society of Friends, which has been first in the anti-slavery reform, come up valiantly to the help of the Lord against the mighty in this direction?—Christian Worker (Friend.)

Secular Education.

To some minds, however, all these difficulties are settled by the magic of a word. It is the term secular. They use it as though it were a boundary line as distinct as the Ohio. It is a notable example of the way in which men cheat themselves by a word. Attempt to define secular education,—what it embraces, what it excludes, and we shall find that hardly a step has been taken in the solution of the difficult problem. Secular (seculum,) belonging to the age or world in which we live. But we live in two worlds at the same time. It is this duality, and the spiritual conflict arising from it, which distinguishes us from the animal. God has given it to us,—this double being, and what he has joined together man may greatly derange, greatly mar, but cannot put asunder. We live in two worlds, we say, the near world, the world of sense, and the great seculum seculorum by which the first is ever encompassed and pervaded. We breathe the atmosphere of both, and there is nothing belonging solely to the one regarded as wholly separate from the other.

But take the word secular in its lowest sense: we do not thereby escape the difficulty of the rule that requires the exclusion of all controverted ideas. Men differ much about things secular. Political philosophy should be taught in our schools. So all say. Our children should be instructed as to the nature of our political institutions. But men differ in politics. My hearers will understand me as referring not to any mere momentary questions of party-platforms, but to principles deemed fundamental in government, such as those before referred to. There may be those among us who do not believe in republicanism. Shall they be allowed their veto on school books that represent the general national character in this respect?—or shall they be told that there is something predominant here, and that such predominance must be respected in the national education? Holding republicanism to be right, we do rightly and wisely in giving our children a bias toward it in early life. We will not listen to pretentious free-thinking, which demands that the young mind should be kept open in this respect. The few monarchists or the few communists among us must put up with it. A predominant national character is a most conservative element of nationality, and this is not to be sacrificed to their abstract right of opinion. The true inference, as it bears upon the other and still greater question, is most obvious. We have a few atheists among us; there are some who believe only in Nature; they are to be treated with all tolerance, but our long inherited Christianity is not to be driven from our schools and colleges on the ground that, in any honor shown to it, there is a favoring of opinions which they do not hold. It is in possession; it must be proved false before it can be summarily ousted in this manner. The parallel is unanswerable. To say the least, we are no more a republican than we are a Christian nation. Long may both these aspects be preserved.

So also do men differ in aesthetics, in art, in philosophy, in literature; various opinions are held in respect to political economy. Not a shadow of a reason can be given why the principle involved, and the veto claimed, have not an equal application to disagreements in these matters as well as to the tabooed question of morals and religion.—Prof. Taylor Lewis.

A Voice from the Last Century.

Hon. Samuel Dexter, an eminent lawyer, in the year 1798, long before any direct exposure of secret orders had been made public, gave, in the Boston Mercury and Palladium, the following forcible statement of the substance of Masonry:

"The world knows that Masons have most windy titles, such as 'worshipful,' etc., etc. It is known that their vanity prompts them to walk in formal processions, covered with trinkets that a well-in-formed savage would blush to wear. It is known that with all these trinkets and symbols they follow the remains of a brother, looking as wise as the bird of wisdom, which no doubt greatly comforts the ghost of the departed. Strange society that blazons its follies to the world but burys its virtues in midnight darkness. But, sir, you have no secrets, but mere ceremonies. I say this on the testimony of the most respectable men who are Masons. And can ceremonies save the institution from the charge of frivolity? Can you, by accumulating more baubles and more follies in secret, excuse yourselves for the gewgaws and trumpery which are seen? And yet it is precisely these baubles, gewgaws, ceremonies and trinkets which make up the sum total of all the human substitutes for the true religion which have, in all ages, darkened the intelligence, confused the conscience, corrupted the character, and destroyed the liberties of men. And if these ceremonies are not a religion, then popery is not a religion and paganism is not a religion."

"There is no greater mistake," says an eminent divine "than to suppose that Christisns can impress the world by agreeing with it. No, it is no conformity that we want; it is not being able to beat the world in its own way; but it is to stand apart from and above it and to produce the impression of a holy and a separable life; this only can give us a true Christian power."

Defense of Masonry.

Abstract of a lecture delivered in the CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH at COLCHESTER, CONN., Tuesday evening, May 18th, 1875., by Rev. Edgar F. Clark, pastor of the M. E. Church, in PROVINCETOWN, MASSACHUSETTS.

To any honest enquirer who desires "more light" concerning the coveted boon of Masonry, I am willing to satisfy him so far as I can consistently, just as I am always ready to answer questions to any sincere enquirer, who wishes to know the doctrines and principles of the Methodist church.

I am not, however, an authorized exponent of Masonry, and no one but myself is responsible for my utterances. But when the Masonic order is greatly misrepresented as I am told it has recently been in this place, I shall gladly defend it.

A brief historical notice of Masonry may interest you. There are many Masons who are not posted concerning Masonry, just as there are many Christians who know but little concerning the history of their denominations. We cannot trace Masonry back to Paradise, as some foolishly assert (making a lodge with Adam for Grand Master). Any man who thinks that a Masonic lodge existed in the days of Cain and Abel, is a fit candidate for an insane asylum. Neither is there any more reason for crediting Noah with being a Mason than there would be for claiming the same honor for the angel Gabriel. And those who trace anything like the present order back to the days of King Solomon and Hiram merit our pity.

The fact is, modern Freemasonry is of recent origin, and was unknown to either Solomon or Hiram. Prior to A. D. 1717, legitimate free masonry was simply a trade union. The operative masons banded together as do our co-operative associations, and formed a society for their mutual protection and interests, just as the ship carpenters and others of our country do to-day. The masons of those days had an initiation ceremony, but there is no reason to suppose that it was like ours.

The Egyptian priesthood was the museum of art and science, and none could enter it except by initiation. Architects also formed an association which had an initiation ceremony. Among the Romans, long before the days of Christ, masons organized fraternities to which working masons only were initiated, and those by special religious services. These working masons received many special favors from the Romish Emperors. After the days of Christ, about A. D. 906, the King of England summoned all the masons of his kingdom together and granted them great privileges because he considered that the art of masonry was a great benefit to the country. Among other things, he declared them free from all taxes. It is probable that Masonry became a secret institution about this time, and that its object was to prevent the King from being defrauded of his revenue, as well as to keep out all spurious Masons from the benefits of the order.

In the eleventh and twelfth centuries, the Popes specially favored the masons, who built beautiful cathedrals. The Christian coloring of Masonry was probably received about that time. About the eighth century it was decided that none but FREE MEN should become masons, and then the title "Freemasonry" was given to what was before simply "masonry." Up to the eighth century, none but masons were admitted; but about that time Architects were granted the privilege of joining, and also builders, so that masons, architects, and carpenters, became "accepted" and then the title "free and accepted masons" was assumed.

In 1717, the doors were opened to all professions. Up to this time, the initiation ceremony was nothing like that of to-day. It was a religious service, far different from the present Masonic ceremonies. In A. D. 1723, the first printed pamphlet concerning Freemasonry appeared. It is not true that Voltaire founded the Masonic order as it is to-day. It was organized in England, and not in France, where Voltaire lived. By A. D. 1725, lodges existed in about every civilized country. Before 1717, Masons were actual laborers, but since that time we only use the symbols of Masonry. The white apron is the emblem of innocence. (The speaker then explained the meaning of the gavel, and compass, just as appears in Anti-masonic documents.) There is scarcely a moral virtue which is not taught by Masonry, and its teachings would do honor to the sanctuary of the Most High. It is a great moral teacher exerting a powerful and happy influence for social reform.

Religion and Masonry I am willing to explain to honest enquirers, but not to bigots. All good things have encountered opposition. Some say "those who have been Masons should be believed." Can you find any more bitter and unscrupulous opponents of the Christian church than those who have been expelled from it? Or are there any greater slanderers of the church than those who were once members but have voluntarily withdrawn from it? You would not give much credit to such former church members concerning that institution, and why should you give more credit to those who have either been expelled from or withdrawn from Masonry?

Hundreds of Masons have been expelled for immorality, and I am not sure but the lodges are as thorough in disciplining members for the crime of immorality as are the churches. Some have recently been expelled from the lodge in this town for that very offense.

Every Mason is taught to practice charity toward all mankind. But it is charged that Masons have a special regard for each other, and this is true, just as a parent has special regard for his own family; just as a Baptist has a special regard for all Baptists; Methodists for all Methodists; Protestants for all Protestants; Americans for all Americans; members of the Connecticut Anti-masonic society for all Anti-masons. It fosters a special regard and kindness towards members of the order, just as church members covenant to aid and protect each other.

But they say that the oaths of a Mason require him to protect a guilty brother; that it is a disloyal institution. And this in the face of the fact that Washington was the first Grand Master in America, and an enthusiastic Mason all of his life, and, if I mistake not, a Grand Master at the time of his death, though I am not sure of that. Nearly all of the American Generals of the Revolutionary army were Masons. (The speaker asserted that, so far as being disloyal it is the opposite, and teaches loyalty.)

Our oaths are greatly traduced. Any oath is terrible if any one violates it. According to Dr. Wayland's moral science, the ordinary citizen's oath invokes the wrath of the Almighty if the witness commits perjury. Certainly there is no greater punishment than this assumed in any Masonic oath. Why make fish of one and fowl of the other? A Mason takes no oath which does not belong to what is just and right. No oath is required of a candidate which interferes with his duty as a citizen and Christian, or with his duty to his neighbor, his country and himself.

Every man can read the principles of our order. They are published to all. But the Masonic order is a secret society, and will not recive any member who will not promise to keep the secrets! Well, what of it? Would any man marry a woman who would publish all the affairs of his family? Governments hold secret sessions, so do churches, and other organizations. The order is charged with being "immoral and anti-Christian!" Is it in our principles? Certainly no better morals can be found in any books on moral science than in Masonic books. Is it in our membership? I believe that the very cream of American society may be found in our lodges. There is Rev. Dr. Kirk, of Boston, and thousands of other clergymen who are proud to be known as Masons. Masonry like religion is often dishonored by unworthy members. There are persons now members of the Masonic order who could not get into it if they were not members already, just as there are many members of Christian churches who could not gain admission if they were to apply to-day because their life and conversation indicate that they are not true members. The spirit of Masonry is religious, subtract religion from it, and there is but little left. God is recognized in all the ceremonies. It is said that we reject Christ, but this is not true.

(The speaker read extracts from the Masonic burial service in "Hall's Master Workman and Masonic Monitor" which speaks of "Our Saviour at Mount Calvary," and the "Risen Redeemer." This book was published by A. Williams & Co., of Boston, in 1866, and Mr. Clark said that any person could obtain it. The book is used by the lodge of which the speaker is a member.) There is a Bible in every lodge. Prayer and Scripture are the groundwork of our institution.

In the great Anti-masonic excitement of 1831, when it was charged that unusual and cruel punishments were inflicted by the order upon offending members, the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts published a declaration to the effect that no punishment is known or inflicted greater than expulsion. In 1833 this declaration was adopted by the Grand Lodge of Connecticut, signed by several hundred members and published to the world over their signatures. It is charged that in some degrees, the candidate binds himself to sustain unpatriotic and immoral Masons. I do deny the existence of any such obligations. Masonry is a school of morality and piety. I object to the papers and tracts which are being circulated by ignorant Masons and others because so far as they are true, they are isolated extracts or detached sentences which often times deceive the reader. Let it be understood then that we shield no culprit because he is a Mason.

The speaker closed by expressing the sentiment that all good Masons will ascend to the starry firmament above, by the mystic ladder.

Reform News.

—The General Agent writes that the Ohio Agent, D. S. Caldwell, and Rev. E. P. Hart, district superintendent of the Free Methodist church, were speaking in the vicinity of Pittsburgh last week.

—Prof. C. A. Blanchard left this city last week to speak in Indiana, on his way to the Anniversary.

—Mr. Edmond Ronayne, of Chicago, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, will speak again in Thompson's Hall, at Crystal Lake crossing, and also at Woodstock, this week; performing the popular ceremony of initiating and raising a candidate in the three degrees.

—A correspondent of the Wesleyan reports interesting meetings held at different points in Monroe county, Ohio, by Rev. John Levington. In the Methodist Episcopal church of Marengo, the pastor, Mr. Close, a thirty-two degree Mason, attempted to show his superior knowledge of the institution, and began its defense, but found the lecturer and the people alive to Masonic villainy and falsehood to his disgust.

On the Way to Pittsburgh.—From the Illinois Agent.

ELIDA, Ohio, June 1, 1875.

DEAR BRO. K.:—Since my last I spoke twice in Crawford Co., Ill., twice at Ashkum, Iroquois county, twice in Ogle county, and started on the 28th ult. for Pittsburgh. At Bourbon, Ind., I spoke three times, besides a lecture on Africa. The congregations were large on each occasion, except the first, which was a dark and rainy night. I found the members of the U. B. church at this place to be quite in earnest in maintaining their discipline, but the ministers were much in the position of the man who was "in favor of the Maine Law but opposed to its execution."

Masonry is very strong here and the fraternity were highly incensed that any one should dare to assail so good an institution as their's. I was informed that about thirty Masons and Odd-fellows met on the Sabbath and resolved not to patronize the U. B. church any more. Two Masons here renounced Masonry, and the only one found to defend it was a drunkard in a state of intoxication.

I left Bourbon on the 31st, came here and spoke last night to a large audience. One of the U. B. preachers here has been grossly maltreated because of his opposition to secretism and another is threatened. We are told that to-night we are to be treated to eggs, but I fear no evil.

Yours for the Lord,

H. H. HINMAN.

The Wisconsin Work and Needs.

WAUPUN, Wis., May 28, 1875.

Editor of the Cynosure:

My last writing was at Green Bush. I made arrangements for work north of that place three or four miles; gave one lecture, and the rain prevented filling the next appointment, but seized the opportunity of lecturing to a few, in a private house, hastily called together, as no public place could be had in the village. Good results followed the work there to the extent that quite a number of Christian people say they have done paying pagan priests for preaching the Gospel of Christ. The M. E. minister being both a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and the Free Baptist an Odd-fellow. Their course was deemed so inconsistent, that some thinking people at least were disgusted with them.

Left on the 15th and reached Father Vaughan's at Byron, Fon du Lac county, and preached on the Sabbath, and gave three lectures the three following evenings in the school-house, and two at the Centre in the Town Hall; preached again in the school-house on Sabbath morning and lectured on the religion of "Secrecy" in the afternoon. Tuesday and Wednesday evenings lectured in the Union church in Oakfield. In the meantime an effort was put forth to get into Fon du Lac city, and hope yet to be successful. In consequence of the lateness of the spring, and the anxiety of the farmers to get in their crops, and the short evenings, the audiences of late have been small.

Owing in part to the scarcity of money and small congregations, and in part to the fact that this State is so extensively cursed with Good Templars and granges in country places, my finances are very low. I see an abundance of work to be done, and if the friends who read this could do a little towards replenishing my purse it would greatly aid and encourage in this much needed work. For the war,

Insanity Spreading in Pennsylvania.

Preachers, deacons and laymen all over the State going mad! How sad we felt on learning the other day, that our esteemed brother Raynor had gone stark mad! We had regarded him a well balanced character with a sober, well disciplined brain; but alas! he has joined the Anti-masons, and you know they are all crazy. Now you know, Mr. Editor, that in this very sane world of "judicious" sages, insanity and anti-sinity, (a new word, please your honor) are now, and always have been synonyms. What better evidence could exist of insanity than persistent, consistent and practical opposition to the pet sins of the ages? Would a sane man put himself under the concentrated fire of millions of covenanted sinners, by opposition to their cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive?

Such a man might be in peaceable possession of a "good conscience" but could hardly keep a good horse. What sane man would thus discommode himself? Is not bread the "staff of life" and who would let it slip from his hand for the sake of keeping a good conscience? A very unpopular thing at best, among the "ancient and honorable (?) brethren, and with the more advanced, is less known, we think, than "black balls," "black books" and blacker covenants.

Some men are genial, time-serving, man-pleasing things with flexible principles, elastic conscience and hoodwinked charity which covers up a multude of sinners. Ezekiel, Daniel and Paul got to themselves much tribulation by an insane and inflexible adherence to the "guide of their youth." If brother R. does not mend his ways he will be counted in with the "cloud of witnesses spoken of in Hebrews who "had trials of cruel mockings, &c.," "of whom the world was not worthy." "A word to the wise is sufficient." Many more in our State are getting in the same way and the complaint is spreading.

Anti-masons of an Ill Sort—Charles Francis Adams.

Amboy, Ill., May 24th, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Dear Brother:—I have just been reading in the Cynosure, a statemsnt by Rev. J. H. Young. I am a member of the U. B. church, and I fully endorse all that you, as editor, said in your remarks on the Rev. J. H. Young. I know nothing of the man, only what he says of himself in his statement, but that was information enough; and if you had let his remark pass in silence, I should have lost confidence in you. We are now having too much experience with such professed Anti-masons.

I have also read an article on politics, signed "Watch." I feel in sympathy with the sentiment there expressed. But there is one name mentioned as a candidate which I cannot support; that is, Charles Francis Adams. He is not sound on the issues there named. In proof I would cite you to his signing a call for an indignation meeting in Boston, on the reception of the news of the use of the military in New Orleans. It looked too much like indorsing the White League. Wendell Phillips in a speech at that meeting in Boston, refers to Mr. Adams as a signer of that call. Such like things show that he is not to be trusted. I hope the action of Mr. Adams will be considered at the coming anniversary of the National Christian Association, and if a nomination is made that the man selected will be one who is heartily in sympathy with our views.

Yours in Christ,

Hiel Lewis.

A Good Letter from Eastern Indiana.

New Garden, Ind.,
5th Mo. 31st, 1875.

Several of us have been battling for long years against all secret organizations. We were rejoiced when we saw the move for a national organization opposed to secret societies and are doing what we can to aid in the work, though we are not in a condition to help pecuniarily much at present. By becoming engaged in business with some of the secret order men, my brothers and I have sunk $20,000, which has so crippled us we will have to excuse ourselves for the present from doing much. Whether designed or not I have almost invariably found my losses come from that class of men. I have spoken my mind freely against them, especially against the Masons for more than thirty years, yet have given them as many favors as any other class of men. I suppose I have had to bear the penalty for my outspoken opposition in some measure. I have never stopped to inquire what effect it would have on my interests when I wished to battle such giant evils.

We had never had a lodge of Masons here until we organized our anti-secret society. They then made a big rally. On the completion of the Ft. Wayne R. R. to this place, 24th of June, 1870, they ran a train from Richmond (nine miles distant) which brought about 400 to this place, though by no means all Masons. In their speeches they tried to damage our influence; and afterwards they had their big gun Rob Morris from Kentucky here, and they organized a lodge to show us we were doing them good—building up that which we desired to pull down. Yet after all their efforts the lodge has gone down and their superiors have been here and sold their furniture, put the money in their pockets, and left them with the consolation that their means were gone and there was no way to help it. Some of the new members seem not to be able to see what right the Grand Lodge had to their property, and a few have openly condemned the order.

There are quite a number of friends in this (Wayne Co.) and they have a discipline against joining the Masons in particular. Yet in some meetings Masons have been received into membership with the hope that religion would drive it out. But I believe "this kind goes not out but by fasting and prayer." There have been several applications to our monthly meeting for membership by Masons. But in our church every member has his voice in all business, consequently we have invariably kept them out unless they recanted their Masonry. I have written thus much to show a little of our standing. We are not dead but are not often heard from by those distant from us. We find many who are opposed to secret societies who cannot be induced to take much part in opposing them because they are told by secret men in whom they seem to rely that they are not so bad as we represent them. Were it not for this feeling I think we would have two-thirds of the people with us. I believe good publications on the subject are doing much in the way of arousing the public attention. One of Morgan's books in this neighborhood forty years ago made many opposers, and from then until now I have never ceased to abhor the institution, though I respect many who are joined to the order. Yet I am so fully convinced of its unChristian character that I will never knowingly hear a Mason preach; and some of us have made it a question in voting, refusing to cast a vote for one joined to his idol.

I do not know of any one going to the Pittsburgh Convention from here, yet I hope it will be well attended, and that measures will be put on foot to bring out candidates on this question. I used to talk to Hon. G. W. Julian about making this a question in this Congressional district, but we thought perhaps it would be better to keep it quiet until the public was better prepared to consider it.

We need lectures all over our State, but am not able to pay for them. J. P. Stoddard was here over two years ago, since which he wrote me and I endeavored to write to him, but have reason to think it never reached him. I have seen in the Cynosure that Kiggins had been in our place this winter, but much as I wished to see him I did not even learn he was here until he was gone.

Respectfully, Hiram Hough.

On the Grange.

I look upon this secret order as a gigantic evil unsettling the regular channels of trade, causing disquiet in families, causing hard feeling between neighbors and in taking thousands of dollars that ought to be used for better purposes. Some of it should buy bread and clothing for the families of poor members. It is detrimental to religion, as is every order that padlocks the mouths of its members. It is cutting off the saleries of ministers that oppose it. The United Brethren church does not allow its members to join secret societies, but this serpent, the grange, is in the church and coiled up and threatening and says, Strike me if you dare. I say, strike him again and again, until he stretches out dead, dead. Let not the church be polluted and cursed with secrecy. Suppose it takes ten thousand members out of the Brethren church. Let them go. Better lose so many than have the church cursed with secrecy. You will hear those lodge men praying on certain occasions that they may meet in the "Grand Lodge above." How absurd? It would require a large number of partitions in heaven to make room for all the little, corrupt lodges of this earth. Not a lodge will be found in heaven, and I fear but few lodge-men. I say, let all holy men and women pray earnestly that this great engine of the devil, secrecy, may be thrown from the track and smashed into a thousand pieces. All the tracks of secret societies ought to be torn up and their rolling stock demolished. Let no Christian vote for any secrecy man for any office, neither in church or state, but let all true men rise in their might and form a powerful party against this lodge curse.

C. J. Hussong.

A Lady as Colporter.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

I have been traveling in the interests of Anti-masonic literature for a few days and propose to devote much of my time hereafter to this reform. Some may object to the idea of a woman acting as colporter in this cause; but having enlisted in the cause of Christ, I believe that to oppose heathen worship as practiced by the lodge is a duty which all loyal subjects of the King of kings rightly owe to our "Master and Lord." Having procured from the Cynosure office a number of Anti-masonic books and tracts I started out to circulate them and to talk to the people upon secret societies. I met a Mason; desired him to purchase one of my Morgan books. He refused to do so. I then asked him if the book was not true. He answered with some hesitation, "Part of it." Shortly after I met with another Mason, who, when he learned I was selling Morgan's book, promptly refused to purchase. I asked him if the book was not true. He answered in a very gruff and pompous way, "No, it's all lies." "Why," said I, "Your brother Mason, Mr. —— has just told me it was only part lies." This remark of mine was evidently too contemptible to merit any answer and the gallant knight at once retired without attempting to explain this apparent decrepancy of testimony. Another Mason, who is quite a champion for the lodge, assured me that Masonry was religion, and that no Mason could fail to go to heaven. "if this is true," I said, "There must be many drunkards in heaven." He attempted no explanation of the manner in which wicked Masons reach heaven without the merits of Christ's atonement.

What surprised me most was the readiness and anxiety with which the common people embark in our cause. One old lady shed tears of joy when she learned my errand. She said the Masons were continually trying to coax her husband and three sons to join them, and that she would sooner see them laid in their graves than to see them ensnared into such wickedness. I also met a very intelligent old lady who assured me that the Morgan's book is all true. She was living at the time in the neighborhood of the Morgan tragedy, and she and her neighbors once had these books. She said the Masons bought some of them, stole some, and in some instances tore in pieces and otherwise destroyed all they could lay their hands on. I found a great many who bid me God speed.

Yours in Christ, SUSAN EVANS.

A Conversation.

I met a gentleman recently with whom I had a conversation substantially as given below. Incidentally he had referred to the fact that he was a member of a secret society, viz: the Freemasons. I asked if he was a member of a church? He said, "No." "Ah," said I, "there is some religious service in the lodge, I believe; is there not?"

"Yes," he said, "there is prayer."

"Yes, but not much of that."

"Do you think a Christian can join in the prayers?"

"Yes; why not? They are made to the same Being we all believe in."

"Yes but you have Jesus in lodges, and they don't worship through Christ."

"Oh, we don't mention him, so every one can join in."

"But how do you think a Christian can join in such worship when he remembers that Christ said no man comes to the Father but through him?"

"Oh! I guess you are one of these who want God in the Constitution; as though people can't worship him any way they like best already!"

You're off the track, friend, the point is this: Can one who believes this statement of Christ, feel warranted in not coming through him?"

"O I don't believe in your priests and Virgin Marys and intercessors. I think all can join in our prayers."

"We can of course address God as our Creator, and you, I believe, do so as Architect of the Universe, do you not?"

"Yes, but I don't believe all that's said of Christ. I believe he was the best of men, and that it is enough if we act on the principles he taught. I think there never was so good a man, but mankind have to find out for themselves how to worship God, for I don't believe in what people call the inspiration of the Bible, although that book teaches much good."

"Friend," said I, "you admit that there is a Creator, and that in all vegetable and animal existence there is adaptation for purpose, and that the best attainments of each are arrived at?"

"Yes."

"Then, as we agree that man is the highest of all that we know of in creation, is it not reasonable to believe that God has not left him to grope in the dark for the way to render acceptable worship or means of cultivating and perfecting all the best features of his nature, viz: purity and best exercise of, and best food for his spirit, affections and intellect? Therefore we believe that God spake by the prophets, and especially manifested himself in Christ, to influence man towards himself, and bring him up in love and duty to the highest attainments, and to thereby become like himself—in a word Christ-like—God-like. Without such a revelation of God as we find in the Scriptures, and especially in Christ himself, humanity would have been deprived of its highest motives and of the power of developing its noblest characters."

Our Masonic friend listened very courteously and although not fully assenting, kindly asked me to call again. When, O when will darkness give place to THE TRUE LIGHT which is Jesus the Christ—the only "infallible" Ruler of men! H.

A Swindler at Large.

I enclose two items cut from one of our county papers, the Bellefontaine Republican. The person spoken of, John A. Smith, was referred to me in a communication which was printed in the Cynosure some time ago. He was formerly treasurer of this county, and a very dishonest treasurer he was. He cheated the people and enriched himself, by altering the figures on his books, making them larger for his own benefit. When these facts were discovered he made his escape to Canada, taking with him another man's wife and leaving his own. After some time he was brought back from that country and confined for a time in our county jail. Several indictments were found against him and he was tried in our court but not found guilty. Everybody knew he was guilty. So far as I know there were but few tax-payers who had not been swindled out of a few cents or a few dollars. For the protection of society such men ought to be shut up in the State prison; but this man is still at large, and it seems is going about trying to swindle on a larger scale.

At the time these frauds were discovered, Smith was a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and a member (as I have been told), of various other secret orders. I do not know how much influence Masonry had in securing his acquittal, but when so many Masonic criminals go unpunished it looks as if there was something rotten in that institution.

Above it was said that when this man emigrated to Canada, he took another man's wife with him. I don't know whether she was a Mason's wife or not, but I suppose she was not, for the seduction of the wife of a brother Mason would have been "unmasonic conduct." W. W. T.

A Candid Mason.

Taking a seat in the cars recently, a young man requested a place beside me and remarked, "I heard you speak twice at ——— yesterday and am beginning to think that I don't know much about Masonry." I replied, "You have taken three degrees I suppose?" He assented and added, "I am not prepared to say that a man may not be a Christian and a Mason." I asked, "Did you ever see anything in the lodge that you thought would aid a man in his Christian life?" He responded promptly, "No." Did you ever find anything in the lodge that you thought would induce a man to become a Christian if he was not before joining?" He replied again, "No, I never did." I asked again, "Did you ever see anything in a Masonic lodge that you thought would greatly hinder and embarrass a man in his Christian course?" This he answered in the affirmative. I asked farther, "Is there a man among your acquaintances who is an active Mason and an active Christian?" He thought for a moment and then replied, "I cannot think of one now." I asked, "Do you like the lodge?" His answer was, "I was disappointed. I did not find it what I expected."

Just at this point the train stopped and I left the man without learning his name, but hoping his conversation might be of use to him as it was gratifying to me. J. P. STODDARD.

OUR MAIL.

J. W. Margrave, Salem, Neb., writes:

"I cannot do without your paper though the grasshoppers are destroying everything in their track. We are a terribly secret-society ridden people. Many of our ministers are Masons, or if not, are too timid to speak out on the subject—dumb dogs that can not or will not bark. Others may do as they please, but I will not hear any man preach, or give one cent to his support, if I know him to be a member of any of the leading secret orders."

T. H., Chicago, Ill., writes:

"I like the ring or sound of your metal. The gold and silver is easily distinguished from lead and tin. Principles vs. pretense is the grand difference among mankind. You are infallibly right in your maintenance of Christ as the Lord of the conscience and of the heart of man. Alas, that philosophies should so prevail as to obscure him. The battle goes on, but let it wage as it may the victory must be won by the Captain of Salvation. The light shall dispel the darkness."

Emory Sprague, Hillhouse, O., writes:

"I am still doing what I can to expose and oppose the works of darkness by circulating Anti-masonic literature. Secret societies I consider as being in the way of progress, and contrary to the the true light. The "New Departure" greatly encouraged me as it served to show that our shots are taking effect. I think we shall keep the ball rolling, moving continually upon the works of the enemy."

D. A. Renfrew, Brownsdale, Pa., writes:

"I am bound to help all in my power to banish the Egyptian darkness that is covering so many minds, even darkness that can be felt all over our land. I am heart and hand with you in such a glorious reform. The Cynosure is the best and most faithful paper I have ever read. There has been a grange started in our school-house. I asked the director if our public school-house could be lawfully used for a few to meet there in secret, and peaceable citizens be ordered out. He made an evasive answer from which I inferred he was in favor of them, and there the matter rests."

J. J. Hayden, Colo, Iowa, writes:

"I feel anxious for the overthrow of secrecy, believing it to be the most derogatory evil now in existence. I am therefore resolved that the cause of anti-secretism should at once have the cordial support of all the lovers of God and humanity; and as faith without works is dead, I hereby propose to devote my talents, prayers and money to the extinguishment of the monster, and offer on the start to be one of a thousand who will give one dollar each for the dissemination of light among the masses; and I will be one of five hundred who will give five dollars each, for the above named object; and I will be one of a hundred to give twenty dollars each. I think it would be a good thing if the editor would make some such proposition to the readers of the Cynosure.

H. W. Hampe, Linesville Station, Pa., writes:

"The cause the Cynosure represents and advocates must eventually prosper and be victorious, for its cause is of God in Christ, who is a God of truth and grace. It has already a host of veterans who have withstood and fought the enemies of light for years, single-handed, and others are coming to step under its banner who have been in a fire of persecution and slander from the dark minions of the lodge, and have come off victorious to the chagrin of the men who have sought their overthrow. An army made up of such material will not shirk when it comes to the final battle. Though they may be assailed on all sides with lies and slander, for these are the lodge weapons, yet will they conquer as sure as truth will overcome error. Christ though crucified and buried rose again to the discomfiture of his enemies, and ascended on high, and is leading on his cause in its various departments through his spirit and word to final victory."

John Fettenhoff, Chambersburg, Pa., writes:

"I am still trying to get subscribers. I do like to see honesty, especially in ministers of the Gospel; but when they say they are opposed to secret orders while tolerating it in the church and in their charge, their honesty is not skin deep. O Consistency, where art thou! I was pleased with your short comment on Young's letter. Paul says such should be sharply rebuked. Titus 1: 13."

Mrs. R. M. Webb, Fairplay, Iowa. writes:

"I wish the Cynosure might be read by every man and woman in our land, for I think it is the most noble paper in our country. While I was at a campmeeting last August, a minister arose and said he had been thinking it would be a good thing if all the brethren would square their lives by the carpenter's square. When he took his seat I addressed the congregation, and told them I did not agree with the brother, for I believed the word of God should be our guide, and that we ought to square our lives by the Gospel. May God crown your efforts with the best of heaven's blessings, and give you victory over the works of darkness."

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for June 20. 1875.—Saul Chosen.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Samuel, x. 17-24. Commit to memory, vs. 18 and 19.

17 And Samuel called the people together unto the Lord to Mizpeh.

18 And said unto the children of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I brought up Israel out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hands of all kingdoms, and of them that oppressed you.

19 And ye have this day rejected your God, who himself saved you out of all your adversities and your tribulation; and ye have said unto him, Nay, but set a king over us. Now therefore present yourselves before the Lord by your tribes and by your thousands.

20 And when Samuel had caused all the tribes of Israel to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

21 When he had caused the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the son of Kish was taken; and when they sought him he could not be found.

22 Therefore they inquired of the Lord further, if the man should yet come thither. And the Lord answered, behold, he hath hid himself among the stuff.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence, and when he stood among the people, he was higher than any of the people from his shoulders and upwards.

24 And Samuel said to all the people, See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people shouted and said, God save the king..

GOLDEN TEXT,—He gave them their request; but sent leanness into their souls. —Ps. cvi. 15

TOPIC.—The Lord, Dishonored, can Curse our Blessings.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.—As to Mizpeh (v. 17), see Judges xi. 11; as to the divine right over the people (vs. 18, 19), see Judges vi. 8, 9; as to the use of the lot (vs. 20, 21) see Josh. vii. 16, 17, 18: as to Saul's modesty(v. 22), see 1 Sam. ix. 21; as to the "stuff," see 1 Sam. xvii. 22; as to "chosen," see Deut. xvii. 15.

LESSONS.—How much greatness comes by a single eye. Samuel is set aside; so are his sons. An unknown man leaps into the highest place. But Samuel feels no jealousy, no churlish feeling, no ungracious spite. How nobly he carries himself, while there is a hope of Saul's doing well. Let us put away all self-seeking. With it will vanish envy of other's success. We shall then rejoice in their joy, and have real pleasure in their virtues.

How needful is prudence in managing any great interest! If Samuel had selected Saul, all the blame of failure had been on him. All the sons of Belial had found fault. "The lot is cast;" it caused the contentious to cease. Let us ask wisdom. More failures in life come from the want of prudence than from want of energy, zeal and diligence. Many things are mismanaged.

How weighty the responsibility of choosing rulers! It should be before God, by all Israel. No man should give over this trust to the lowest of the people. Nor should a good man decline office when he is providentially called to it.

All departure from God, and all choice of any other ruler, will bring punishment, sooner or later.—S. S. World.

God is an overruling providence, making all things work together for good to those that love him, and causing even the wrath of man to praise him. Rom. 8: 28; 5: 3–5; 2 Cor. 4: 15–17; Heb. 12: 11; Gen. 50: 20; Ex. 9: 16; Ps. 76: 10.

A new heart was given Saul. What a priceless gift! It was a heart of stone—now it is a heart of flesh; it received blessings, but never gave forth praises—now it is full of thanksgivings. O God, create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me! Ps. 51: 10; Ezek. 11: 19; 36: 26; Jer. 31: 33; 24: 7; Rom. 8: 2–4; 7: 8; 2 Cor. 3: 3; Eph. 4: 23.

If we reject God for the world it must be in the face of blessings without number. Ps. 103: 2–5; 107: 8, 9; 116: 12; Is. 63: 7; Jer. 31: 3; 1 Tim. 6: 17; 1 John 4: 10, 19.—Nat'l S. S. Teacher.

About Masonic Romancers.

The late secession war gave rise to innumerable Masonic romances. Masons and non-Masons, men and women, assiduously plied their pens, illustrating the humanizing effects of the mys tic tie. Recently I read an American story of that period in the Masonic Magazine, London. The pith of the story was this: An Irish lad associated with some Southern guerrillas in Missouri, was taken prisoner by Union soldiers, and ordered to be shot. Just as the sentence was about to be executed, the prisoner's sister, a girl of eighteen, rushed into the camp, and after crying, pleading, and calling upon the Virgin proved unavailing, she happened to notice a Masonic pin in the officer's shirt front; she then looked the officer in the face, and dignifiedly stepping back a few paces, gave the well-known sign of a Mason. The officer then yielded so far as to delay the tragedy till the next day; during the night the prisoner and his sister mysteriously disappeared. The above story is tame when compared to one submitted to an editor, an acquaintance of mine. The prisoner was a Northenrer, his hands were pinioned behind, his feet tied tight together, lying on his back on the bare ground, while the consultation was going on among the rebel squad, who finally doomed him to death. The executioner then approached the prisoner with an uplifted bowie knife, but as he was about to strike, the prisoner perceived the Masonic talisman; quick as lightning he gave the well-known sign, when the knife dropped from the hand of the would-be executioner, and his face suddenly became bedewed with tears trickling down his manly cheeks, etc., etc.

The perusal of the above brought out a flow of tears from the eyes of the jolly editor. The ludicrousness of the story, of giving the well-known Masonic sign while the hands and feet were so tied, convulsed the editor to such a degree as not only to burst open a floodgate of tears which he had in his reservoir, but nearly cracked his sides with laughter. These kind of romances, however, are generally received by the reader as such. But who knows whether a future Pierson may not collect these stories and publish them as Masonic traditions, and whether a future Mackey may not epitomize them for a Masonic encyclopedia?

Dr. Oliver was a great romancer. His history of the Antiquity of Freemasonry, etc., are mere romances. These, however, are palmed off as histories, which were, of course, received as facts by every orthodox Mason. The "Revelation of a Square" was evidently meant by the Doctor to form, as it were, or to be understood, as a romance of history. But the credulity of the craft was such that even the Revelation of the Square was sucked in as true history. Thus, in 1852, the Most Worshipful Grand Master of Massachusetts, in his report on the petition of Jewish Masons to desectarianize the ritual, among other matter, quoted from Oliver's Revelation, how, during the Deputy Grand Mastership of Dr. Manningham, or between the years 1752 and 1754, Jews had made their way into spurious continental lodges, and how the emperors of the East and West gave a patent to a Jew, Stephen Morin, to propagate that spurious Masonry in the new world, (he alludes to what is now known as Scotch Rite). The success of the French Jews induced the English Jews also to seek admission, when the trouble first began about what prayer should be used in a Masonic lodge, and a long-winded discussion between Dr. Manningham and a Jewish brother took place in a lodge. The Square gave the verdict for Dr. Manningham, for, of course, the Square was Christian to the backbone. It admitted, however, that "the Jew remained unconvinced."

Up to this time, says the Square, there were no authorized prayers for the lodge, but owing to the infusion of Jews, Dr. Manningham learned that some Masters so far favored them as to leave out the name of Jesus from their invocations. This irregularity the D. G. M. was determined to put a stop to, so he consulted Dr. Anderson, and the two together composed a prayer, which was printed in the Pocket Companion of 1754, the G. L. sanctioned that prayer, the D. G. M. introduced t into the Metropolitan lodges, where it was gratefully received.

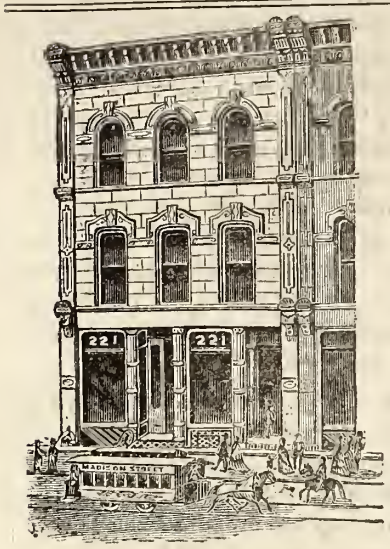
This nonsense has been repeated over and over, again and again, by our Worshipfuls, Right Worshipfuls, Most Worshipfuls, and no-worshipfuls, and it has become an article of faith with our Christianizing brethren. Bro. Matthew cited Manningham about a year ago in the Jewel; G. M. Duval of Arkansas, within a year or two, pointed to it when he said that the G. Lodge of England restricted Christian prayers to lodges; and the learned Dr. Mackey, in his Encyclopedia, entertains no doubt about Manningham being the author of that prayer, but is slightly dubious about Anderson's participation in its composition, because, he says, Anderson died in 1746.

The truth is, Morin was not patented by emperors of the high degrees before 1761, seven years after the prayer was printed.

2. Anderson died, not in 1746, as Dr. Mackey says, but May 28, 1739, or thirteen years before Dr. Manningham's appointment as D. G. M. (I found Anderson's obituary notice in the Gentlemen's Magazine, 1739.)

3. The Pocket Companion, of 1754, where the prayer is printed, makes no mention about Manningham, or the G. L. having sanctioned it. And

4. My honored and esteemed friend, the R. W., Bro. John Harvey, G. S. of England, assured me in a letter that he searched in every direction he could think of, but could not find where Dr. Oliver got his information about that prayer.



Dr. Oliver started with a notion that God himself communicated the secrets of Masonry to Adam in Paradise, and that he therein predicated by symbols the advent of Christ; hence in 1847 he published the Johannite Mirror, designed to induce the Grand Lodge of England to restore the patronage of the Saints John. Having failed in this, and seemingly believing with St. Augustin, Jerome, and other early saints, "that it was an act of virtue to deceive and lie, when by such means the interests of the church might be promoted," he therefore invented the story of the prayer having been composed by Anderson and Manningham "together," and of the G. L. having sanctioned it, and if this is not Jesuitism, what is it?

But with all Oliver's absurdities, he was regarded in England and in America as an oracle. This was not to be wondered at. The writers of the last century imposed upon the credulity of the craft the antiquity of Freemasonry, and imposed upon some the Christianizing significance of its aim. Oliver simply confirmed by his sophistry the prevailing belief. When Masonic journalism came into existence, the editor looked up to Oliver as his mainstay, and praised him for his profound erudition. all which helped the sale of Oliver's books, though, as he himself admits, not one out of ten who subscribed had ever read them. The success of Dr. Oliver gave rise to a swarm of Masonic romancers, scribbling or spouting about Masonic Christianity, Christian Masonry, Templar Masonry, etc., even out-olivering Oliver. One of that class of romancers declared that in Moore's Magazine his knowledge of the Sabbath having been changed from the seventh to the first day in the week, by the apostles, in a Masonic lodge. There was then no chance for a man of common sense to protest against the absurdity; the editor would not have suffered it to be contradicted. Even recently, one of that class of romancers declared in a Masonic journal that Masonry was found to exist—with even the identical word—among the Esquimaux, North American Indians, in the center of Africa, and in newly-discovered Pacific islands. When questioned for his authority, all he had to say was than an ex-Western Grand Secretary was in Japan, and found there a Mason who gave him the word, but who the ex-G. S. was, though questioned, he would not tell.

We have, however, at least made some advance in the right direction. Masonic editors discovered that we have a large amount of intelligence in our society, and now consent to allow a few grains of common sense to be disseminated even at the risk of loosing the subscriptions of a few noodles, whose motto is, "if ignorance is bliss, etc." Of this new-born privilege we must avail ourselves. We must prick every Masonic bubble, whether new or old, and mete out to the perverters of history their due reward. When we have suceeded in this, we may hope to see a reform in our mongrel ritual, which satisfies only the Jesuitically disposed. And we may produce such an improvement in our literature that an intelligent Mason will have no cause to blush at its puerilities.—Jacob Norton in the Mystic Jewel.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1875.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and the Association hopes to raise this sum by June 10th next; and $20.000 as soon thereafter as possible to secure the ownership. Send on contributions.

THE ANNIVERSARY report will begin in the Cynosure of next week, and will include a full account of the proceedings of the National Convention with reports and debates; also the addresses and other papers of interest to the reform. No better time can be found for introducing the reform and the Cynosure to friends yet unacquainted with them, or to enlist those who have not manifested interest in the reform. Do not neglect the opportunity. It comes once only in the year. Secure subscriptions to begin with next number without delay. See terms and special rates on last page.

THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH—MR. RENTOUL.

We have published Mr. Rentoul's letters and strictures on this church under the general rule followed by the Cynosure, to give all well attested facts bearing on the state of the churches of Christ respecting our national fest. On this subject we know no denominational distinctions and desire nothing but truth and obedience to Christ's precepts in Matthew x. 27: "What ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." This is from Christ's mandate to the Apostles when sending them forth to preach. And he assured them that in the discharge of their mission they should be "hated of all men" for his sake. There can be no hope of reform where such facts are suppressed, as those we have freely published concerning the "National Congregational Council," whose only permanent officer is said to be a Knight Templar and who was Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts when first appointed; and such facts as are given by Mr. Rentoul concerning United Presbyterian churches.

But we fear at times, lest our correspondents' zeal and sincerity should transgress the bounds of prudence and sound wisdom; and we wish our readers to understand that the Cynosure has profound love and veneration for those churches of Christ which have kept their testimony good against the secret orders, though, as a beloved "Friend" in Iowa assured me of "Friends' Meetings," "The lodge has been snaking its way into them." "We cannot," said an aged abolitionist to me when I was a young one,—"We cannot mend an old shoe on the same principle on which we would make a new one." This he said to me concerning churches which were struggling with the slavery reform. And we should be careful not to punish by our indiscreet zeal ministers who are trying to get the leaven of iniquity out of their churches.

While the English Parliamnet was most thorough in examining by committee and publishing in their reports the abuses of English society, especially among the poor and working classes, there were heartless men and savage pretenders to reform, who would seize on those reported abuses to blacken and malign England with, when the very information which enabled them to make out their indictments, were furnished them by English efforts at reform. Let us be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves." If we are, we shall not be cruel to our best men.

When we went to Monmouth the secret fraternities had honey-combed Dr. Wallace's College; and lifted their serpent heads in defiance of the Faculty. In less than a year afterward, the Senate of the College passed an order suppressing them. Neglected discipline is a sore evil, but the postponement of a duty for good reasons, is not the neglect of it.

NOTES.

—The published opinion of Mr. Bancroft, the historian, that the Pope was with deep design consolidating and strengthening his religious system in America, and preparing it for an active part in politics and for any emergency which the turbulence of European monarchies might create, is not palatable to the papal press in this country. They attack the idea, and almost its author, with a spirit and confidence which it is not easy to explain except that they print for ignorant or prejudiced minds accustomed to obey a priest. But so far as he dared the secretary of the papal nuncio echoed the same sentence last week in Milwaukee.

—The Beecher trial dragged its slime through the one-hundredth day on the third of June, and is not expected to close for a week hence. The lawyers' plea, begun with a five days diatribe by Judge Porter for the defense, opened on the 19th of May. Evarts followed on the same side, and after speaking all last week yet wanted a day or two more. Beach, for the plaintiff will follow and then Judge Neilson will give this most celebrated case to the jury. Evidence is daily accumulating that legal technicalities and shrewdness have covered up as much as they revealed; and unless the papers unite to drop the case the charitable public will be tortured for months to come with suspended judgments.

—From the Interior we learn of the death of William Bridgman of Streator, Ill., a steadfast supporter of our cause, and correspondent of this paper. Bro. Bridgman died of erysipelas on the 27th of May, aged 73 years. He was born in Western New York and an early acquaintance with the Masonic excitement and its dreadful cause firmly fixed in him the principle of opposition to the murderous institution. He studied theology and began preaching in Friendship, Alleghany county, N. Y. He labored much as an evangelist chiefly in connection with the Presbyterian churches of New York and Ohio. He has been fifteen years in Illinois laboring more or less with the Alton and Ottawa Presbyteries. His views of truth, says the obituary notice, were clear and logical. He was an instructive preacher even in his old age. He had adopted his confession of faith from deep convictions of its truth, and he was prepared to defend or maintain it at all points. No one ever doubted his honesty or good intentions, however he might differ from him in views of doctrine or questions of public morals and social life.

—We lately published the statement and platform of a secret political society, the "Holy League of the Peers of America," just promulgated in New York. The Cincinnati Commercial of the same organization, says: "Men who value their own independence of thought and who propose to keep them as among their most valued rights, will avoid all secret political organizations. If they want the power of association, it can be found in the existing political parties, and, if these do not suit they can unite and form other political purposes. But it is not wholesome to identify oneself with political associations that will not bear the calcium light of public opinion. One secret political society begets others of like nature, and a people who will give themselves up to them are moved by unseen forces to unanticipated ends. The assassin covets the dark. The honest man faces the sun."

—A report is being circulated that the cane which Senator Sumner walked with during the summer after he was assaulted by Preston Brooks is in the possession of the Charles Sumner Lodge of Odd-Fellows of Cleveland, and was presented to them recently by Mr. R. P. Spaulding, to whom Mr. Sumner gave it. Mr. Spaulding says he visited Mr. Sumner while he was in the Alleghany Mountains in search of strength, and when he left him the Senator gave him the cane, saying that he had cut and trimmed it with his own hands. The choice of a name for this lodge and the presentation by a false friend are a most base attempt to connect in some way the great statesman with a system which he despised and hated as dangerous to our free institutions. It is safe to say the charity-swindlers who got up this lodge never consulted Mr. Sumner on the use of his name to give them character, if, indeed, the whole matter has not been transacted since his death, when he could not forbid the forgery.

—The "Defense of Masonry," on another page, is sent by Bro. Conant of Connecticut to show how the lodge is replying to the late State Convention. Well may the lodge cry, "Save me from my friends!" The statements about Washington and Dr. Kirk are well known to be false, and the whole speech bears such marks of either ignorance or deception, that it seems needless to reply even if we had space and time.

—The United Presbyterian comments justly on the Masonic parade in Pittsburgh last week: "The Knights Templar have been in our city in splendid style and outfit. They had processions, fetes, speeches, receptions and a ball, with various other performances and ceremonies that our want of familiarity with cabalistic terms makes us unable to understand. Mingled with much that is childish and disgusting there is more that is so irreverent as to startle those who believe the Scriptures to be the word of God and religion to be a holy thing—to mock and travesty which is to dishonor the Almighty and invite his punishment. It should especially make a minister of the gospel shudder to appear among men in a cause so silly, farcical and profane."

—Monsieur Roncetti, a stately Italian and officer in the Papal Guard, is the Pope's ab-legate, who bore commissions to Cardinal McCloskey and the several new archbishops in the United States. Last week he came to Milwaukee to install the new archbishop Henni. A reporter of the Chicago Post and Mail failing to interview him through his ignorance of our language was successful in drawing from his private secretary, Ubaldi, some important statements in connection with the popish designs upon this country. The secretary said, with some hesitation, "that the Holy Father was very sorrowful when he considered the poor respect paid to the church by some of the governments of Europe, and that he had even said the United States was the only place where his authority was truly respected. He did not expect to cultivate the church in America to the neglect of the church's interest elsewhere; but the brethren were so active and prosperous here and the government so free, that labor and effort here gave a more speedy return than in any other quarter." The so-called liberal minded individuals, who, by voice and pen, are strengthening the power of the Romish system here, may some time bitterly learn that they have been traitors to themselves, the country and the church of Jesus Christ.

—In the report of the committee on the State of Religion (Prof. J. G. Carson, chairman) at the late United Presbyterian Assembly at Wooster, O., occurred the following interesting statement and excellent suggestion: "In regard to the errors and sins which act as hindrances to the Lord's work, besides those which are common to all places and times of the church, such as worldliness, unbelief, formality, and the like, special mention is made in very many instances of the evil influence of secret societies, intemperance, and Sabbath desecration, not so much among our own membership as in the world around and among surrounding churches. It is gratifying to learn that, while intemperance and Sabbath profanation prevail to an alarming extent, yet among our own members there is a very general regard manifested for the sanctity of the Lord's day, and a growing influence in favor of temperance, even to the extent of total abstinence. In reference to the latter, there has been marked progress, largely as the result of the woman's movement, and in spite of the fact that in some places the zeal of many has seemed to slacken and the interest to abate. In view of the number and power of these evils and the hosts of infidelity and popery which are combining on all sides against the Lord's cause, we have need to cry with Jehoshaphat of old: 'Oh, our God, wilt thou not judge them! for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us, neither know we what to do; but our eyes are upon thee.' Would it not be well for the the Assembly to appoint a day and call the people to fasting and prayer, as did that pious king, that they might cry mightily to the Lord! Who knoweth but he will return and leave a blessing behind him!"

THE EIGHTH ANNUAL CONVENTION of the National Temperance Association met in Farwell Hall in this city on Tuesday of last week. Hon. Wm. E. Dodge of New York called the body to order, Vice-President Henry Wilson made one of the opening addresses. Hon. Hiram Price of Iowa was elected permanent chairman, and among the Vice-presidents appear the names of Wm. Baxter of Indiana, Mrs. Wittenmyer of Pennsylvania, L. C. Matlack of Delaware, formerly of the Wesleyan church, Hon. John O'Donnell of New York, and Asa Hutchinson of the Hutchinson troup of Minnesota which enlivened the meeting with stirring song. The temperance orders, which were thoroughly represented in the convention, aside from having the president and a statement in regard to juvenile societies, were not especially recognized in the daily reports. Among the marked addresses were those of Hon. Henry Wilson, a temperance man in word and deed, of Dr. N. S. Davis on the physiology of liquor drinking, Dr. Cuyler of Brooklyn, and Miss Anna Dickinson, whose remarks were more for woman's suffrage than for temperance. The resolutions of the convention were of much importance, and drew out long and ardent discussions. Among the more important was the requesting Congress to appoint a National Commission of Inquiry to investigate and report upon the result of the liquor traffic in its effect on crime, pauperism and the public health, also to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor in the District and the territories, to prohibit its importation, and forbid its use by employees of the government. It was also recommended that more attention be given to the subject of temperance in our Sabbath-school lessons.

The Benevolence of Odd-fellowship.

Rev. Samuel Scott of this city, who is a most devoted disciple of secret orders, as well as a Bible agent, in a speech at the Odd-fellows' Hall last week, is reported by one of the dailies to have stated that the order of Odd-fellows has, since its origin, initiated, in this country, seven hundred and sixty thousand members, from whom it has collected a revenue of thirty-two million three hundred and twenty-four thousand dollars, of which it has applied "to the relief of the sick, to the support of the widow, the burial of the dead, and the education of the orphan," thirteen million seven hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars leaving a balance of eighteen million five hundred and forty-nine thousand dollars for the same object. We think this statement of the "balance" and its object must have been inserted by the reporter; for a speaker would require a very hard cheek to enable him to state that the eighteen and one-half millions not expended for the objects above named are in reserve for that purpose in the future. That is so well known to be untrue that any Odd-fellow could not look his fellows in the face while publicly asserting such a thing, even if the statement were to be regarded by the fraternity as a huge joke to be perpetrated upon credulous outsiders. We think the order has done exceedingly well (for a secret society) if it has expended even one-third of its revenue for its ostensible objects. It will be seen that the order, according to this statement, has succeeded in getting an average of forty-two dollars out of its members,—living and dead, adhering and withdrawn,—while it has expended an average of eighteen dollars per member for "benevolent" purposes. If the members had each taken that tax of forty-two dollars and invested it advantageously, it would have brought several times the aggregate amount of benefits paid out by this "benevolent" order; but in that case the benefits of the investment would not be pompously paraded in the name of benevolence. Though greater and better than all the expenditures of the order, such benefits would be human providence instead of "divine benevolence." Well, it is no concern of ours if the dancers delight in paying the benificent fiddlers!"

——Add to the above searching analysis of the Odd-fellow fraud from the Telescope, the fact that probably three out of the above eighteen dollars per member is for funeral parade and advertisement of the order, and the case is yet worse. From published reports sixteen per cent, would be a fair average for funeral expenses which are placed under the head of "relief."

Good Templarism Officially Expounded.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

I have noticed with regret your hostile attitude towards the order of Good Templars. An article from an English writer published in your paper some months ago is an entire slander of the Good T's; must have been known to be such by its author if he had ever been a member of that order. Such misrepresentations and false insinuations do not injure the Good Templars amongst those who are acquainted with its workings, but the publication of such things in your paper has a tendency to cast a doubt upon the charges you make against Masonry and in which I agree with you in the main. Many causes have conspired to delay the sending of this correspondence to you, but I hope you will consent to lay it before your readers old as it is.

Yours truly, H. S.

OFFICE OF THE G. W. T. C., GRAND LODGE, I. O. G. T. OF. PA., 341 WALNUT STREET, PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17, 1873.

DEAR BROTHER:—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of recent date refering to the Christian Cynosure and its attitude to our order, and enclosing a series of questions touching upon our order. I enclose the questions with my answers in red ink, and can only add that I don't think the game is worth the candle in the endeavor to contradict anything those insane on the question of secret societies may urge upon the order of G. T's. They (the G. T.) will outlive them all.

Yours in F. H. & C.

LOUIS WAGNER, G. W. C. T.

1. What is your station or position in the Ind. order of Good Templars?—Grand Worthy Chief Templar of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars of the State of Penna.

2. Have you taken all the degrees in the order, and are you thoroughly acquainted from personal observation with the working of the order?—Yes: 1st 2d and 3d degrees of Subordinate and Grand Lodges. I am thoroughly acquainted with the entire workings of the order in all its degrees and rituals.

3. In gaining admission to the order or in taking any of the degrees is it required to take an oath or do anything which is so nearly the equivalent of an oath, that a person conscientiously opposed to oath-taking could not take the obligation?—An answer to this question I answer with the obligation itself hereto attached:

W. V. T. [to candidate] "You will place your right hand upon your heart and assent to the following"

OBLIGATION.

You, in the full belief in the existence and power of Almighty God, and in the presence of these witnesses, do solemnly and unreservedly promise that you will not make, buy, sell, use, furnish or cause to be furnished to others, as a beverage, any spirituous or malt liquors, wine or cider; and that in all honorable ways, you will discountenance their use in the community. You also promise that you will not reveal any of the private work or business of this order to any one not entitled to know the same, and that in all things you will yield a cheerful obedience to all our laws, rules and usages. You also promise that you will not knowingly wrong a member of this order, or see one wronged, and that you will do all in your power to promote the good of this order and to advance the cause of temperance.

Do you thus promise?

Candidate:—"I do."

4. Are there any secrets in the obligation or objects of the Good Templars, that is to say anything in itself secret, which is not known and published to the world?—Nothing except the pass-word requisite to obtain admission to the lodge rooms and signs by which we are enabled to recognize and assist members in distress.

5. Have you ever heard or known of anything included in the "secret workings of the order" which is inconsistent with the principles of Christian morality as those principles are professed and practiced by all good men?—Nothing whatever that the Redeemer himself would disapprove of.

6. If, after initiation into the order, a member were to discover a conspiracy existing therein against public order or good morals or against the rights and liberties, civil or religious, of the people, is there any obligation taken which by any construction, or imprecation, can be understood to require a member to keep such a conspiracy a secret?—Nothing whatever, nor is it possible for any members to engage in any attempt of the kind without a violation of their obligation.

7. What provision, if any, is included in the terms of the obligation intended to protect honest members from just such contingencies as those referred to in No. 6?—That of expelling those who should attempt anything of the kind.

8. Do you think that an institution constituted to a considerable extent of children, boys and girls from the age of twelve years upwards could ever be successfully used as an instrument in the hands of conspirators for the accomplishment of great crimes?—No. The innate sense of justice, the early installation of patriotic principles in the minds of the children of our country would render that attempt extremely doubtful if not absolutely a failure.

REMARKS.—The above correspondence was received some time ago, but being misplaced has not found its way into the paper until now. The article referred to is a reprint from an examination into Good Templarism by Rev. A. Bowden, a Baptist clergyman of England. Mr. Bowden published extracts from the ritual of the order on which he based his remarks, which to us seemed logical and fair. Of course the "Grand Worthy Chief Templar" of Pennsylvania would object to the severe conclusions drawn against his order, for the magniloquence of his title is sufficient to overcome a weak brain and produce "insanity on the question of secret societies." Our friend H. S. must see that fostering Good Templarism encourages every other secret order, Masonry among them; and we have conclusive evidence that the same spirit and same management is over both these societies in many places.

As to the questions—No. 3: Is the obligation quoted an oath? To all effects and purposes it is. How so? What means the placing of the hand upon the heart? Certainly that the candidate is making a promise to the fulfillment of which he will give his utmost power and deepest fealty. Why are inserted the words: "in the full belief in the existence and power of Almighty God?" what is their necessity in a simple pledge? what effect are they supposed to, or do they actually produce? The candidate is to acknowledge "full," actual and positive, belief in God's existence and power, that is, in his attributes and judgment. He is thus made to acknowledge himself in the presence of the heart-searching God who, the lodge supposes, will punish the willful violater of his promise. The effect and purpose of such a pledge is the same as an oath.

No. 5.—In presuming to speak for the Lord Jesus Christ, the "G. W. C. T." forgets that the constant, uniform teaching of the Master and his disciples is directly contrary to the second clause of the obligation—"to not reveal." Also it is against reason and scripture to promise obedience to laws, rules and usages one knows nothing about.

No. 8.—The initiation of children into an order, demanding of them such promises, familiarizing them with unscriptural religious forms, prayers framed without regard to the manner of their use or the person using them, and meetings from which their parents are knowingly excluded, is impious and a gross injustice to the trusting and impressible nature of childhood; and proves that, as the obligation has it, Good Templarism first requires "the good of the order," and then, if there is time, the temperance cause may have attention. It is thus an imposition on the people and the good cause it professes to promote.

The Home Circle.

Watchman, what of the Night?

Christians, wait; the nations tremble,
Shaken to their utmost bound;
Kings their terror ill dissemble;
Dread and panic spread around:
There's no prophet now to call us,
To behold, in vision true,
What events will soon befall us;—
Wait and see what God will do!

Christian, wait; the muttering thunder,
Gathering on the sky afar,
Need not bring dismay or wonder,
Doubt, or fright, or pallid fear;
Stay your soul on His protection:
He will guide you safely through.
Banish every sad dejection;
Wait, and see what God will do.

Christian, wait; Jehovah reigneth
On his throne of mercy still,
And the wrath of man restraineth
When it worketh not his will;
Be assured, the future story
Of the days now dark to you
Will record his work of glory:
Wait, and see what God will do.

How shall we Know what Amusements are Right?

Any form of amusement whose use by you proves hurtful to others is to you unlawful. The principle underlying this rule is clearly a scriptural principle. It is just the principle which God maintained and Cain scouted at, when God said: "Where is Abel thy brother?" and he said: "I know not; am I my brother's keeper?" It is just the principle Paul taught and practiced, when, respecting the eating of meats offered to idols (a thing all right in itself, but wounding to the weak conscience of some), he said: "Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak. Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend." It is just the principle our Lord Jesus enforced so solemnly, when he said: "It is impossible but that offences will come; but woe unto him through whom they come! It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones." By shunning pleasures found to be hurtful to our own soul, we escape spiritual suicide; by shunning pleasures whose enjoyment by us proves hurtful to others, we escape spiritual murder. Who among us is prepared to incur the guilt of either crime? Who among us, with the fear before him of that day when God shall inquire after blood, will not shiver at his feet the sweetest cup even of lawful pleasure, rather than by drinking it drink damnation to himself against that day? Nay, let me plead the mercies of God. Who among us, knowing and believing the love God has to us—knowing the cost of the outflow of his love to us—knowing his will that we should love one another, and die one for another, as he did for us—who among us can find it in his heart, for the sake merely of a moment's pleasure, to wound the conscience, or hurt the soul of any brother? Let the fear of God and the love of God triumph, and let self perish in the resolve: "If meat—even meat—make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."

No amusement is right to you on which you cannot ask God's blessing, and for which you cannot give him thanks. We are commanded to pray without ceasing; that is, to be always and in every place lifting up our hearts to God for his blessing. We are taught that it is only through prayer our daily bread shall be sanctified; and that it is God's blessing, in answer to prayer, which makes a little that a righteous man hath better than the riches of many wicked. And we are commanded also in every thing to give thanks. "Whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him." In view of these instructions, how can it be right to enter any place, join any company, participate in any amusement, with respect to which the voice of prayer and thanksgiving must be silent? From the very nature of the case, apart from these divine instructions, it cannot be. It is in God we live and move, and have our being; and he is the Father of lights, from whom cometh down every good and perfect gift. In view of these truths reason itself teaches that "that practice in which we dare not seek God's protection and blessing must be wrong; that enjoyment for which we dare not render God thanks must be criminal." Only apply this test, honestly and habitually apply it, and you shall be relieved from many a perplexity, and be saved from many a sinful indulgence. Christian instinct, if allowed free play, will with almost unerring certainty inform you upon what pleasures you may look for the divine blessing and upon what pleasures it would be but solemn mockery to seek it.

No amusement enjoyed without reference to the glory of God is right. It may be lawful in itself, and expedient too, but by enjoying it without any reference to the divine glory you make it practically unlawful. From childhood you have been taught: "Man's chief end is to glorify God, and to enjoy him forever." This is what God brought you into the world for, and for this above all he has brought you into the kingdom of his dear Son, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost. This is the law of the kingdom: "Whatsoever ye do, whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." And this is the plea of your Redeemer—King: "ye are bought with a price, therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

That these rules may the more certainly be fixed in your memories, suffer me now to repeat them:

1. No amusement is right which violates the moral law.

2. No amusement is right for you whose lawfulness you doubt.

3. Any amusement, however lawful in itself, if engaged in to excess thereby becomes unlawful.

4. Amusements which on trial prove hurtful to you, are to you unlawful.

5. Any form of amusement whose use by you proves hurtful to others is to you unlawful.

6. No amusement is right to you on which you cannot ask God's blessing, and for which you cannot give him thanks.

7. No amusement enjoyed without reference to the glory of God is right.

Dear Christian brethren, has not every one of these rules been shown to rest on the sure word of God? Are they not, therefore, God's rules to you for your guidance and control in your youthful pleasures? Are they not given you for your good? Shall you not honor him and enjoy his smile in their observance; and shall you not dishonor him and bring upon yourselves the darkness of his frown by disregarding them? "My son, forget not my law; but let thy heart keep my commandments: for length of days, and long life, and peace shall they add to thee."

How blest are they whose lives are pure
And upright in the way,
Who in the Lord's most holy law
Do walk and do not stray.

O blest are they who to observe
His statutes are inclined;
And who do seek the living God
With their whole heart and mind.

Such in his ways do walk and they Do no iniquity.
Thou hast commanded us to keep
Thy precepts carefully.

O that thy statutes to observe
Thou wouldst my ways direct!
Then shall I not be shamed, when I
Thy precepts all respect.

Backing Truth.

Is the truth preached, backed? What is there to back it? Here lies the difficulty, the failure—the truth is not backed up by those who profess it. This is why preaching, exhorting and praying have so little effect on the hearts and lives of sinners. Instead of looking into the Bible for truth—examining the light of Scripture, holy inspiration—they look at the lives of professors for the evidences of Christianity. Here they stumble. When unconverted men behold the sins of the church, their pride, covetousness, sensuality, idolatry and oppression—their proneness to deny the Lord that bought them, by wicked works, their hearts are hardened, they resist the truth, neglect the counsel of God to their own destruction! Let the professed disciples of Jesus back the truth by holy example, newness of life—and the cause of God prevails mightily. The word preached will take deep root, be like the flint, the fire, the hammer! "Ye are the light of the world; a city set on a hill cannot be hid." "Ye are the salt of the earth, but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted?" Thus, the great failure at camp-meeting, protracted efforts at the stated Sabbath ministrations. The truth is sometimes preached with power, vividness and clearness—but it takes no root comparatively—it is like seed sown by the way-side or among thorns—little or no fruit is brought to perfection. Worldly men, by witnessing the ungodly lives of professing Christians, become skeptical, unbelieving, are led to doubt the truth of the Bible. They doubt the truth of inspiration from the fact it has so little influence on the hearts and lives of those who profess to love it. A selfish, backslidden, slave-holding, dough-faced church is emphatically an infidel-maker! Infidels are made through this medium by thousands and tens of thousands! Infidelity would measurably cease, die the death, were all God's professing people to live the Gospel, walk constantly in the fear and love of God, deny themselves all ungodliness and worldly lusts—live soberly, righteously and godly—do justice, love mercy, walk humbly, in all the ordinances and commandments of God blameless; love the Lord with all their heart, soul, mind, strength, and their neighbor as themselves. Then salvation streams! goes forth as the light of the morning, iniquity hides its deformed head. Angels tune their harps afresh—"Glory to God in the highest." Nothing short of a witnessing church will save the world—"a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, to show forth the praises of Him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvelous light.

Were Christian professors to let their light shine, "awake to righteousness and sin not," live as they ought, sanctifiedly; obey God in all things, shine as light, be holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners, every sermon, every exhortation, every testimony, every prayer, every spiritual song of praise, would be as a thunder clap to the sinner, conviction for sin would flash home to his inmost soul. The cry everywhere would be, "Lord save we perish."

"Lord, haste to help, ere we are lost!
Send forth evangelists in spirit strong,
Arm'd with Thy Word; a dauntless host,
Bold to attack the rule of ancient wrong;
And let them many souls to Thee reclaim,
To reach thy kingdom and to know thy name."

Lest they be Discouraged.

A father had given his son a book, and as he was going away to preach at a distant appointment, he spoke of the appropriateness of his spending his leisure hours on the Sabbath in reading it.

When he was gone a sudden impulse seized the boy to win his father's approval by seeing how much he could read.

So every moment he could gain he read in his new book, thinking all the time how pleased his father would be with his diligence. When he returned, he hastened joyfully to meet him, showing him the mark, and telling him the number of pages he had read. But the father was cold and tired, and worse still, was thoughtless. So he hastily put the boy aside, with the chilling words, "You should have read twice as much." If a blow had struck the boy to the earth, it would have been a slight injury, compared to this blow to the spirit. It crushed hopelessly for the time all aspiration, all effort after knowledge. It made him look almost with aversion on his father. The scar on the spirit was carried away into manhood. The book stood on his library shelf, but the mark had never been moved. No additional page was ever read in it.

Oh, how we need to watch ourselves in these moments of weariness and perplexity! Hasty, petulant words, where a child looks for approval, are wounds to the spirit, hard indeed to bear. It takes all our maturer fortitude to meet with an even mind such disappointment, and can we be surprised that the tender child's spirit grows discouraged and bitter under them?—Ex.

Individual Responsibility.

There is an immense amount of work to be done in bringing this world to Christ. It is the supreme business of Christians to do this work. If we may not make the statement any stronger, we may at least say that little is done compared with what might be done. The demands for earnest labor grow continually, as new avenues of influence, new appliances, new fields of labor are opened.

Who shall do all this work? Shall the church? Yes. But the church is composed of individuals. There is no church outside of its individual members. They make it. If it is active, it is because the members, or many of them, are active. If it is cold, it is simply the concentrated coldness of individual hearts.

Who then shall do the work? Necessarily the individuals. But what individuals? Why not you? It is not necessary that every one do all the work. It will not be expedient, doubtless, that you should work in just the channels, or by just the methods that others do. Your way may be best for you.

But in some way, in every way that opens to you, you must work, or there will be something left undone. This is a point we too often fail to realize. If we fail in our duty at any point, we are apt to think that somehow or other that neglected point will be supplied by "the church." Well, it may be. You lost that opportunity of inviting a neglecter of the sanctuary to come and listen to the Gospel. Perhaps, some brother, more faithful than yourself, may have done the work you failed to do. But there is no certainty of it. At any rate, it is a very poor rule to neglect known duty on the possibility of some one else filling up your deficiency.

We have multiplied agencies and machinery for doing work; none too many if rightly used. But the increased agencies and organizations must not be made the excuse for shirking individual duty. They really call for more earnest activity. They certainly will not accomplish work of themselves.

Work is to be done. Individuals must do it. Am not I the individual. —Am. Messenger.

Money? Yes, Money.

BY D. F. NEWTON.

It's money first, money midst, money last—money always. And, "the love of money is the root of all evil." Take a single case by way of illustration—H. G. & Co.,—in their apology for inserting a sermon—a re-hash—a combination of old, exploded errors, emanating from Hume, Channing, Parker and Thomas Paine. I clip a single extract from the publishers: "We published a few weeks since, a sermon by . . . Whether the sermon was a good one or a bad one is nothing to the purpose, as we did not publish it either because we approved of it or disapproved of it, but because we were paid for it."

Here, reader, you perceive that H. G. & Co. print for money; they are paid for it, money is the prime motive, kill or cure, curse or bless, promote evil or good, happiness or misery, salvation or damnation. "We were paid for it." Yes, friends, "paid for it," paid for what? for sending forth firebrands, arrows and death! Paid for serving Satan, backing up his hellish designs! Paid for making infidels, prostitutes and cut-throats!

Friend G. & Co., this money is dearly bought, rest assured. Is it not cankered already? And will it not soon "witness against you, and eat your flesh as it were fire!" See James v: 3. Will this money logic of yours stand the test at the judgment day? It is before God, the Judge Eternal, we stand. God holds men responsible for their thoughts, their motives, their intentions; for the good they may do, and for the evil they may prevent. "There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed." "By thy words shalt thou be justified, and by thy words shalt thou be condemned." "Be not partaker of other men's sins." "And whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Suppose this same sermon, spiced as it is, from top to bottom, with infidelity, issuing from the pit bottomless, leads thousands on thousands of the rising age, (as it doubtless will) blindfolded by Satan, to eternal perdition? Have H. G. & Co. nothing to do with this but pocket the money for the advertisement?

What kind of theology is this? Bible? This editorial looseness is causing the world to reel to and fro like a drunken man, to dark damnation! making it an Aceldama, a field of blood!

Heaps on heaps, cart-loads on cart-loads, of the veriest trash that ever cursed a fallen world, are sent forth from corrupt presses, on the wings of the wind! Our steam-presses and mail-bags groan, cry out, being burdened!

How to get Along.

Do not stop to tell stories in business hours.

If you have a place of business, be found there when wanted.

No man can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons.

"Never fool" in business matters.

Have order, system, regularity, liberality and promptness.

Do not meddle with business you know nothing of.

Never buy an article you do not need, simply because it is cheap, and the man who sells it will take it out in trade.

Trade in money.

Strive to avoid hard words and personalities.

Do not kick every stone in the path. More miles can be made in a day by going steadily on than stopping.

Pay as you go.

A man of honor respects his word as his bond.

Aid, but never beg.

Help others when you can, but never give what you cannot afford to, simply because it is fashionable.

Learn to say "no." No necessity of snapping it out dog fashion, but say it firmly and respectfully.

Have but few confidants, the fewer the better.

Use your own brains rather than those of others.

Learn to think and act for yourself.

Be vigilant.

Keep ahead rather than behind the mes.ti Ex.

Jerusalem.

Few people think of the ancient capital of the Holy Land from a commercial point in view. Nevertheless, the inhabitants of Jerusalem carry on a considerable trade, and some interesting statistics with respect to it are published in a recent report by Consul Moore. In 1873 the city received from the United Kingdom 500 to 600 bales of cotton, of the aggregate value of 22,000*l* to 24;000*l*; and about 150 packages of woolen goods, hardware, &c., and colonials, worth 12,000*l*. Austria and Germany sent it woolen and silk manufactures, hard and glassware, timber and fancy goods, estimated at 30,000*l*; France, woolen and silk manufactures, sugar and colonials, hardware, leather, wine and spirits, valued, with rice from Genoa, at 30,000*l*; and Russia, flour, 1,000*l*. Rice is imported from Egypt, value about 12,000*l*. These imports are not for Jerusalem alone; it is the market for the neighboring towns and villages and Bedouin tribes. The exports are olive-oil, grain, and sesame seed. The population is estimated at 21,000, of whom 5,000 are Moslems, 5,500 Christians (mostly of the Greek church), 10,000 Jews, and about 500 Europeans, chiefly Germans. The Jewish population has increased by about 2,000 within the last two years; and German settlers also arrive in considerable numbers. The manufacture of soap is the chief native industry, but a large quantity of "Jerusalem ware" is also produced, consisting of chaplets, crucifixes, beads, crosses, and the like. These articles are made principally of mother-of-pearl, and sold to the pilgrims who annually visit Jerusalem. Two lines of telegraph connect the city with Europe, and it has been proposed to construct a railway between Jerusalem and Jaffa. The plan has in the meantime been given up. Consul Moore says the roads in the neighborhood are in a shameful condition and this fact, with the predatory habits of the Bedouin tribes, prevents the healthy development of industry.—The Globe.

"'We must all appear,' or, as now it is generally admitted, 'we must all be manifested before the judgment-seat of Christ,' a far more searching thought. If we were to employ a homely expression, and say, 'turned inside out,' it would, I believe, exactly express the intention of St. Paul; all that is inward now, and thus hidden, becoming outward then; every disguise torn away; whatever any man's work has been, that day declaring it; and not according to its outward varnish, but its inward substance."—Trench.

Children's Corner.

Don't be in a Hurry to go.

Come, boys, I have something to tell you,
Come near, I would whisper it low;
You are thinking of leaving the homestead,
Don't be in a hurry to go.
The city has many attractions,
But think of the vices and sins;
When once in the vortex of fashion,
How soon the course downward begins.

You talk of the mines of Australia:
They've wealth in red gold without doubt;
But, ah! there is gold on the farm, boys,
If you'll only shovel it out.
The mercantile life is a hazard,
The goods are first high and then low;
Better risk the old farm a while longer—
Don't be in a hurry to go!

The great busy West has inducements,
And so has the busiest mart;
But wealth is not made in a day, boys—
Don't be in a hurry to start!
The bankers and brokers are wealthy,
They take in their thousands or so;
Ah! think of the frauds and deceptions—
Don't be in a hurry to go!

The farm is the safest and surest;
The orchards are loaded to-day;
You are free as the air in the mountains,
And monarch of all you survey.
Better stay on the farm a while longer,
Though profit comes in rather slow;
Remember you have nothing to risk, boys,
Don't be in a hurry to go!

Spade Preaching.

A little boy named Harry was looking very thoughtful one day when he suddenly said to his mother,—

"Ought I not to be doing something, mother, for the poor heathen? Am I not old enough to preach? I do not mean pulpit preaching."

"I should think not," said the mother, smiling. "But what kind of preaching, then, do you mean, my boy?"

"Mine must be spade-preaching, mother."

"Spade-preaching!" echoed sister Lottie from the other side of the room.

"Yes," said Harry. "Did not some of the school-boys dig, plant, and sell? and cannot I dig my missionary money out of the ground?"

"Well, suppose you ask father if he will let you have a piece of garden-ground," said the mother.

When father came home his little boy urged his plea for a piece of "missionary ground;" and very cheerfully it was granted, and some good potatoes for "seed" were also added.

Harry was very diligent in digging, setting, watering and weeding; and by the summer a fine crop of potatoes rewarded his toil. Lottie had the pleasure of helping to gather up the potatoes, and send them off to the market.

In the missionary report for the next year the interesting item might be seen of "Missionary Potatoes" with a few shillings attached. May not other little boys and girls "go and do likewise?"

In some parishes of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire where the people are deeply interested in the cause of missions, it is not unusual for parents to encourage their children to raise funds, not only by spade-work, but by means of fruit trees, cows, sheep and poultry. The best cherry-tree in some orchards is the "missionary tree;" and the blossoms and fruitage of that tree are watched with special interest by both parents and children. Even in some of the poor parts of Ireland contributions have been raised by means of "missionary hens."

We lately had a very interesting letter from that warm friend of Ireland, Miss Holmes of Ballaghadereen, near Clogher, in which she tells of some of her little shoeless scholars bringing the eggs from hens which have been "set apart" for missionary purposes. The interest felt by the poor children in in this mode of helping the cause of Christ is deeply affecting and may well reprove those children who have greater advantages, but who never improve them.

At a village missionary meeting in Nottinghamshire, some time ago, a little girl's collecting-box was found to contain nearly one pound in coppers. How had she filled it? By the sale of bones, which she had collected.

The poor children in one of the working-houses wished to send something for the missions. But what could they do? They had no money and no friends came to see them who had any to give. But where there is a will there is a way. They began to pick up the pins that they found on the floors and in the yards; and those, with the consent of the governor, were sold. The farthings thus raised by these little work-house children were, doubtless, like the widow's mite, more acceptable by the Lord, than many of the of the offerings of the rich.—[London] Children's Prize.

Africa.

Africa is 5,000x4,500 miles in extent. Millions of the inhabitants are Mohammedans. Eighty years ago Mungo Park entered West Africa and aroused great interest in Africa. He was followed by others, who have done something toward developing the continent. The obstructions placed in the way of travel are very great.

In 1841 Great Britain tried to establish a colony for model farming, but the enterprise failed on account of fevers which carried off the men. White men and horses cannot live, but the black man thrives. Dr. Livingstone entered in at the southern portion, and pierced toward the Equator. Here the climate is healthy. Speke, Grant, Burton and others explored in the region of Victoria N'yanza, or the source of the Nile. Here the climate was cool and healthy. The slave hunting ground occupied the central portion. Here the slave trade has been carried on from the earliest ages.

Dr. Swinfurth says that the largest people in the world, the Bari, are in Africa, near the Equator. Here, also, the smallest people, the pigmies, are found. The African woman is simply a slave. The people are finely formed, active and supple. The women do the work and are straight and strong. The boys and girls marry when they are ten or twelve years old. Mr. Pike here gave many interesting incidents, to illustrate the state of things in Northern Africa, where he had visited. A Mohammedan African may have four wives, and more if he can pay for them, the wife being purchased with cattle. Thus woman is a slave. The central belt of Africa is very fertile, producing coffee, spices and tropical fruits. Ivory, diamonds and gold are to be found. Rare animals and birds are here in abundance.

Missions have been planted all around Africa, but many of them have failed. Madagascar has, during the past year, experienced a wonderful revival, thousands being converted. Seventy-five million in Central Africa have never heard of the Saviour of men. England spends $300,000 and America $80,000 yearly for African missions. The English, Americans, Swiss and others have missions on the western coast, which have 20,000 children in the schools and 20,000 church members—not a single missionary, 85 miles from the coast.

Religious Intelligence.

—The next quarterly meeting of the Northeast Pennsylvania Association will be held at Dalton, Luzerne Co., Pa., June 17 and 18. It is hoped there will be a large and full attendance. The State Executive Committee will meet at the same time and place.

—Bishop Harris, who has been visiting in Japan, remarked one peculiarity about the worship of that people, which he thought very encouraging. "You never see," says he, "a Japanese worship till he has made his contribution to the deity of the temple. That is the first thing he does. He plumps his hands into his bosom and draws out a sum which he thinks is about fair, and deposits it, and then brings his hands together for worship." Might not some professing Christians learn a valuable lesson from these benighted heathen worshipers?

—In connection with his remarkable success in Berlin, Mr. Pearsall Smith refers to the fact that not only had he been praying for Germany for a year previous to his call thither, but that during his efforts, some four or five thousand German believers were interceding with God for their native country. Mr. Smith's earnestness and success in England attracted the attention of Germans who heard him, and an invitation to Berlin was the result. Not speaking German himself, the opening meetings were first held in private houses before small invited audiences who could understand English, and then removed to public hall where the speaker's words were interpreted. As the meetings there became uncomfortably large they were brought to the notice of the Emperor, who expressed his sympathy with them and relieved the crowding by opening the Garrison church, the largest in the city, for the services. Here the audiences numbered between two and three thousand; and in spite of the fact that Mr. Smith must be interpreted, he was heard with unflagging attention.

—In noticing an accession of 52 new members to the United Presbyterian church of Lawrence, Mass., a correspondent of the Christian Instructor describes the interesting congregation of Rev. W. P. McNary at Bloomington, Ind., the seat of the State Unniversity. Under his labors for five years the church has added one half to its membership numbering now 303, with a Sabbath-school of 200 The pastor's thorough and widely circulated discourse on Freemasonry shows his position and that of his church on this important question.

—The English Archbishop of Canterbury, after remarking that he had the deepest interest in the revival work now going forward in that country, although he feared there might be some errors of doctrine, concludes a recent letter:

"I rejoice when Christ is preached, whether regularly or irregularly, and trust that the clergy will endeavor to deepen the salutary impressions produced by the revivalists."

—Mr. Hammond closed his meetings in Oakland, Cal., May 12th. Over one thousand signed the covenant there. He went thence to Stockton, and may visit Oregon before leaving the Pacific coast.

—Eight Chinamen were lately received into the church connected with the Presbyterian mission at San Francisco. Some of the Chinese converts have to endure severe persecutions from their own countrymen, of whom the wealthier class are much opposed to Christianity and education. They wish to keep the coolies ignorant and thus easily control them. They therefore use all their influence in favor of idolatry. One of the great commercial companies, the Hop Wo, recently fitted up an idol temple at an expense of $30,000.

—Now that the grasshopper plague is abating, the papers ask Gov. Hardin to change his proclamation from a day of fasting to one of thanksgiving.

—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterians (Old school,) held its annual session two weeks since, in Coulterville, Ill., about one hundred and thirty delegates being present. The denomination comprises one hundred ministers and one hundred churches. Their average contributions during the past year to the benevolent work of the church amounted to $28. 00 per member. They have under their care one theological seminary, also a flourishing mission in Syria, and are doing a good mission work among they freedmen of the South, by schools and education of teachers, and are maintaining a good confession against the spiritual darkness overshadowing the land and churches from the lodge power.

—At the annual meeting of the Western Tract society at Cincinnati, May 27th, the receipts of the past year were reported at $39.280: some $4,000 more than on any previous year; only $1,079 were from donations to the publication and charitable funds. Dr. B. P. Aydelott was elected President.

Temperance.

Intemperance in Wine-Drinking Countries.

"This kind o' thing's an exploded idea," according to Lowell, and so I thought that men had really done believing that there was little or no intemperance in wine-drinking countries. But the fact is, the reason the world does not come right any faster, must be that each man reads his own papers, believes just what suits him, rejects the rest, and is of the same opinion still. The testimony on this subject is positive and negative. On the one side men assert that they see much and terrible intemperance in those countries; on the other side men deny that it exists, for they did not see it. But this does not disprove the asserted fact. If men who hold this belief in the strict temperance of wine-drinking people, will read and weigh testimony, they will find it very strong on the other side. It is impossible to quote long articles. I know of persons who have made the subject a matter of study and personal observation, with no very strong temperance bias, and their testimony was, that they found a fearful amount of intemperance, not before their eyes in the streets, but where they looked for it. Here are some bits of evidence:

"The liquor sellers in France number one to every 100 inhabitants. It is true that they have gone on from wine to something stronger, even to the fatal absinthe; but that is just what could have been foreseen. The alcoholic taste is formed and handed down."

"I have just spent six months in Switzerland, where wine is cheap and pure. Here more intoxication was obvious than in any other place it was ever my lot to live in."

"The Italian laborer rarely begins his potations till his day's work is done; consequently travelers see and know very little of the extent of them. They carouse till about midnight, and then reel to their wretched homes; and the cries of their children and the groans of their wives soon tell of the fury and brutality which mark the drunkard the world over whether he wear home-spun or broadcloth."

"During a few years' residence in Italy, our household was served at different times by some eleven men and women servants. Eight out of the eleven drank to excess. Thinking it probable that brandy did the mischief, we inquired as to this point, and the answer was always the same: 'No, no; it is wine—always wine.' "

It is fair to add the rest, even if it reveal the inconsistency of the writer, if he pretended to be a temperance man: "If a wine closet were by any accident left open, the servants were more quarrelsome, and would only be fitted to resume work after a night's sleep."

"A Swiss physician of very high standing, residing in the Canton de Vaud, told us that throughout that region with the culture of the vine had come the curse of drunkenness, and that a most lamentable increase of sin and sickness had been the result."

A man of large wealth and Christian principles, in California, planted vineyards and made wine in the honest belief that the use of light native wines would be a benefit. In a very short time he gave up the whole plan, as he saw the mischief wrought by the wine.

Another man who was no Christian, gave up his vineyard and wine-making merely on moral grounds and in self-defence. They were demoralizing the whole neighborhood, and his own sons and daughters were going to hopeless ruin.

Men cannot drink in this country as in some others. We are naturally excitable, our climate is stimulating, and moreover, our grapes contain a large proportion of sugar, and therefore evolve more alcohol in the progress of fermentation, and so are stronger and more dangerous. There is cant enough about wine and the Scripture. There are two sides to that, and what the Bible says about wine, native wines. "Who hath woe? Who hath contentions? Who hath sorrow? Who hath redness of eyes? Who hath wounds without cause? They that tarry long at the wine." "Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright: at the last, it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Young people do not need it: the life and health of youth are enough. And if they learn to do without there is no habit and the craving will not come. The nerves speak as they are trained. —Q. R. S., in New York Tribune.

A Warning to Mothers.

An English physician, in a lecture to a female audience on the use of alcoholic beverages, asserted that the "babes of London are never sober from their birth until they are weaned."

The use of beer and ale among nursing mothers is perhaps not so common in the United States as it is in England, but it is by far too common. How often a friend, and even the family physician, will recommend the use of beer to the mother, not only to give tone to the system, but as the means of nourishing the child.

What a fatal mistake! The eternities, with their mysteries, alone can reveal the amount of damage resulting from o dangerous a practice. The stimuant thus taken by the mother readily nters into the food nature has prooided for the child, and every particle f nourishment drawn from the life-givng fountain is impregnated with a ubstance that is not only foreign to he highest physical condition of the hild, but is actually poisonous to the ystem.

The old theory that these drinks are ecessary to the well-being of the nother and the sustenance of the hild, is thoroughly exploded, and hose who advocate the notion are far n the rear of the car of progress. It s a well-established fact, demonstrated y the most logical minds of the day, hat the physical system is in the most ealthful and natural state when freest rom the influence of stimulants.

Besides the custom being entirely nnecessary and uncalled for, every nother should take into consideration he future welfare of her child. There an be no doubt but that the appetite or stimulants is often bred and nurured at the mother's breast. Regardng this as true, how can any mother or a moment listen to the advice of hysician or friend in a matter of such eighty import to the child.

Mothers! in taking that draught hat seems so harmless to you, remember that you are doubtless paving the ay to a drunkard's doom for your arling child.

Beware lest the little thing that now ppears so innocent and harmless, by nd by warmed into life by your caesses, and grown bold through your nfluence, should strike at your dearst interests, and turn to gall the honey halice of life's purest joys.—Oregon emperance Star.

Effects of Tobacco.—Science and atistics have attacked the smoking aternity, and smokers will not much lish the verdicts. For instance, a mparison recently made between nokers and non-smokers in the Polychnic school of Paris shows that the nokers not only rank below the nonokers in every grade, but that they se grade constantly. This would ean to anti-tobacco preachers, of urse, that the smokers had less ains to start with, or they would t have adopted the habit in the first ace, and that the weed tended to deoy what little sense they had. At y rate, although brains and cigars seem to live and flourish in harny on this side of the water, the ench Minister of Public Instruction s forbidden his pupils to chew or oke the dangerous weed. If we add this testimony the words of some the most celebrated physicians, that ny of the nervous diseases of this neration can be traced to the free of tobacco, we cannot avoid the clusion, that the "coming man" l drop that with other "social" and necessary habits.

We have too many resolutions and little action. The Acts of the ostles is the title of one of the ks of the New Testament; their lutions have not reached us.

Miscellany.

A tax of six cents per pack is levied upon playing cards in England, and during the financial year of 1873–4 the tax was paid on 1,020,950 packs.

Paris, it is estimated, contains 120,000 women who are dependent upon their needles for support. The highest rate of pay is about seventy-nine cents per day, whilst the averaging pay, when fully employed, is not over twenty-four cents for twelve hours' work.

The annual income of the Cuban government from lotteries is nearly $3,500,000. The present system of lotteries was established in 1812, at which time there were three drawings in a year. Now there are twenty-one. There are many persons in Havana who do nothing for a living but sell tickets. So large did the number become a few years ago that the government made it necessary that all who sold tickets should have a license, and in order that the country should not not be deprived of efficient laborers it refused license to all but those physically unfit for other employment.

How suggestive are the following figures: In Spain, out of a home population of less than fifteen millions, only three millions can read, and less than a million and a quarter can read and write. On the necks of this ignorant population are fastened nine archbishops, fifty-three bishops, one hundred thousand ecclesiastics, fourteen thousand monks, and nineteen thousand nuns. There are now 600 convents for women in Spain, but before the suppression of the monasteries for men, there were 1,940 monasteries and convents, containing 30,905 monks and 24,700 nuns.

Few people know how the characters in music—do, re, mi, fa, sol, etc., originated. It was thus: Guido, a Benedictine monk, seeing the necessity of having the musical language expressed by fixed and invariable signs, took the first syllable of the Latin hymn to St. John the Baptist, and assigned a special and fixed character to each. The Latin hymn was as follows:

Ut queant laxis,
Resonare fibris,
Mira gestorum,
Famuli tuorum,
Solve polluti,
Labii rectum,
Sanctæ Johannas.

Guido used the first syllables of each line—ut, re, mi, etc., but afterward Gio Marie Bononcini, father of the celebrated composer, and rival of Handel, exchanged ut for do, for the sake of euphony.

J. Corvin, an engineer residing at Dresden, Germany, has invented a method of giving the ordinary sandstone, found in abundance in many localities, the exterior appearance of marble. He accomplishes this by impregnating the well-dried stone with soluble silica and alumnia. The thus prepared sandstone becomes much lighter in color,—some kinds being intensely white and translucent, while it is capable of the highest polish, equal to that of the purest marble. He has even succeeded in imitating marbles of every color by adding mineral colors to the liquid used for impregnation. The famous quarries near Pirna, in Saxony, produce a sandstone especially adapted to this process, and Mr. Corvin now makes colored stones adapted to the most elegant architectural structures. The price is considerably below that of marble; and the new material has the important advantage that it is much more fire-proof than marble, which, when exposed to the fire, rapidly burns into quicklime and crumbles to dust.—Scientific American.

Home and Health Hints.

How to keep meat fresh a long time:—There is no good reason why farmers and their families should eat so much salt pork, leaving all the fresh meat to the inhabitants of cities and villages, when the following method will keep meat fresh for weeks, even in the warmest weather. I know, for I have tried it for more than ten years: As soon as the animal heat is out of the meat, slice it up ready for cooking. Prepare a large jar by scalding well with hot salt and water. Mix salt and pulverized saltpetre in the proportion of one tablespoonful of saltpetre to one teacupful of salt. Cover the bottom of the jar with a sprinkle of salt and pepper. Put down a laying of meat, sprinkle with salt and pepper the same as if just going to the table, and continue in this manner till the jar is full. Fold a cloth or towel and wet it in strong salt and water, in which a little of the saltpetre is dissolved. Press the cloth closely over the meat and set it in a cool place. Be sure and press the cloth on tightly as each layer is removed, and your meat will keep for months. It is a good plan to let the meat lie over night after it is sliced, before packing. Then drain off all the blood that oozes from it. It will be necessary to change the cloth occasionally, or take it off and wash it—first in cold water—then scald in salt and water as at first. In this way farmers can have fresh meat the year round. I have kept beef that was killed the 12th of February till the 21st of June. Then I packed a large jar of veal in the same way during the dog-days, and it kept six weeks.

Washing house plants:—Have a large pail or tub filled with warm soap suds, then, spreading the fingers and palm of the left hand over the soil in the pot, turn the branches topsy-turvy into the warm soap suds, swing the plant briskly in the water till every leaf has become completely saturated, then put it through a pail of clean water, and rub each leaf with the thumb and finger; give it a good shake, and when dry, return it to its place in the window. The leaves of a plant are its lungs, each leaf being furnished with hundreds of minute pores, whence the plants breathe in carbon and exhale oxygen. The perspiration of plants is said to be seventeen times that of a human body. Many plants never bloom on account of the accumulation of dust upon their leaves. A plant too large to be laid down in a tub, as above described, may be syringed and each leaf rubbed clean with the finger and thumb, which are better for this purpose than a brush or cloth.

Frightening Children.—Nothing can be worse for a child than to be frightened. The effect of the scare it is slow to recover from. It remains sometimes until maturity, as is shown by many instances of morbid sensitiveness and excessive nervousness. Not unfrequently fear is employed as a means of discipline. Children are controlled by being made to believe that something terrible will happen to them, and punished by being shut up in dark rooms, or by being put in dark places they stand in dread of. No one without vivid memory of his own childhood, can comprehend how entirely cruel such things are. We have often heard grown persons tell the sufferings they have endured, as children, under like circumstances, and recount the irreparable injury which they are sure they then received. No parent, no nurse, capable of alarming the young, is fitted for the position. Children, as near as possible, should be trained not to know the sense of fear, which, above everything else, is to be feared in their education, early and late.

Farm and Garden.

Work for June.—Hoeing and weeding will be the all-important work of this month with most farmers and gardeners. If taken early, but little trouble will be experienced in keeping down the weeds, but if you procrastinate until the weeds get the start of you they will be found very difficult to subdue.

In the garden the work of transplanting tomatoes and other plants that were started in hot-beds or cold frames is the first. In moving plants much care is necessary, and we have always found it a good plan to set a few dozen according to their size, in a pail with just water enough to thoroughly wet the roots and dirt adhering to them, and then taking them out one at a time, as we go along the row, set them in freshly prepared holes and cover immediately with dry fine soil, while the roots are yet dripping. In this way the dry earth adheres more closely to the roots, and the plants will start much sooner, and wilt less than when set in soil too deep to crumble. The probable reason of this is that the soil comes more closely in contact, thus obviating little air holes around the roots to cause decay, and perhaps the death of the plant. When but few plants are to be moved, they may be watered as soon as set sufficiently to pack and settle the earth around the roots, taking care, however, to cover the surface with dry earth to prevent evaporation and baking. We have always found the best time for transplanting to be just before a rain and the poorest time immediately after.

Evergreens should be found in every garden and they may be moved if care is taken to keep the roots from dying. Turnips of the late variety should go in the last of the month if at all. The turnip needs warm, sandy land, and some kind of special fertilizer, if one could only know where to buy it. We have much faith in roots, in place of hay, but would feed them in small quantities more as a kind of dessert or appetizer than to save hay, and to make our stock eat and digest more.

Orchard grass and clover will be in prime condition this month and if cut then and well cured will afford excellent hay for winter. Timothy will probably be ready to cut the latter part of the month. Do not let grass get too ripe or too dry. Mowing machines, horse rakes and all other haying tools should be repaired and put in order early. As a people, we have not yet begun to realize how much of the value of our hay crop is annually lost for the want of earlier and better curing.

Butter is apt to be plenty in market this month, and any surplus should be laid down and kept till the "short spell" that always comes in August, sooner or later. It is folly to crowd our produce on a glutted market.—Chatauqua Farmer.

Swarming Bees.—A bee-keeper gives the following plan to prevent a swarm of bees from getting away from the hive, with the statement that after ten years' experience he has never known it to fail but once: As soon as they show the first symptoms of swarming, stop up some of the outlets to the hive so as to force them to be a considerable time coming out. The swarm being made up in part of young bees, many of whom cannot fly well, and as nothing can be done by the swarm until all are out, and fly about in the air, by prolonging their exit the feeble ones become tired, and finding their plans frustrated, they alight to arrange their journey. If they can leave the old hive all at once they care very little about alighting.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samnel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal: or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hundred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS, in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

News of the Week.

The Centennial.

The Government Departments are making extensive preparations for the Centennial. The Centennial Commission has established a Sub-Commission here to assist the Executive Departments in their preparations. The largest appropriations made by Congress were assigned to the interior, War, Navy and Agricultural Departments, and to the Smithsonian Institution. The War Department will make a complete exhibition of the entire military history of the country. It is the intention to make the ordinance especially complete. There will be exhibited models of all the heavy guns, so far as practicable, and all the improved appliances of war. A considerable number of government troops will be placed in Fort Mifflin, not far from the Centennial grounds. The Navy Department has not fully arranged its plans. The purpose is to present models of our naval architecture, and to present a perspicuous history of our naval exploits. Some of our best ships—ironclads—will be ordered to League Island, at which place there will also be stationed a considerable number of sailors and marines. The soldiers and marines will be on duty with their respective departments at the Centennial grounds. The several Auditors of the Treasury Department are already preparing an outline history of their respective Bureaus. The monumental work of the Treasury Department, it is expected, will be the projected financial history of the Republic. One of the finest revenue-cutters will be stationed at the port of Philadelphia during the Exhibition.

The Post-office Department will present a model Post-office, with letter-carriers and a postal car. The Interior Department will be represented by its several Bureaus. The Indian Bureau is making arrangements to have present during the entire period of the Centennial, families from each one of the Indian tribes, who will live in a section to be allotted them, and according to the habits of that tribe. The Bureau of Education will present a Centennial history of American education, models of school-houses, and of all modern school appliances. The Agricultural Department will make a very full exhibition of the different soils and products of the country. The Smithsonian institution will exhibit complete scientific specimens of nearly everything connected with American science. One of the specimens to which Prof. Baird will devote great attention will be a very remarkable collection of the food fish of the United States. This collection will be a practical illustration of his recent valuable report upon that subject.—Chicago Tribune.

Foreign.

A terrible earthquake occurred in the city of Brussa, in Asia Minor, in the first days of May, and was attended with great loss of life and property. According to the Levant Herald, six hundred houses were destroyed, one hundred and sixty people killed, and nearly two hundred more were or less seriously injured. Brussa is a city of about 35,000 inhabitants, situated at the foot of Mount Olympus, some three miles distant from the Sea of Marmora.

The Prussian Bishops have replied to the rescript of the Ministry, dated the 9th of April, which they received in answer to the petition they had addressed to the Emperor direct. They endeavor to prove that the statements which the Ministry reproached them with having made in their petition are in reality not to be found in that document at all, and that, therefore, these reproaches are inapplicable. With regard to this point, the Bishops say they merely maintained that the declaration required of the clergy by the State of unconditional obedience to State laws was made in that unconditional form incompatible with the rights of Christian consciences, and they add that a whole list of provisions contained in the May laws shows the accuracy of this view.

A Vienna paper, the Review, publishes an article upon the return of the Emperor, Francis Joseph, to Vienna, wherein it says:

His Majesty, on his return, finds the political state of things in Europe resuming its usual course. Peace, and the tendency to maintain it, having acquired renewed strength, issue from the short apparent crisis through which we have recently passed with increased moral power. It is known that the suspicion entertained respecting the intentions of Germany is devoid of any foundation in fact, and all the more honor, therefore, is due to her for the positive peaceful assurances to which expression has been given in Berlin during the last few days. Germany's power stamps them with the full authority of a weighty political decision, whereof the significance can but be enhanced by its intimate connection with the ideas on the basis of which the entente of the three Northern Empires was established.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

Twenty subscriptions for six months count the same as ten for a year.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

C&N-W LINES

This great corporation now owns and operates over two thousand miles of road. With one branch it reaches Racine, Kenosha, Milwaukee, and the country north thereof; with another line it pushes through Janesville, Watertown, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Escanaba, to Negaunee and Marquette; with another line it passes through Madison, Elroy, and for St. Paul and Minneapolis; branching westward from Elroy, it runs to and through Winona, Owatonna, St. Peter, Mankato, New Ulm, and stops not until Lake Kampeska, Dakota, is reached; another line starts from Chicago, and runs through Elgin and Rockford, to Freeport, and, via the Illinois Central, reaches Warren, Galena and Dubuque, and the country beyond. Still another line runs almost due westward from Chicago, and passes through Dixon, Sterling, Fulton, Clinton (Iowa), Cedar Rapids, Marshaltown, Grand Junction, Missouri Valley Junction, to Council Bluffs and Omaha. This last-named is the "GREAT TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE," and the pioneer overland line for NEBRASKA, COLORADO, UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA.

CALIFORNIA and the PACIFIC COAST.

It runs through the Garden of Illinois and Iowa, and is the best, safest, shortest and quickest route for OMAHA, LINCOLN, and other points in NEBRASKA; and for CHEYENNE, DENVER, SALT LAKE CITY, VIRGINIA CITY, CARSON, SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, and all other points west of the Missouri River.

If you want to go to Milwaukee, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, De Pere, Ripon, Baraboo, Eau Claire, Hudson, Stillwater, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Breckenridge, Morehead, Fort Garry, Winona, Plattville, Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Sioux City, Yankton, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, or a hundred other northren, north-western or western points, this line is the one you should take. The track is of the best steel rail, and all the appointments are first-class in every respect. The trains are made up of elegant new Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Coaches, luxurious Day Coaches, and pleasant lounging and smoking-cars. The cars are all equipped with the celebrated Miller Safety Platform, and patent Buffers and Couplings, Westinghouse Safety Air Brakes, and every other appliance that has been devised for the safety of passenger trains. All trains are run by telegraph. In a word, this GREAT LINE has the best and smoothest track, and the most elegant and comfortable equipment of any road in the West, and has no competitor in the country. It is eminently the favorite route with Chicagoans traveling west, north, or northwest, and is acknowledged by the traveling public to be the popular line for all points in Northren Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Dakota, Western Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California and the Pacific Slope.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway leave Chicago as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, Four through trains daily, Pullman cars on night trains.

For Winona and points in Minnesota, One through train daily.

For Dubuque, via Freeport, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Dubuque and La Crosse, via Clinton, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Sioux City and Yankton, Two trains daily. Pullman Cars to Missouri Valley Junction.

For Lake Geneva, Four trains daily.

For Rockford, Sterling, Kenosha, Janesville, and other points, you can have from two to ten trains daily.

Light in Darkness.

I.

O God! our way through darkness leads,
But thine is living light;
Teach us to feel that day succeeds
To each slow-wearing night:
Make us to know, though pain and woe
Beset our mortal lives,
That ill at last in death lies low,
And only God survives.

II.

Too long th' oppressor's iron heel
The saintly brow has pressed;
Too oft the tyrant's murd'rous steel
Has pierced the guiltless breast;
Yet in our sons the seed shall lie,
Till thou shalt bid it thrive,
Of steadfast faith that Wrong shall die,
And only Right survive.

III.

We walk in shadow; thickest walls
Do man from man divide;
Our brothers spurn our tenderest calls,
Our holiest aims deride:
Yet though fell Craft, with fiendish thought
Its subtile web contrives,
Still Falsehood's texture shrinks to naught,
And only Truth survives.

IV.

Wrath clouds our sky; War lifts on high
His flag of crimson stain;
Each monstrous birth o'erspreads the earth
In Battle's gory train:
Yet still we trust in God the Just,
Still keep our faith alive,
That 'neath Thine eye, all Hate shall die,
And only Love survive.

—Horace Greeley.

The temperance reform began and had its early triumphs in this country as a religious movement. It lost its power as it lost its religion. No power but the Holy Spirit will reach and hold some inebriates, and no agency that dispenses with God will sanctify or thoroughly reform man.

The church ought itself to be so effective a temperance agency, as to render secret societies for the purpose needless, and to make all temperance societies only its auxiliaries and instruments. It is time for good men to rally once more to the onset.—Advance.

Masonic Promises.

BY D. B. TURNEY,
Pres. W. V. D. A. of the Methodist church.

"Some promises are, like pie-crust, made to be broken." So says a writer in one of the periodicals of the day. I differ with him in the opinion, although I very cheerfully insist that some promises ought to be broken, and among these I may be permitted to mention Masonic promises.

1. A promise is not binding, when a fulfillment of it would violate a prior and lawful engagement. Every man is under a prior and lawful engagement to account himself worthy of all the rights and privileges of citizenship. He is also under a prior and moral engagement to maintain the authority of God over his conscience, and to conform to the teachings of the Divine Word. If, therefore, Masonic oaths and obligations are found to involve any promise that interferes with the civil and legal oaths of our court-room, in which a promise is always given to reveal "the truth, the whole truth. and nothing but the truth," these Masonic oaths and obligations are invalid and wrong, and no person is under any legal obligations to fulfill any promise which these Masonic obligations exact. A man has no right to part with his liberty. He is under an obligation, in the very compact of citizenship, not to permit the destruction of his liberty. But if he allows himself to be persuaded into promises of blind compliance and concealment, under the delusion that these promises are binding, the power of civil law suffers a fearful impairment. This is particularly true of Freemasonry in its organized capacity. It supercedes and violates all previous engagements, and effectually engenders a complete disregard of civilized law, by assuming that its own oaths and obligations are just as binding as those of our civil law. What is this, if it be not a crime against government? Of course, no promise that violates the requirements of civil law can be at all binding upon any man who is at all acquainted with his rights under the implied compact of citizenship.

2. A promise is not binding, when misrepresentation has been used to secure it. This is a principle of common law. But whenever a person enters any of the hood-winked conclaves of the night, he is assured that what he is about to promise will not interfere with any of his duties arising from any of the relations of life. What can this be called, if it be not termed a misrepresentation used to secure a promise? Anything which separates the husband's interests from the wife's, and gives him secrets to be kept from her, certainly does interefere with the duties arising from the wedded relation, as it puts in peril every sacred obligation of matrimony and frequently renders happiness at the home-fireside an impossibility. But can it be said, with truthfulness, that the promise, if kept, does not interfere with the duties arising from many other relations of life? The relations of citizenship require the open discussion of all measures, and the public knowledge of whatever may influence the body politic; and anything, then, of a pledged concealment of that which a man in civil court or in a church trial might be requested to tell certainly interferes with the duties arising from the civil, political, and ecclesiastical relations of life. It is using misrepresentation to extort a pledge of secrecy from a person, by telling him that the concealment which he may promise will not conflict with any of his life-duties. The probabilities are that the promised concealment will conflict with every duty that is due to himself, to his fellow creatures and to God. When a man has been so unfortunate as to make such a promise, he need not trouble himself to keep the same, for neither the law of God nor the will of man can make any promise binding, if misrepresentation has been used to obtain it. A promise obtained through misrepresentation does not possess any binding force, and it is an honor to break, rather than to keep, such a promise. As the promises exacted in Freemasonry are pre-eminently of this character, there is great propriety in refusing to be bound by them.

3. A promise is not binding, when it has a fraudulent tendency, or when the performance is unlawful. This consideration should be entitled to great weight. The various unimpeachable exposures of Freemasonry have abundantly established the fact, that the promises of the order, and the oaths exacted of those who connect themselves with the order, do have a fraudulent tendency. Freemasonry applauds, sanctions and enjoins the administration and reception of illegal and extra-judicial oaths; and these oaths are stained and baptized with threats and barbarous penalties, which seem designed to school men for the gratification of malignant feelings, teaching retaliation and revenge upon those who refuse to be bound by their pledges of concealment. The barbarous and inhuman nature of its penalties cannot be denied, and the performance of these penalties would be murder or assassination, and in the eye of the law, swift and condign punishment ought to fall upon this terrible impairment of life's security. The very maintaining of each Masonic oath is murderous revenge and that inhuman ferocity which seeks retaliation to the death. Can these corrupting and unauthorized oaths be safely kept? Why, they crush and pulverize manhood; they grind and oppress society; they enable one man to successfully and repeatedly encroach upon the rights of another; they foster licentiousness, and afford dissolute men the means to gratify their depraved lusts. Such oaths and obligations are not binding. It is more dishonest to keep them than to break them; everybody knows that a promise which is of a fraudulent tendency has no authority and is of no moral obligation, and it is equally clear that a promise is not binding, when the performance of it would involve a violation of the requirements of God. Surely, a Masonic promise is invalid in more ways than can be specified in this little article.

4. A promise is not binding, when it involves consequences that justify its nullification. This principle of law is so well established that I need not comment upon it. But will any intelligent man, in this day of light and knowledge, pretend that the obligations taken in Freemasonry are not connected with evil and unlawful consequences? The catalogue of murders and assassinations in consequence of Freemasonry has been so thoroughly established as true, that nobody can deny the evil that the order has accomplished already. The statistics of Gerrit Smith have, I think, sufficiently proved that human life in general is not so safe in a Masonic community as in an un-masonic one. Yet, it is very clear that the extra-judicial oaths of Freemasonry, by a reversal of some of the most important principles of the law of God, work a greater evil to its votaries than its murderers do to society. After as careful an examination as an outsider can give to the subject, I am prepared to say that Freemasonry has no good moral effect. It appeals to the most ignoble and unworthy of human passions—to selfishness, pride, idle curiosity, cunning, desire for display, vanity, vain-gloriousness and undue secretiveness; but it does not encourage those high and noble principles of disinterested love, humanity, faithful research, frankness, desire for truth, consistency, openness and honesty. It is not necessary to argue the point. Masonic promises have led to trouble, in families, in communities, in churches, in governments, and in nations. Numerous violations of law have been traced to this source, and a corrupting effect has been seen in almost every department of society. Yet, as a promise is not binding if it involves circumstances that justify its nullification, every man has a clear right in the eye of God and civil law to repudiate and reveal his Masonic promises, and is perfectly justifiable when he absolves himself from these illegal and extra-judicial oaths. He deserves commendation, and not condemnation, for thus acting. It is a fact that almost every obligation in Freemasonry, if closely scrutinized, will be found to involve consequences that are sufficiently bad to justify its nullification.

5. A promise is not binding, when an adherence to the terms of the promise would involve moral culpability. I suppose it must be conceded that the Bible standard of morality is constantly violated in the requirements of Freemasonry. To instance an example, I may turn to Leviticus v: 4. "Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these." Here a man is guilty and in a state of moral culpability before God, for making a promise under oath concerning any matter that is hidden from him until after the promise of concealment is given. Judged by this rule, the Masonic promises cannot bind. They are wrong, and men are not under even a moral obligation to adhere to them. God has released all of his people from all such promises, and has even made it sinful for any man to thus swear away his moral liberty. A promise under the oath of concealment is an abrogation of the rights of conscience, and manifests a disregard of the authority of God over the human soul. Hence, there cannot be any question about it. The Masonic promises are not to be valued as of any worth, inasmuch as an adherence to the terms of these promises would involve moral culpability—yes, does involve moral culpability, in the eye of God and his church.

6. A promise is not binding, when it fails to commend itself to an enlightened Christian conscience. Whether Masonic promises commend themselves to an enlightened Christian conscience, or whether these Masonic promises merely serve to scatter the seeds of death among some of the professed heirs of a heavenly life, I need not undertake to decide. Every man must be judge of that for himself. But, in view of the illegality of the whole concern, the extra-judicial character and unlawfulness of its oaths, the bloody penalties that are involved, the blasphemous pretentions and pagan-like ceremonies of thet order, it is quite reasonable to find tha Masonic promises do fail to commend themselves to an enlightened Christian conscience. With all of the inculcations of dangerous theology and endorsements of selfishness, found in the fraternity's rituals, staring them in the face, it is a matter of deep regret that professed followers of Christ remain an hour in the net.

7. A promise is not binding when it relates to customs, and usages, and transactions, of which the man who makes the promise is ignorant at the time of giving it. Freemasons will of course kick against the assertion. They know that it would be the death of their institution, if people were brought to see the truth of the fact in its real light. Yet, the statement is true. On no other principle can we account for the passage in Lev. v: 4. which I have already quoted. A man's accountability is in proportion to his knowledge, but not in precise ratio thereto. Ignorance does not excuse a man, yet he is not accountable for more light than he possesses, and of course cannot be bound by a promise which relates to things of which he is ignorant at the time of giving it. Masonic promises are consequently null and void. They amount to nothing. The man who imagines them to have any binding force, shows his own ignorance and exposes his own folly. They have no authority. It was wrong to make them, and it is right to break them. Men must cease to do evil and learn to do well.

8. A promise is not binding, when it is sealed by an unauthorized or extra-judicial penalty. How, then, can we say that Masonic promises are to be regarded? We cannot. If any promises ought to be persistently violated, surely Masonic promises are the ones that ought never to be kept.

BY J. C. GRAHAM.

"By their fruits ye shall know them" is heaven's own perfect law. "Men do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles."

In May, A. D. 1858, or '59, a Mr. R., a country hotel-keeper lost money —nine twenty dollar gold pieces. His suspicions fell upon a Mr. B. and wife, day laborers, as having stolen it. They most persistently denied knowing anything about it. No proof being found of their guilt, and yet a firm belief on the part of R. and a few friends, in their guilt, a scheme was devised.

A Mr. D. trumped up a charge of petty theft against this accused party; had them arrested by deputy sheriff M., and brought before Squire D. for examination. This examination resulted in the acquittal of Mr. B., and the holding for trial, before the court, of Mrs. B. This examination terminated near midnight, and the prisoner woman was turned over to deputy sheriff M. He left this prisoner with her husband to lodge for the rest of the night at Squire D.'s, stating that he would call for her in the morning.

Only about two hours had passed when a party of six men broke into the house, ordered Squire D. to keep his room at the discretion of his own safety, seized the prisoner and her husband, bound them fast, and moved off.

Subsequent developments showed, that this party took these accused people to a wood on Pope Creek, near by, and plied them by turns with "hanging" by a slip-rope over a convenient limb of a walnut tree, drawn and lowered by the muscular force of this mob. At each interval of swinging and choking, they were closely pressed to confess to stealing the nine pieces of gold, which was the objective pursuit of all the proceedings. They both vehemently denied taking the money. Then, with a great show of formality, a grave was dug; the woman separated from her husband a little distance, for the purpose, as they said of "finishing this job." The man was swung up and well choked, and was reported to the wife as dead and buried, and now was her turn if she did not confess the crime charged upon them. She denied it still as if it were her last words.

Thus foiled in their hopes, and daylight coming on, the prisoners were taken to some distance away from this ground of hanging, were blindfolded and hands tied, and so left while the mob posse made their exit. Still later developments showed that this deputy sheriff M., who was in lawful custody of this woman prisoner at Squire D.'s, and who should have protected her from violence, was himself the leader of this mob. Proof of his guilt accumulated thick and fast, for instead of coming for his prisoner the next morning as he had agreed, he was seen trailing the buggy track that had carried the captives from the Squire's to the hanging ground, across the prairie without a road, in search of his pocket-book containing his official paper, which he had lost in the melee of capture and hanging. This with many other circumstances, added to the positive testimony of Mr. B. and his wife, settled the guilt of mobbing a lawful prisoner of officer M.'s, deputy sheriff of Mercer county, Ill.

Now for our sequel. Deputy sheriff M. and his comrades were arrested and committed, and held to bail for their appearance at Circuit Court. His honor, Judge T. was a Freemason. State's Attorney S., we have reason to believe was a Mason. Ex-deputy sheriff criminal M. was a Mason.—Now adherents of Freemasonry are profuse in their devotion to the laws of the land, wherever their lot may be cast; always seeking the law and order and peace of the State and community where they live; always abhorring crime; and would punish crime in a brother as soon as in any one else, etc., etc. Now these "glittering generalities" have a high-sounding tone, but when we read the Master Mason's obligations: "Furthermore do I promise and swear that a Master Mason's secrets, committed to me as such, I knowing them to be such, shall remain as inviolable in my breast, as in his own, murder and treason excepted, and they left to my own election," we must confess that for the life of us we cannot see how that obligation can be kept, in a right discharge of duties incumbent on every good citizen in preserving the peace and punishing crime. Further developments, on the authority of a bail-house man, T. goes to show a private meeting to which he was summoned. He reports Ex-deputy prisoner M., Prosecuting State's Attorney, S., and his honor, Judge T., were the leading spirits of that meeting. Subject—how to get rid of the two prosecuting witnesses, Mr. B. and his wife; "for," in the words of the State's Attorney, S., "they must be got rid of, or the ex-deputy M. and his comrades would go to the State's prison as sure as hell." Here are three Master Masons, each occupying very important relations to law and order in Mercer county, Ill; each belonging to that highly eulogized craft and brotherhood, descended from that wisest of men, Solomon, banded together by bands "stronger than death," as they are ready to let us always know, in secret meeting with criminal parties and bondsmen interested, devising means to put aside the only eye-witnesses of a most shameful and brutal outrage on civil citizens and the community in general, and thus prevent the just penalties of the law from being visited on these outlaw members of their brotherhood.

Suffice it to say, in conclusion, that the witnesses disappeared, and the prosecution failed for want of proof, though the implicator, deputy M., died of sheer mortification and shame, for it killed his popularity. Also, report says that Mr. R. found his twenty-dollar gold pieces in the pocket of some laid-off clothing in his own house, and forgotten, and had not been stolen at all.

Can any government long endure that gives legal sanction to such secret organizations as Freemasonry? Can any church be of any spiritual benefit to a degenerate world, that gives sanction to such institutions by affiliation of members and ministers, without rebuke or discipline? Are the lives, liberties and fortunes of any people safe with such organized banditti everywhere in their midst; holding their midnight onclaves with armed guards at their doors in times of profound peace and quiet, and in a land where all meetings not contrary to right morals and civility, may always be held openly? Can the people never see nor learn that the very manner of such conclave meetings condemn them? O how long will it take Christian America to learn the simplest of duties that she owes to God, to humanity, and to free government—to suppress by positive law, these secret organizations as contraband to good order of society, as banditti against the laws of the land?

A Short Sermon from a Masonic Text.

BY REV. G. H. VARCE.

"May nothing but the charms of beauty bring down the perpendicular uprightness of a Mason."

The above quotation I have taken from a brace of fourteen toasts published in "The Freemason," of April, 1873.

Now if words mean anything, even though they are somewhat covertly expressed, as by Masons, then those of the above quotation have their genuine significance, which I desire to set afloat that many may read and then beware of the originators of all such sentiments. The "charms of beauty," then, signify all the fair daughters of the human family, Master Mason's wives and daughters excepted. And what is implied of them as above? Why, that they may "bring down" the perpendicular uprightness of a Mason. The words "perpendicular uprightness" express no more than ordinary human decency, and to "bring down" that quality in a Freemason is no great feat to perform. Is proof wanted? Here then. Freemasons pledge themselves not to violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife or daughter, knowing them to be such. This opens our eyes, and we conclude that all women not designated as above must be on the alert when Masons are around. To "bring down" as above rendered, literally is to allow full scope of freedom to the most brutal passions which have been ingendered and lie smouldering for egress from within the Masonic breast. From the foregoing, what can be the most plausible construction for such a text? The following we affirm must be the sum and substance, to wit: The brutal passions of a Freemason are to be restrained or held in check by a moderate supply of human decency and this only when in the presence of a Master Mason's wife or daughter. All other ladies are considered by Masons as those who have no qualifying restrictions of a moral nature resting upon them, hence free to assault as circumstances may give occasion. What an ennobling institution Freemasonry is! What rare virtues are inculcated within its shaded borders! How grand, how sublime its workings! If Masonry could claim such high antiquity one would be apt to consider those Freemasons who were stricken with blindness while hanging about Lot's door in Sodom. May the Lord have mercy upon those who today are but a trifle, if any better than those of ancient days, who practiced sodomy and were destroyed off the face of the earth.

GRANGERS AND RAILROADS.

The April number of the North American Review contains an article by Charles Francis Adams, jr., on the rise and progress of the granger movement. It treats this phenomenal phase of politics as already upon the decline, and assumes that the time has already come to consider its causes and effects, the lessons that may be learned from it, and the good or evil which it is to bring forth. The two hypotheses upon which the movement was founded are stated and disposed of with clearness and justice. The first refers to the general belief of the Western farmers that the railroads were charging an exorbitant price for the transmission of their produce to the seaboard. The popular statement that it took four bushels of wheat to carry one to market was hastily accepted as indicating inordinate greed and dishonesty in the carriers, and especial hardship to the producer. The farmers entirely disregarded the relation of bulk and distance to price, and seemed to forget that it always cost more to carry a load of cord-wood across the State than the wood was worth. If there were no railroads corn could only be wagoned 165 miles before the expense of transportation would equal its entire value. The maligned corporations which the granger regards as the bane of his existence, carry his corn ten times as far. The truth to which the farmers during this period of excitement refused to listen is that there is a limit, shifting according to circumstances, to the distance to which their produce can be carried so as to leave them a profit; and this limit depends upon the state of trade, and not upon the caprice of corporations.

The other fallacy of all the granger speeches is that which assumes that the extortionate charges of railroads arise from the watering of stock. The Illinois grangers, for instance, contend that the railroad debt inflation of that State amounts to $15,000 per mile. There are over 13,000 miles of railroad in the State, and the result, at an interest of eight per cent. on the fictitious capital forms a very distressing sum to be taken directly out of the pocket of the farmer. But the statistical tables of the Illinois Commissioners show that this state of things is purely imaginary. The aggregate cost of construction of all the roads in the State is $636,000,000, on which the net earnings reported are $30,570,000,—less than 5 per cent. If we deduct the sum of $15,000 a mile for the "fictitious securities," the capital account will be cut down to $434,000,000, and upon this the net earnings are only seven per cent. This grievance of the farmers, or rather of their self-appointed spokesmen, thus vanishes into mist. A still stronger showing is made of the moderate amount of net earnings derived from the railroads of Wisconsin, Minnesota and Kansas. Evaporating the utmost conceivable quantity of water from the stock of the roads of those States, they are shown to be earning much less than the ordinary interest of money employed there in other branches of business.

Mr. Adams having considered the two false hypotheses upon which the movement was based, admits two real causes of discontent—the one excessive competition, and the other the bad manners of the railway employes. We think the second was introduced for the sake of symmetry and not founded on fact. In a scene he describes, if the platform had been full of grangers when the baggageman refused to carry a gentleman's portmanteau, they would have been far more amused than indignant. The first mentioned cause that of excessive competition, with its consequent inequalities of tariff and combinations of competing lines, is of itself enough to account for all the evils referred to. The often-cited case of the contrast between the competing lines from London to the Channel and the single line from the Channel to Brussels is a clear illustration of this matter. The two English lines have come under the same control and charge double the rates in force on the Belgian road. The result is that the English roads pay less than four per cent. on their capital, while the Belgian has almost paid for itself in full. We have been building railroads with more energy and speed than careful calculation of their necessity or prospects of success. The consequence is this rapid and continual alternation of ruinous competition, in the course of which passengers and freight are carried for next to nothing, and close combinations, by which the railroads try to recover some of the money they have lost in such contests. The remedy of these evils is only to be found in the healing processes of time. We all hope the country will grow up to all its railroads. If it does not, the superfluous railroads will perish and the people who own them must suffer for their lack of judgment. As to those forms of grangerism which lead to defeating just judges for legal opinions, to passing laws of practical confiscation, to demanding that Congress shall build free railroads from everywhere to everywhere else, we shall be glad to believe all this a passing folly, not capable of permanence among a law-abiding people like the Americans.—N. Y. Tribune.

Daniel Webster on Sabbath Schools.

MARSHFIELD, June 15, 1852.

PROFESSOR PEASE:

Dear Sir:—I have received your very able and interesting annual report of the condition of the New York Sabbath-School Association, and read it with great pleasure and instruction. It is gratifying, very gratifying, to learn that in a city, where vice and immorality run riot with impunity, a few humble Christians have devoted their time and energies to the cause of religion; and I fervently pray that your labors may be crowned with success.

The Sabbath-school is one of the great institutions of the day. It leads our youth in the path of truth and morality, and makes them good men and useful citizens. As a school of religious instruction it is of inestimable value. As a civil institution it is priceless. It has done more to preserve our liberties than grave statesmen and armed soldiers. Let it then be fostered and preserved until the end of time.

I once defended a man charged with the awful crime of murder. At the conclusion of the trial I asked him what could have induced him to stain his hands with the blood of a fellow-being. Turning his blood-shot eyes full upon me, he replied:

"Mr. Webster, in my youth I spent the holy Sabbath in evil amusements instead of frequenting the house of prayer and praise."

Could we go back to the early years of all hardened criminals, I believe, yes, firmly believe, that their subsequent crimes might thus be traced back to the neglect of youthful, religious instruction.

Many years ago I spent a Sabbath with Thomas Jefferson at his residence in Virginia. It was in the month of June and the weather was delightful. While engaged in discussing the beauties of the Bible, the sound of a bell broke upon our ears. Turning to the sage of Monticello, I remarked,

"How sweetly, how very sweetly, sounds that Sabbath bell!"

The distinguished statesman for a moment seemed lost in thought, and then replied, "Yes! my dear Webster, yes, it melts the heart; it calms our passions, and makes us boys again."

Here I observed that man was an animal formed for religious worship; and that notwithstanding all the sophistry of Epicurus, Lucretius and Voltaire, the Scriptures stood upon a rock as firm, as unmovable as truth itself; that man, in his purer, loftier breathings, turned the mental eye towards immortality; and that the poet only echoed the general sentiment of our nature in saying,

> "The soul, secure in her existence, smiles
> At the drawn dagger, and defies its point."

Mr. Jefferson fully concurred in this opinion, and observes that the tendency of the American mind was in a different direction; and that the Sunday-schools (he did not use our more correct word Sabbath) presented the only legitimate means under the constitution of avoiding the rock on which the French Republic was wrecked.

"Burke," said he, "never uttered a more important truth than when he exclaimed, that a religious education was the cheap defense of nations. Raikes has done more for our country than the present generation will acknowledge. Perhaps when I am cold he will obtain his reward. I hope so. I earnestly hope so. I am considered, Mr. Webster, to have little religion; but now is not the time to correct errors of this sort. I have always said, and always will say, that the studious perusal of the sacred volume will make better citizens, better fathers, and better husbands. Of the distinguished Raikes he was claret et venerabile nomen.

I took the liberty of saying that I found more pleasure in Hebrew poetry than in the best productions of Greece and Rome; that the "harp upon the willows of Babylon" had charms for me beyond anything in the numbers of the blind man of Smyrna. I then turned to Jeremiah (there was a fine folio of the Scriptures before me of 1458) and read aloud some of those sublime passages that used to delight me on my father's knee.

But I fear, my dear friend, I shall tire you with my prolix account of what was a pleasant Sabbath, spent in the company of one who has filled a very large space in our political and literary annals.

Thanking you for your report, and heartily concurring with you in the truth of your quotation that "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

I remain, with high regard, your friend,

DANIEL WEBSTER.

SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,

Held at Pittsburgh, Pa., June 8th to 10th.

FULL REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS—PRELIMINARY MEETING—BUSINESS SESSIONS—REPORTS—DISCUSSIONS ETC.

In May of 1868 a new thing was instituted under the sun in the city of Pittsburgh; and, sated as Americans are with novelties, a new organization claiming to be national, having for its object the overthrow of the secret lodges which were already found in every avenue of power, ecclesiastical and civil, was an attraction for the time. In the seven years since the orders have found the new association possessed of vitality and moral force, and have about exhausted their tactics of ignoring, abusing and insulting the new reform. Thus after seven years the association has revisited its birth-place with numerous signs of Divine favor on its mission.

PRELIMINARY MEETING.

In accordance with a convenient custom, the delegates arriving early met in Library Hall for a season of prayer, praise and encouraging words. The Spirit of God was manifest and the two or three score present had great freedom in the exercises. After a season of prayer and song a brother spoke at some length of the goodness of God in conducting this reform, and that we have no wisdom or strength aside from him.

Bro. Auten gave a very earnest account of his attendance on a holiness meeting in Ohio, of the blessing he experienced there and the comfort and hope he had in the work of this reform. He attended the meeting of the political committee in Chicago after the Oberlin Convention and became pleasantly acquainted with some of the workers in the cause there.

Bro. Travis suggested the need of more definiteness in prayer for our work. He thought we should have some plan for work in mind that our faith might also be exercised upon it.

Elder Barlow seconded the thought and suggested that the experience of our lecturers would help to a better understanding of the work and its necessities.

Pres. Blanchard spoke of some features of the work in his experience; of the Illinois Congregational Association and its testimony and weak faith; of the remarkable renunciation of Mr. Edmond Ronayne, who one year ago was marching at the head of a Chicago lodge in the Masonic procession at the laying of the Custom-House corner-stone.

Elder Baird gave an account of his feelings while persecuted by Masonry in court, and of his losses by the management of the lodge.

Bro. Travis spoke of a Mason in Iowa who one year ago wanted to debate the subject, but failed to meet his appointment. He lately made his maiden speech against the lodge. A lawyer of Tipton, Iowa, brought out the subject very plainly in court. He referred to the public belief that Masonry influenced judicial decisions, and to the case in hand as giving pretext for such suspicion. He appealed to the Masons on the jury in open court to leave their obligation aside and give a fair verdict. His plea had the proper effect.

Bro. Kiggins said there were numerous seceders in Indiana. The grange had gone down wonderfully; and in that State the lodge don't talk about eggs any more.

Bro. Geo. W. Clark said he hoped to live to see secret societies destroyed. He had feared when speaking against slavery that he should not live to see the end of that curse; he felt that if he did he should feel like old Simeon, but when it came he thought he would like to live a little longer and see the temperance cause and the anti-secret cause prevail. He then sang with his accustomed fervor "Speak and leave the rest to God."

Bro. Hinman saw hope in the fact that the men and women in this work were striving to abide in Christ and not to depend on any earthly power. In Africa the white men who carried weapons for protection were always in a quarrel; those who did not seldom had trouble even among savage cannibals.

Bishop Edwards said he was present unexpectedly. He thought Western men knew little of the apathy at the East on this question. We must prevail through prayer.

Elder Barlow found much to encourage him in New York State. Even the opposition is encouraging. The lodge is crowding into the churches and against them. All East of Syracuse seems to be in great darkness on the subject. The lodge is like a turtle covered by its shell, put the coals of truth on its back and out come feet and head and away it travels, and the more these appendages appear the more the people don't like the institution.

Dr. Cook of Indiana said the Deputy Grand Master of Odd-fellows in Ohio told him that Odd-fellowship was a great humbug. He had tried to maintain charges against an Odd-fellow who had committed murder, but could not muster moral force enough in the lodges of Delaware county to even suspend him. The Knights Templar of Indiana are required to arm at an expense of $100 each. Thousands of these armed men parade in public.

OPENING SESSION.

At 7–30 in the evening the delegates assembled in Library Hall, and shortly afterward Rev. B. T. Roberts of Rochester, N. Y., the President, called to order. He introduced Prof. Geo. W. Clark of Danville, N. Y., who led the exercises of the evening in the appropriate song, "Where there's a Will there's a Way." T. Cooper, D. D., of Allegheny City, then implored the Divine favor upon the Convention. The President introduced Rev. David R. Kerr, D. D, editor of the United Presbyterian, who delivered the address of welcome to the delegates.

WELCOMING ADDRESS.

Mr. President and Delegates of the Convention:—There has been placed upon me the pleasant duty of welcoming you to our city and the hospitality of our homes. I congratulate you upon assembling in a cause and at a time that should make you doubly welcome among us; welcome all the more because you come together with the solemn earnestness of men moved by enlightened and conscientious convictions of important and pressing duty. Aims that are open and honorable, that appeal to the intelligence and moral sense of men do not need the silly arts by which popular favor is sometimes sought for objects that require concealment.

In this respect your meeting is in marked contrast with one we had here about two weeks since. I suppose you have heard of the Knights Templar, a high order of the nobility of Freemasonry. They are said to do valiant deeds, but as they are done back of closed doors, no one outside knows what they are. All they show in public are the insignia of their rank and valor. The most remarkable thing about them is the rapid and wonderful metamorphoses they undergo. One day they are but plebeians like ourselves on the streets, or in the shops, or in third or fourth rank of the various professions; the next they are sabered Knights; and the next they are plebeians again. It was in the panoply of their knighthood, with their plumes and glittering swords they recently exhibited themselves here. Of course, care had been taken to have our city appear as very much honored by such a presence. Our streets were made to fairly flutter with welcomes. There were flags from the windows, placards at the doors and bunting stretched across the streets with all manner of adulatory inscriptions, all to have us reminded of the antiquity, nobility and grandeur of their order. The most striking to us were some of the religious mottoes. One of them, not in vulgar English either, but in good old Latin, was Spes mea in Deo est—my hope is in God—a very strange declaration for men who could take part in, or in any way countenance the cabalistic jargon and impious profanity of some of their ceremonies in which they engaged. Another motto was In hoc signo vinces, the memorable words which Constantine claimed to have seen in the heavens on the eve of one of his great battles. That I suppose was to indicate, not only the antiquity, but the Christianity of the order. So far as antiquity is concerned, it was modest. It was considerably short of running back as far as Solomon, to whom they sometimes take us. But it was the Christianity implied that put us most on our reflections. To commend themselves to all religions, to give no offense to Jew, or Mohammedan, or pagan, these men will not allow even the name of Christ in their religious ritual. How do they come to put such a motto on their banners? How expect to conquer by the sign of his cross whom they dare not name! And then, what was there in the exhibition they made of themselves, not only in the profanation of religious rites, but in the banqueting and revelry with which they closed their celebration, that accorded with the language of that motto? There is something very strange in all this. What does it mean? What does all their pomp and parade mean. Was it a huge frolic, with the added ridiculousness of being played by grown-up boys? some of them with wives and children at home, and years enough to make them serious and self-respectful! That would be the most charitable view, absurd and laughable as it would make the whole thing appear.

But it was more than that. In their marching, their playing soldier as they play religion, they expect their most potent influence in strengtheniug themselves. If the youth of the country are to be saved from being so allured and entangled, there must be more enlightenment in respect to the essential immorality of all such orders, and more warning of the evils they bring on society, religion and all the best interests of man. No doubt thousands of our youth are drawn into such associations not knowing what they do.

Enlightenment and warning is the work to be done. Not denunciation of the individuals connected with these orders, but an exposure of the false pretenses and essential immorality of all such associations. They claim to be benevolent associations. Let it be shown that what they call benevolence is in reality the most odious form of selfishness. They do not bind themselves as Christianity requires, to do good unto all men as they have opportunity, but to take care of each other, not merely in relief of suffering, but on all issues in which they may be in conflict with those not of their fraternity, and as such they are in reality but an oath-bound conspiracy against all the world outside of their order.

And in respect to the oaths by which they bind themselves, let it be put before the public mind that no man can in good conscience take any of them; not merely such as involve the more horrid imprecations, binding them to what they cannot rightfully either do or endure. There is profanity of the oath in the simplest form of it by which they are initiated. How can any man in good conscience swear to keep secret what, for anything he then knows, ought to be exposed? How can any man in good conscience swear to obey a code of laws yet unknown to him, and what, for anything he knows, may be in conflict with the law of God? Such oaths are in their very nature essentially immoral. It is amazing that any honest man can take them. That any Christian man feels at liberty to take them is utterly incomprehensible.

Mr. Chairman: In sincere and honest conviction of the importance of your movement, profound respect for the high moral tone of it, I can and do most heartily welcome you here, fully believing that good will result from your deliberations and proceedings to the interests of man, the honor of God's Law and the glory of His name.

President Roberts responded in behalf of the Convention as follows:

PRESIDENT ROBERT'S RESPONSE.

Citizens of Pittsburgh: We have returned again to the birthplace of our Association. Seven years ago our first National convention was held here in your city. We do not come with any bantering or display, but we appeal to the conscience, the judgment, the reason, to the common sense of the people in behalf of our cause. Many of the members of this convention are God-fearing men who were once heart and soul engaged in the anti-slavery cause. We labored then to free the colored man, and having succeeded we are now endeavoring to perform a similar office for the white man, and free him from the servitude of oath-bound secret societies. We make no war on individual Masons or Odd-fellows, but their institutions. The work before us is a great one; and the necessity for this convention is shown by the large number of secret societies which have grown up all over the land, and the most powerful of which is the Masonic order. This organization was originally nothing but a trade's union of stone masons, but about one hundred and fifty years ago it was turned into a speculative organization. Their claim for a more ancient date is but like their spectacular display. We now have trade's unions in every branch of industry, and even the farmers have gone into what they call the granger's order. We think these secret orders potent for evil, and that we should do all we can to enlighten the people regarding these societies, and to abolish and destroy all such institutions. While they differ among themselves in some particulars, yet they are generally similar. They are all based upon selfishness, and they have other traits in common. They interfere with man's personal freedom while our declaration of independence says that all men shall enjoy not only life and liberty, but the pursuit of happiness. These societies however, place restrictions upon the liberties of their members. God has ordained man to work, but they step between man and his God-given right, and say he shall not labor only under certain conditions and restrictions.

The eastern part of your own great State has been in a condition of a semi-revolt for some time past. Men there have undertaken to deny to others the right to labor at such wages as they may choose. It is only a few days since that a number of men were killed by these secret societies, because they endeavored to earn an honest livlihood for themselves and their families, untrammeled by them. I do not fear contradiction when I assert that men would not stand from the law of the land what they do from these secret orders. What do you suppose would be the result if the law attempted to impose the restraints regarding labor which these orders do? The answer will readily recur to every mind. There would be a rebellion immediately. These societies interfere also very largely with all the business interests of the country. There appears to be a want of prosperity that can not be accounted for. We have the elements of prosperity, harvests are abundant, and money is plenty, and yet there appears to be a general stagnation; what is the reason? Why, these secret societies, combinations and conspiracies interfere and create disturbance and disquiet in business circles. They have brought about an artificial state of things which paralyzes industry, disorganizes the law of supply and demand, and very seriously interferes with the business of the country. The New York Times recently stated that the laboring men in that city did not average more than one hundred and twenty days in a year. This is one of the evil results of the trade unions to which many of them belong. Inasmuch as man is ordained to labor and physically fitted for it, I claim that it would be better for him to work three hundred days in a year at fifty cents a day than one hundred and twenty days at $2.25 a day.

Another decidedly objectionable feature of some of these societies is that they are treasonable, and assume functions which rightfully belong to the government. They enact laws and impose penalties which the members feel bound to obey. This is a serious interference with civil authority which ought not to be tolerated. These laws largely interfere with the administration of justice. None but a civil magistrate should have power to administer oaths, but when these men in a private capacity usurp this authority, it is a serious interference with the administration of justice. I will relate an instance: Not long since I discovered that I was losing letters and money from the postoffice. I informed the Post-office Department at Washington of the facts of the case and they sent on a detective to work up the affair. He soon detected the thief, in fact caught him in the very act of stealing. The man was tried, convicted and senteneed, not to the penitentiary or to the jail, but to one year in the County Workhouse. After several months imprisonment he was pardoned by the President. He now fills a position in the Detroit Custom House; and I understand that before he was convicted of stealing from me he had been found guilty two or three times of petty larceny. He was a Mason and it was through their influence that he was liberated.

The Masonic order in this country claim a membership of five hundred thousand. They are all armed and engage in military drill. What does it mean? The drill is not for governmental purposes. What then is it for? Your papers boasted of it on the occasion of the recent display in this city, and so did the journals of New York city on a later occasion. I say there is danger in that. Suppose one of our great railroad Presidents should be Grand King of the Sir Knights and should desire to overthrow our existing form of government and establish a monarchy, with himself at the head of it. What is there to prevent him, with his vast net work of railways and half a million of armed men at his back? I say there is something treasonable in the very act of assuming such power without legal control. Rome lost her liberty by a far less body of men.

Then the influence of these orders on religion is great and disastrous. Our religion is becoming emasculated by them. They studiously reject Christ from their system and show false lights to the troubled mariner on life's ocean. In whatever light we may view them they are dangerous and should be put down. We are used to working with minorities—and small ones, too; but we are determined to warn the people of this danger, to rescue young men from the baleful power of the secret lodges.

At the close of Pres. Roberts; remarks, the General Agent, J. P. Stoddard, stated that some necessary items of business should be attended to at this session and moved an Enrollment Committee, nominating Rev. D. Hart of Nevada, O., and Rev. J. S. Speer of Cannonsburg, Pa.

The nominations were confirmed by vote. A Business Committee was also nominated and elected as follows:

A. M. Milligan, D. D., Alegheny City, Pa.; Elder A. L. Post, Montrose, Pa.; and Rev. H. Cogswell, Mansfield, Ohio.

Prof. J. R. W. Sloane of Allegheny City, Pa., was then called upon by the President for an address. This, like all his previous efforts at the anniversaries of the Association, was highly appreciated by the large audience for its candor, logic and eloquence. At the close of Prof. Sloane's address George W. Clark, by request, sang an inspiring song, "One Hundred Years Hence," which was so highly appreciated by the audience that he was called on again and responded in his usual charming style.

The exercises were listened to by a large audience among whom it was reported were a number of lodgemen. After benediction the Convention adjourned.

Wednesday, June 9th.

MORNING SESSION.

The usual morning prayer meeting began the exercises of the day. It was continued until after the appointed hour for business with an earnest spirit.

The first item of business called for by Pres. Roberts was the report of the Enrollment Committee, who had partially completed their work and reported 76 names. The reports of the Treasurer, General Agent and Corresponding Secretary followed. Rev. J. Levington reported that he had traveled and preached in seven States; had delivered 232 lectures and sermons; had received for his labor $737.26, and expended in traveling $182 35.

At the conclusion of these reports Mr. Levington presented a series of resolutions emphatically denying a statement embodied in the report of the proceedings of the Syracuse Anniversary published in the Cynosure as follows:

"A motion was made by Mr. Merrick, of Syracuse, to appoint Rev. John Levington 'a National Lecturer like Mr. Stoddard.' Mr. Levington remarked that for various reasons he had decided to leave the lecture field unless so appointed by the Convention. This motion passed after an effort to refer to the Executive Committee, over a considerable negative vote. This vote was evidently a mistake, as the constitution provides for but one lecturer at large."

Mr. Levington pronounced this statement a slander upon him and spoke at some length and with great warmth and bitter personality.

Pres. J. Blanchard remarked upon the resolutions that they embraced too much, and an acknowledgement of the brother's services was all the Convention could do, and moved to refer the resolutions to the Business Committee which was voted.

The discussion was here interrupted by J. P. Stoddard who asked the privelege of announcing the receipt of a letter from a friend in the west who sent word that he would increase his previous subscription to the Publishing House of $300 to $1,000. The announcement was received with applause, and Dr. S. L. Cook of Indiana said that the friends of Noble county whom he represented were heartily in sympathy with this work and authorized him to say they would do their share to secure the home for the reform.

A motion by Pres. Blanchard, that the Enrollment committee be instructed to take the names of all persons in sympathy with the Convention, and present to participate in it, was adopted. The following committees were also elected:

On Nominations: Dr. Wm. Wishart, Mansfield, O.; Rev. A. L. Post, Montrose, Pa.; Rev. Joseph Travis, Waterloo, Iowa.

On Finance: Pres. J. Blanchard, Aaron Floyd of Pittsburgh; Rev. Geo. Ormond of Allegheny City; Rev. T. P. Stevenson of Philadelphia; Rev. D. Yant of Bolivar, O.

On Publications: Ezra A. Cook; G. W. Needels of Albany, Mo.; Rev. S. Collins, Pittsburgh; Rev. Milton Wright of Dayton; Rev. L. N. Stratton of Syracuse.

On Correspondence: Prof. C. A. Blanchard and Jonathan Berry, Esq.

On Resolutions and Address: J. R. W. Sloane, Rev. Woodruff Post and Rev. B. T. Roberts.

Another subscription of $50 to the Publishing House was here announced, amid enthusiasm, from a friend present in the meeting.

The Business Committee here reported by Rev. H. Cogswell the following recommendation:

WHEREAS, persons in attendance upon this Association from different States of the Union desire an opportunity to meet and discuss the question of political action, therefore your committee recommend as follows:

Resolved, That this Association when at adjournment this forenoon adjourn over to 7:30 this evening, giving the afternoon to such meeting and discussion.

Rev. Milton Wright, editor of the Religious Telescope, Dayton, O., then addressed the Convention on Secret Societies Revealed, and their own testimony to the fact. The address was excellent in style and argument, and received frequent applause and earnest attention throughout. Adjournment was then had, after benediction, till evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The exercises of the evening were appropriately led in prayer by Rev. Woodruff Post, of Rochester, a pioneer in the reform, and one who has greatly suffered in Christlike meekness and humility from the attacks of the lodge through false brethren in his ministerial conference.

The first address was by Rev. G. T. H. Meiser, of Youngstown, O., in German. A large number of his own nationality, members of the several Lutheran churches in the city, were attracted to the Hall by the announcement of Mr. Meiser's address; to them and the members of the Convention to whom it was intelligible, it seemed to be of absorbing interest; and the earnest manner of the speaker and his fine voice kept all others interested to the close. A brief abstract, all we are able to present is as follows:

REV. G. T. H. MEISER'S ADDRESS.

To those who did not know him he would say he was a Lutheran clergyman. It will be known that God in his holy word says that he was the only living God. He (the speaker) presumed it would be asked how he knew of secret societies when he had never been a member of any. He knew it was not against law to find out. He knew their principles originated from evil. The question was whether a man who professed Christianity could join a secret order. He thought not, as it interfered with religion. He thought that no society should be encouraged that held its sessions in secret. No man had a right to join a secret society whose designs he could not reveal to his wife and children. It was dishonorable. He was cursed. All the processions and banners of secret societies were but sham shows, and he could not see how a Christian could join such an order. A man knew he was sinning when he joined a lodge and leaves his family to attend its sessions. This was un-Christian. All knew that the lodges sang and had ceremonies. Those were mockeries of religion. There was only one God, and that was the Father, Son and Holy Ghost. This is the God of Nature and the only one to be worshipped. No secret affinity is to be sought other than him. No Christian, he said, could love Christ and belong to a secret lodge. This was building up a false god. He thought they were selfish, these secret orders, for they only distributed their alms among themselves. This was not according to Scripture, which taught to give to all. No secret society had a right to make light of the Divinity. What God had made should not be desecrated, for he gave his only begotten Son to die for us—to save our souls. Therefore, for his mercy we should love and obey him. All Christians should love and worship him. He did not think Masonry had an ancient origin, and it had no right to claim it. It did not make good men. It injured the cause of Christianity. A great deal is paid into the lodges, but little is taken out. He thought if all men joined the church there would be no need of joining a lodge. The former was of benefit in the hereafter, while the latter injured its followers.

At the close of this address Prof. Clark responded to a call for a song and was not allowed to retire until he had seconded the first effort with a song whose melody and words took the listeners back to the days of the slave driver with a wonderful power of realization and calling out hearty applause.

In behalf of the Finance Committee, Prof. C. A. Blanchard then introduced the subject of expenses and contributions in an earnest and effective manner as the collection of $105 then taken bore witness. Before the work of the evening could be resumed Prof. Clark was called out again, and never unprepared, he sang with fine effect the beautiful words and melody, "If I were a Voice."

Pres. J. Blanchard was then introduced and delivered an address on "Freemasonry a Four-fold Conspiracy," introducing it by a few interesting remarks on the experiences of the abolition cause years ago, and his personal participation in that renowned and now glorious struggle in the city of Pittsburgh. This address occupied the rest of the evening and the exercises were pleasantly closed with another song by Mr. Clark, "The Promised Land To-morrow," the announcement for work for the morrow by the business committee, and the benediction.

Thursday, June 10th.

MORNING SESSION.

The morning prayer-meeting was continued with an earnest spirit until the full hour for business had arrived. President Roberts called to order, and the first item after the minutes was the report of the Committee on Nominations by Dr. Wishart, which was read and adopted as follows:

For President; REV. DAVID R. KERR, D. D., of Pittsburgh.

Vice-Presidents: Maryland, Bishop David Edwards; Ohio, Rev. Henry Cogswell; New York, Rev. Woodruff Post; Connecticut, J. A. Conant; Kentucky, Rev. A. M. Black, D. D.; Indiana, Dr. S. L. Cook; Illinois, Rev. I. A. Hart; Iowa, Rev. James Hankins; (the following vice-presidents were afterwards added:) Pennsylvania, Rev. S. Collins; Michigan, Rev. J. Levington; Massachusetts, Rev. H. T. Cheever; Vermont, Gen. J. W. Phelps; New Hampshire, Robert Weir; Mississippi, Rev. S. C. Feemster, Missouri, G. W. Needels; Kansas, Rev. Robert Loggan; Wisconsin, Prof. J. W. Wood; Minnesota, B. M. Cravath.

Secretaries: Rev. J. S. Speer of Cannonsburg, Pa., and H. L. Kellogg of Chicago.

This report was ready a day before, and but for the interference of adjournment for political meeting in the afternoon, should have been presented. Unfortunately even now, when on the last day of the Convention it was called up, the President elect was necessarily absent at court. Providentially, however, Bishop Edwards of Baltimore was at hand and resumed the place he had so well occupied as moderator of the first National Convention held seven years ago in Pittsburgh. The congruity of the circumstances was marked by the members present. The Bishop presided during the remainder of the Convention.

The Enrollment Committee reported through Rev. J. S. Speer 199 delegates (four names were added afterwards making 203) from twelve different States and ten religious denominations.

The Committee on Correspondence reported by C. A. Blanchard letters received from Gen. J. W. Phelps of Vermont, Rev. N. R. Luce of Indiana, Rev. George Clark of Ohio, and Isaac Preston, Esq., of Illinois. These letters were voted to be printed in the Christian Cynosure as soon as convenient.

Rev. A. H. Springstein of Michigan was added to the committee of Enrollment, releasing Bro. Speer for Secretary's duties.

The Committee on Publications reported by Ezra A. Cook the following which, after thorough discussion were adopted without change:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLICATIONS.

WHEREAS, the public press is everywhere acknowledged as a mighty power for good or evil, and

WHEREAS, the candid discussion of the principles underlying our reform is the thing most imperatively needed to open the eyes of the public to its importance,

We hereby recommend the appointment of a committee which may be called The Popular Discussion Committee of the National Christian Association, to be composed of men prominent in reform, who shall select a score or more of topics bearing on secret societies, the recognition of God in the Constitution of the Union, Temperance, (particularly the question of secret and open temperance societies), the Bible in schools and kindred subjects, and that a list of these topics be sent to a large number of persons of candor, ability and influence, from whom we might reasonably expect a favorable response, with a circular briefly setting forth the objects of the National Christian Association and soliciting articles from them on one or more of these topics; stating in the circular the papers that desire articles for publication on these subjects; the aim being to have these articles appear in fifty to five hundred papers at the same time.

We respectfully suggest as a part of this Popular Discussion Committee the following persons: Hon. J. B. Walker, Wheaton, Ill.; Philo Carpenter, Esq., Chicago; Joseph T. Cooper, D. D., Allegheny, Pa.; Pres. J. B. Helwig, Springfield, Ohio.

We commend to the especial attention of this convention the great importance of the increased circulation of the official organ of this Association as a fundamental necessity to this reform, and demanding the immediate, undivided support of the friends of the reform at this time, to prevent the necessity of reducing its size to bring the expenses within the receipts, as over fourteen hundred dollars less than the cash expenses of the paper have been received during the fourteen months since its enlargement.

[The following from the Grand Master of Mississippi will interest our readers. It shows just how long Masonic promises of charity are good in the lodge market.]

Non-affiliated Masons.

The constant application of non-affiliated Masons or their dependents to the Masonic relief boards and lodges of the country, and the many letters of inquiry as to what is right to do when they apply for relief, call for an expression on our part full and explicit. One-half of the applications made for relief in this country are from non-affiliates or their dependents. It has become a grevious burden in many places to the Masonic fraternity. Some earnest brothers act upon the rule that "once a Mason, always a Mason;" and no matter how far a brother forgets his obligations; no matter how long he ceases to contribute to the support or charities of a lodge; no matter how long he ceases to attend lodge meetings, or take any interest in Masonry; whenever he applies for relief, and is destitute, the lodge must help him. Not so, brothers. The old landmarks did not recognize non-affiliation; whenever a brother went out from the fraternity, ceased to contribute for lodge charities, unless he had "fallen in decay," he was classed as a "drone," and placed among the unworthy. We have striven in this age or latter day to be more liberal and just than our fathers. We have allowed dimission and extended the hand of charity or fellowship to those who never intended to contribute to lodge funds —made them Masons because they were good men, ministers, or those needing moral or physical help, without regard to the teaching that every ashlar taken into a lodge should be perfect, and add strength and support to the building. One man is no better than another in Masonry—all must be considered equally good and deserving. Why then "class legislation?" The principle being wrong is why we refer to it.

"If a man ceases to work, neither shall he eat," is the Gospel rule to apply to Masonry. When a brother dimits he ceases to work until he joins again. It means that at the brother's request he is relieved from lodge duties, lodge privileges, lodge expenses, and lodge charities. He may be tired of Masonry, tired of being taxed, tired of lodge duties; if he fails to attempt to join another, that is the proper inference. Then as he is tired and has ceased work and fellowship with us, we also should mark the man in this respect. So long as he remains outside of lodge fellowship and duties, so long must he remain outside of lodge privileges and assistance. This is just, it is right, and no honest and fair-minded man would refuse to so rule in an honest business transaction. The reasons are innumerablo and increasing daily why the Masonic fraternity should so rule, and the quicker we can come to this common sense, business understanding of the matter, the better it will be for Masonry.

Let dimitted Masons fully and clearly understand that they have no Masonic claims outside of the order. It is work, it is labor, to be a Mason— and Masons must quit feeding these drones and take care of the bees that are in the hive; they will find plenty work to do and charity to give if they will do their duty in this respect.

Draw the lines, brothers, and commence now. No relief for dimitted Masons. This rule is hard, but it is fair, it is right—except in cases of great merit. A few years will settle the question. When this rule is understood and carried out, dimission will be unknown, except with those who are penurious or desire to leave the order forever, or are only changing lodge membership for convenience and better accommodations.—Mystic Jewel.

Correspondence.

Masonry in the Lutheran Church.

June 4, 1875.

The history of the Lutheran congregation at Lima, O., is peculiar and interesting. In August of 1873, the pastor of the congregation, Rev. A. S. Bartholomew, a seceding Odd-fellow, preached by appointment of the presiding officer, a sermon to the Council District Synod of Ohio. It was preparatory to the Lord's Supper, and the subject was secret societies, showing their unchristian character and that they had caused division in the Lutheran body.

For this he was arraigned before the synod and finally deposed from the ministry. Since then four other ministers have also been decapitated, whose only crime was that they sympathized with, and sustained pastor B. in his opposition to secretism. Strange to say, all these men are still Lutheran ministers, in good standing, and pastors of Lutheran congregations. What is stranger still is that their names are so published in the clerical register of the Lutheran church, the men who deposed them being members of a district synod of the General Council.

I have carefully read that sermon in the original manuscript and do not see anything false, unchristian, or contrary to the doctrines of the Lutheran church. It is manifest that whatever may have been his errors of judgment the real animus of all this opposition to pastor B. was, and is, his opposition to secret societies. The attempt to drive him from his pastoral charge has been the work of Freemasons and their sympathizers, though they have not succeeded, they have divided his congregation, caused the house of worship to be shut up, and made it necessary for the congregation of pastor B. to build a temporary house of worship to be occupied until the case has been legally decided.

The case of pastor B. and the Lima congregation is exciting a deep interest and is quite extensively discussed in the denominational papers, and is showing as nothing else would, the intolerant and wicked spirit of secretism.

The following incidents may, I think, be justly regarded as expressions of the Divine will in this case. The Evangelical Lutheran District Synod of Ohio was divided at Lima, O., A. D. 1869. The real animus of this decision was secretism. When the church bell was rung for the last time previous to the adjournment of Council District Synod, it cracked. It was a large one of 800 pounds and broke in August. Pastor B. became convinced of the sinfulness of the secret orders and publicly denounced them from the pulpit. For this, one of his members, a high Mason, threatened him with division and demanded that he should sign a paper pledging himself not to speak against Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship. He refused, and a petition was gotten up and secretly circulated to remove him from his congregation. One reported him as being insane and as having left on a night train for parts unknown. Soon after, this man was taken sick and suddenly died. An old man who was a member of the congregation said, "I'll take him by the neck and kick him out of the church and we will have another pastor before the first of April" (1872), but before that time he was in his grave.

The Masonic leader sent a paper to pastor B. demanding an answer in thirty days, but just as the thirty days expired this man's child was a corpse. The same man, together with others, broke into the church and held service in it once, but before they could have a secret service the young preacher, (a student in college) suddenly died. A church whose public testimony just as emphatically condemns Freemasonry, as the Declaration of Independence does slavery, will, if it tolerates this institution, just as surely call down the judgments of God as did our nation for its guilty maintainence of oppression.

H. H. Hinman.

Bremer Co., Iowa, Convention.

Unfavorable weather and the non-arrival of the speaker, prevented any meeting being held at ten o'clock, first day, and but few delegates were present at the afternoon session, yet matters were talked over and partly got under way. At evening session for lecture—speaker still absent—a hasty consultation of friends resulted in an extemporizing of two addresses.

Meeting opened by prayer, reading of Scripture by the Secretary and singing, after which P. Woodring addressed the meeting, stating the object of the meeting, and the incontrovertible proof of the correctness of the exposures of such as Bernard's "Light on Masonry" and that we must utterly fail if the fraternity could prove them all lies. He then made a public renunciation of the Grand Army of Republic, stating that he had renounced and denounced them privately for several years, but never publicly. Then he gave as thorough an exposition of its ceremonies, oaths, etc., as his memory served, closing with the following words: "I have fought for the liberty which I now enjoy, for nearly four years and many times bared my breast to the iron hail. I love my country, and my wife and little ones, as dearly as any man upon God's footstool loves his, yet I would consider it an honor to lay down my life for the destruction of the life of secret societies to-day."

An interesting address was then given by Adam Smith, showing how we knew the truth of the revelations of Masonry, and the duty of parents and citizens respecting it. Mr. Smith is a German and has large experience among Masons and handled his subject ably: and his odd, humorous illustrations brought frequent applause. The speaker, having now arrived, was introduced, and, as it was now late, only gave his subject for the following evening.

The chairman then spoke of some rumors afloat; that it was intended by the fraternity to present and read the expulsion papers of Mr. Hankins, the speaker, and also accuse him of immorality, and requested them to bring them along on the following evening, and read them at a proper time when it would not interrupt the lecture. Bro. Hankins then stated that he had formerly lived in Waverly and had been in the lodge there, and also gave some of his past history. Meeting then closed to meet at 10 a. m., next day.

The sessions were harmoniously conducted; the usual business done; and we completed our organization, elected a full set of officers, adopted constitution, etc. Officers elected: J. A. Westbrook, President; R. Pelton, S. George, Oren West, Vice-presidents; P. Woodring, Sec'y; H. M. Woodford, Treas. Delegates to State Convention, P. Woodring and Adam Smith.

The last evening was occupied by the lecture, subject, "No man can be a true Mason and a Christian or a loyal citizen." Hoping some abler person will give a report of this lecture, I will only say, that in order to appreciate it, it is necessary to hear it. Good audiences both evenings. Good behavior and quiet meetings on the part of all, both Masons and others, have characterized these meetings, as well as the previous ones. Not a word was said, publicly, in regard to the reading of the papers referred to above, nor a word said as to immorality, although it was talked of on the streets very much, and he was accused of being guilty of rape and such like crimes. The fraternity was very busy carrying it about. Surely, "they that lay snares may be themselves caught." A memmorial was addressed to the National Convention, not being able to send a delegate.

Experience With Masonry, and Masonic Perjury Considered.

Bay City, Mich.

About five years ago, a pamphlet accidently fell into my hands, purporting to be a confession of one Henry L. Valance, as one of three men appointed by a conspiracy of Freemasons to murder Capt. Wm. Morgan, which they did in the fall of 1826, by drowning him in Niagara river. This confession I read with much interest. About this time, I also had the reading of C. G. Finney's able work on Masonry, Stearns' Inquiry, and then Morgan's Exposure. All these I found to perfectly harmonize in their testimony of the corruptions, and inside workings of the Masonic lodge. This was the way I was made an Anti-mason. I then became anxious to know what Masons would say in regard to these horrid oaths and death-penalties, said to be taken by every one of them; consequently, one day, I had a private chat with a friend of mine who was a Master Mason, and I asked him if Masons bind their candidates when they join, under oaths of secrecy. He replied, they do make a promise of secrecy. I then asked him if there were any penalties attached to a violation of these oaths. He replied,—hm, well, yes; but they amount to nothing. I was then convinced that what Morgan, Finney, and others say of Masonry, is the truth.

But right here I was met with what Masons seem to think an invincible argument. They said: If these men are guilty of violating their Masonic oaths, they are perjured men, and are therefore not to be believed in anything they may say of Masonry. This argument at first sight, seemed to becloud my clear vision a little; but upon more mature reflection, I soon found it to be only a hypocritical bait, laid to catch the poor, foolish dupes who may be deceived by it.

I now propose for the benefit of those who may be deceived by it, to analyze this argument and get it in a shape that all may be able to judge of its intrinsic value. Observe here, my friends, you can seldom get a Mason to say plainly that these men did violate their Masonic oaths in exposing the secrets of the craft; because you will see, that would be confessing that they told the truth; but they always use the word "if." Observe again, the first question in these analysis is not, did these men—Morgan, and others who professed to have exposed the secrets of Masonry—perjure themselves? But the question, to be fairly stated, should stand thus: Did these men, in their attempt to expose Masonry, tell us a falsehood, or did they tell us the truth? Then we say, if it was a lie, why of course, they were not perjured men, because they had not revealed the secrets of Masonry, but had only simply told us a common Masonic lie to hide the truth, the same as all Masons are bound to do. But now let us try the strength of the other horn. Did these men tell us the truth? Then we say, why, of course, we poor outside "cowans" know of a certainty what speculative Freemasonry is. We ask then, what part have speculative Masons got in this speculation? We reply, they have got upon their hands a set of men they call perjured villains, because they have brought to light some of the hidden things of dishonesty, by revealing to the world a great truth in regard to the evils of Masonry.

We are now prepared to ask: Did these men perjure themselves? If so, then we say, it must have been by revealing the same secrets which they promised in the lodge not to reveal. I see no other proper solution. Can Masons give us a better one? Then, according to their own arguments, the secrets of Masonry are now public property. But did these men, in breaking their Masonic obligations perjure themselves? We answer, No.

1. Because an oath, in order to have any binding influence, must be administered by some legal authority. Masonic oaths are not thus administered.

2. Because no man has any lawful right to bind himself to commit immoral or wicked acts. Masons do thus bind themselves. Several men bind themselves under oath to commit arson or robbery; neither the laws of God or man, will hold such men guilty of perjury for violating their oaths. Masonic oaths are a parallel case.

With the above evidence before us, I now ask, why do Masons insinuate that these men, who have revealed the secrets of the craft, are perjured men? The fact is, that this insinuation is a bare-faced piece of impudence and hypocrisy that scarcely has a parallel; besides, it is a gross insult to those good and great men who have exposed the fraud; and I hesitate not to say, no honest man, or gentleman, should be guilty of such foul deed.

Lesson for June 27th, 1875.—Review.—Samuel's Parting Words.

SCRIPTURE.—1 Samuel 12: 20-25. Commit 20-25; Primary Verse, 24.

20 And Samuel said unto the people, Fear not: ye have done all this wickedness: yet turn not aside from following the Lord, but serve the Lord with all your heart:

21 And turn ye not aside; for then should ye go after vain things, which can not profit nor deliver; for they are vain.

22 For the Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake; because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his people.

23 Moreover as for me God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you: but I will teach you the good and the right way:

24 Only fear the Lord, and serve him in truth with all your heart: for consider how great things he hath done for you.

25 But if ye shall still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed, both ye and your king.

Hints to Ministers and Teachers.

BY D. F. NEWTON.

"Scatter ye seeds in the garden of heart,
Seeds of affection, of truth, and of love;
Cultivate carefully each hidden part,
And the flowers will be seen by the angels above."

Sabbath School exercises should be short, pointed, pithy; directly to the heart. Never tire the little folks with long prayers or prosy speeches. Condense your thoughts; load and fire in quick succession. Be brief and to the point. Sheet lightning, that corruscates all night and over half the horizon, is powerless, while the thunderbolt shatters the stoutest oak. The truth you offer may be as precious as a pearl, but if hidden in a shell of words its worth will be unnoticed. Your illustrations may be ever so beautiful, yet, if their length weary, they will be forgotten, or best stand in memory a torso. Children are eager to hear and learn, but if fatigued will not remember.

If the photographer exposes his plate to the sun too long, he burns its surface and destroys his picture. But how much more sensitive the tablets of the youthful mind, and how much greater the care necessary to secure a proper impression. Throw an image of Christ upon them by a single ray of God's word, and the Holy Spirit will bring out a likeness that will last forever. But overtax their powers and you not only fail to leave an impression upon them, but impair their susceptibility.

Be brief, and appeal directly to the heart. Time is short, opportunity is fleeting, youthful strength and patience quickly yield: but eternity under God depends upon your work. Children, even little children, need things practical, pointed. The sword, the fire, the hammer, the holy unction, fire on fire! things that cut to the quick—sharper than any two-edged sword, that tell on the conscience.

Everything in the form of speech-making should be put into the Gospel crucible in a condensed form, giving merely the outlines of Christian duty and Bible reform—the cream, the marrow—the soul, the life, the essence, the quintessence of all and everything that is true, honest, just, pure, lovely and of good report. Strike at the heart, bring home God's truth, the sword of the Spirit. The first and momentous thing is to make children feel they are sinners, and then point to Calvary. Aim directly at conviction, now—this lesson, every lesson; enforce God's truth more and more, till the soul is secured. Much of the instruction given to children in families and in Sabbath-schools, on the Lord's day and at other times, is powerless. There is no special, direct, prayerful aim at immediate salvation. Children catechized in a loose, careless manner, without these home-thrusts, or any direct, forcible, personal application from the Bible, grow up almost as ignorant as heathens of repentance, faith towards God, or salvation through Jesus Christ. All parental and Sabbath-school instruction should be to convict, convert now. Strike at the heart. "My son, give me thy heart." "Seek first the kingdom of God." Kill, then make alive. Bring the little folks directly to Jesus.

First fill the bushel with the wheat,
With wisdom—food for souls to eat;
Then chaff, the fiction of the day,
Will find no place, and blow away.

OUR MAIL.

O. Breed, Avery, Ill., writes:

"We are going to hold a convention at the M. E. church, June 4th, 5th and 6th, to organize that we may be able to work in the good cause with success."

J. M. Ballard, Story City, Iowa, writes:

"There are 100,000 Masons in this State. We are ruled in the Legislature and in nearly all the counties by them. They hold all the offices from governor to magistrate."

Ephraim Thomas, Orleans, Ind., writes:

"Secresy is still on the down grade in this county. I would like to attend the National convention, but am not able, but it shall have my prayers."

J. H. Purdy, San Francisco, Cal., writes:

"I find Republicans, without exception, approve the principles contained in your paper. Some, timid souls, doubt the expediency of incorporating them into their platform, while others say the adoption of them, is the only thing that can save the party. That is also my opinion. But another question arises,—Is the party with its present leaders worth saving?"

Melancthon Gage, Lawrence, Mich., writes:

The Cynosure should be upheld by every one, especially those that believe all secret societies to be wrong. I put the paper into the hands of every one I think will be likely to read it. One man told me he had not voted for five years for fear he would vote for a Mason, and when I requested him to do something to put the thing down, he as much as said he dare not do anything to offend the fraternity."

Henry Steele, Canton, Da., writes:

"I know of no paper that speaks forth the words of truth and soberness in so clear and uncompromising a way as the Cynosure, never yielding an inch or giving an ell to Satan. The truth is having its effect here. The United Presbyterian preachers are going to hold an association here commencing on the 18th."

Mary A. Gamble, Birmingham, Iowa, writes:

"It is now nearly 7 years since I commenced to take your paper and I will say that I have watched with interest its steady progress in the work of reformation. It has steadily aimed to overthrow the works of darkness and maintain the pure principles of the Gospel of our blessed Saviour. Truly it is grievous to know that men, who bear the Christian name are found building up the kingdom of Satan, in giving their means and influence to a mystery of iniquity, that robs Christ of his glory as the only way of salvation for sinners. Oh, who will account for these souls that seek admission by a Masonic ladder to the heavenly world?"

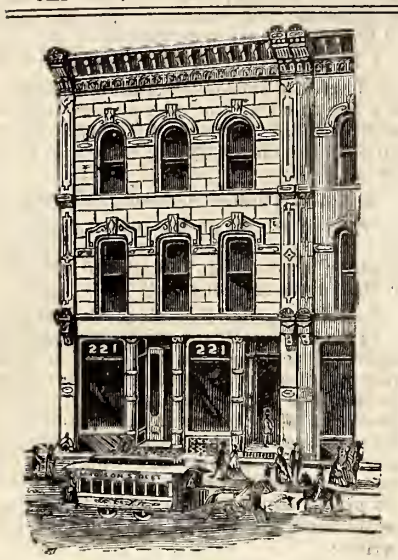
Jacob Haffner, Franklin Center, Iowa, writes:

"I have roused up the craft by distributing tracts and extra papers. Honest men thank me for it. The Oddfellows here have made a rule which draws in many men—After the death of an Oddfellow his wife gets one or two thousand dollars. Any State and church has its laws to support its sick and poor, consequently we need no selfish secresy anywhere in the world."

E. P. Sellew, Binghamton, N. Y., writes:

"I cannot tell you how highly I prize the Cynosure. I consider it in every respect a firstclass paper, and I wonder as there are so many members in the different churches, who do not fellowship secresy that its circulation is not at least twice as large. As long as it continues to bear its present clear and unequivocal testimony against the different evils of the age, I shall not think that I can be without it."

J. W. Baldridge, Cherry Fork, Ohio writes:



"I have been trying to wake up the people on the subject of secresy, and I know of no better way than by distribnting the Cynosure and anti-masonic tracts, which I am doing. The Oddfellows and grangers are boasting that I am only helping them along, and I want to continue to help them in that way. They are making a great effort to organize a lodge of Oddfellows in our little town. Masons trouble us but little in this section. The majority of the people here are all right on secret societies; what they need is a good lecturer to wake them up."

Elijah Gibbs, Amity, Iowa, writes:

"Mrs. A. E. Gibbs, my wife, died a year ago last December. Send the paper as heretofore, in her name. I will pay for it so long as I live. It is all that I could wish. The paper coming in my wife's name seems like a sweet memorial of her, for she loved the cause and valued the paper."

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1875.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and $20.000 the ownership.

THE PROCEEDINGS of the Pittsburgh Convention will be immediately published in pamphlet form as recommended by the Convention. Copies will be furnished at 25cts each or $2.00 per dozen, postpaid; by express, $10 per 100, twenty-five copies at same rate. As this report will contain several excellent contributions to the literature of our reform it should have a large circulation. Order copies for distribution.

AFTER THE CONVENTION.

A good beginning has been made in Pittsburgh and much already accomplished at the meeting of the National Christian Association. Public attention has been directed to the secret orders and many facts concerning their character and workings given the public, and so far as can be yet learned public denial of the facts stated by Revs. Cogswell or Coquilette, the former a Royal Arch and the latter a Knight Templar Mason, seceded, had been made. The fraternities in Pittsburgh stand before the public convicted by their own silent testimony. When charges of such grave character are directly preferred against them by men of reputation and unquestioned veracity, and they are challenged in open court to reply, silence will be justly construed by every honest-minded person as a confession of guilt.

The strange spell of silence that had come over the pulpit of the city is broken and the people are discussing the mystic orders with a freedom never before known. One pulpit has been heard from on the subject, and the gauntlet thrown down by the sensational preachers of the city in which heavy charges are brought against his own and neighboring churches. The spinal column of his whole discourse was, the church has failed in her whole duty and secret societies are necessary to supply the lack. If this is so his neighbors in the ministry will doubtless adopt the Masonic art of silence. If it is not true then we shall expect to hear from them a vindication of their churches. If the ministers of Pittsburgh, Allegheny and Birmingham, who have expressed personally strong and uncompromising opposition to the lodge, would make the same statements in public, the craft would be terribly shaken, and totter to its fall. Never was there a more opportune moment than the present. The press will not withhold the facts, and the masses, who, like those writing upon Christ's ministry with gladness, are anxious to hear. Let us hope and pray that the public may hear from Dr. Hodge, Dr. Howard, Dr. Passivant, and Rev. Messrs. King, Miller, Laird and numerous others to whom those who wait upon their ministry are looking for light on this, a living question of the hour.

THE PITTSBURGH POLITICAL MEETING.

Space forbids this week the report of the earnest and harmonious political mass convention on Wednesday afternoon, June 9th, in Library Hall. The political committee appointed last year at Syracuse were ready to report a platform which was adopted, after amending in some unimportant particulars, with great unanimity, and nominations made for the National Election. The names presented were: for President Hon. James B. Walker of Illinois, and Donald Kirkpatrick, Esq., of New York. Both these gentlemen are generally well known to the constituency of this reform, East and West, but we cannot refrain from publishing the following letter from the Chicago Tribune from the pen of Dr. J. E. Roy, who honors the candidate and the principles on which he stands, though yet adhering to the Republican party.

CHICAGO, June 11.—This old-time question concerning a new Presidential candidate is raised by you to-day in regard to the Rev. and Hon. J. B. Walker, the nominee of the Pittsburgh Convention. I am among those who think that, as political issues are now made up before the nation, the mission of the Republican party has not yet been fully accomplished. But I am glad to announce that the "Somebody, who lived somewhere, and had written something against Masonry," has a good title to recognition in Chicago.

About thirty years ago, the Rev. Dr. J. B. Walker came to Chicago, and started the first religious paper for the Presbyterian and Congregational denominations—the Prairie Herald, whose successors are now the Advance and the Interior. He was also, for a time pastor of the Third Presbyterian Church. The lot upon which he published his paper he still owns, as a part of the site of the Briggs House. Afterwards he became the founder and the President of Benzonia College, in Northern Michigan. While there, he gained his civil title, "Hon." as a member of the Senate of that State. Latterly he has been laboring as pastor at Wheaton, Ill., and acting as Assistant President of the College there. He is the author of that greatly-popular work "The Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," which has been a text-book in several colleges for many years. I am happy to acknowledge my great indebtedness to this book, which came in the course of study at Knox College. He is also the author of several other similar works, which all have been published in this country and in England. The calmness, and the candor, and the conscientiousness, with which he discussed the question of the Chicago Anti-masonic Convention must commend him to all who love fairness in debate, even though they do not agree with his sentiments.

We who yet go for the Republican party; who have had The Chicago Tribune in our homes every day, except Sundays, since it was founded; who know how that this paper inherited the material and good will of the old Abolition paper, the Western Citizen; who know that this our ablest daily came out of the loins of the Christian Anti-Slavery "fanaticism," and who remember the single votes that were polled for the Liberty party,—we, of such antecedents, ought not to believe that, after the polls of 1876 are closed, the "Walkerites" will be more crazy than the lunatics when they "discover that their candidates have received about one out of every thousand votes cast that day." Indeed, such a vote would be a mighty moral testimony. It would be a power to be courted by the dominant parties. J. E. ROY.

Convention Notes.

—Rev. E. J. Forrester, delegate from St. Lawrence county, New York, reported a number of congregations opposed to the lodge. Among them are the Methodist Episcopal, Ephraim Wheeler, pastor, a lately seceded Mason; Wesleyan, D. P. Rathbun, pastor; Covenanter, Wm. McFarland, pastor and United Presbyterian whose pastor represented the district as delegate. A number of towns in the county wait to be organized. Here's work for Elder Barlow.

—By special arrangement the Pittsburgh Commercial made a special report of the proceedings and addresses of the convention and furnished a large number of copies. The three numbers containing this report can be had at the Cynosure office for 15cts. postpaid.

—The daily press of Pittsburgh was well represented in the Convention, and the reports were on the whole fair and able. It is not pleasant to record, however, that most of the reporters present were more or less connected with the lodge. A resolution of thanks to the Pittsburgh press was prepared and only waited presentation for a heartily affirmative vote; but in the customary haste of closing, this public expression of what was universally acknowledged, was unintentionally overlooked.

—Each evening one or two individuals not connected apparently with the press, and evidently members of the lodge found their way to the reporter's table. Their sobered expression was very noticeable during the second address of Wednesday evening and Prof. Blanchard's brief speech of the last session. Something evidently galled their Masonic consciences.

—Among the most marked absences from the ranks of the delegates were those hailing from the Wesleyan Publishing House at Syracuse whom we were always accustomed to expect. Bro. Crooks has gone to join the church glorified; Bro. Stratton has yet his armor on, but so heavy is the battle around him he could not leave it to help us in the Convention. But all so knew his hearty zeal that he was expected and inquired for up to the last afternoon.

—Part of the upper story of the Mercantile Library building in close proximity to the Hall is used for a lodge room. During the exercises of the second evening some brave Knights proved their loyalty to the lodge by a continual noise in their apartments such as might be made by dragging a heavy table across the floor. They gained for themselves great glory, but failed to disturb the convention to any noticeable degree.

—The proceedings of the recent meeting of the National Grange have been published. From abstracts it appears that there were $13,152.70 cash in the treasury Jan. 1, 1874, and, including this, the receipts for the year, were $223,534.72. The total disbursements were $178,517.27. Of these some $11,000 were due in 1873. The Grange has some $92,351 in bonds and cash. The principal source of revenue was from charters to new granges, of which 12,041 were issued at $15, making $180,615. For manuals, song books, etc., $4,432 were received. From the treasurers of the State Granges $26,836 were received, which would indicate that a large part of the dues had not been paid. The cost of printing and binding was $67,858. The disbursements for saleries, expenses, etc., were $42,738, of which $11,066 were for expenses of the session of the National Grange. The donations by the National Grange in 1874, in part in remitted dues, were $15,098. The expenses of this body which by these figures foot up to over $100,000, and over, 11,000 for a single meeting, of a few persons comparatively, are items to be remembered. Also the fact that much of the charity of this order is in remitted dues, which would probably never be paid anyhow as the farmers at the West are rapidly repudiating the gigantic swindle.

—The Inter-Ocean of this city publishes the following from a private letter from a gentleman residing at Salt Lake City for many years. It confirms the frequent statement of the connection of the two vile systems, Mormonism and the lodge:

"The Mormons, in their religious observances, have instituted many secret rites, and have established many degrees of rank in the priesthood of their church that are surrounded with mystery. The marriage ceremony is something after the fashion of the marriage of our first parents in the Garden of Eden; and I am told that the endowment house is arranged so as to represent Paradise—on a limited scale. When the man and woman apply for marriage, the woman is taken by a number of other women and washed thoroughly (which operation she ordinarily stands sufficiently in need of), and then annointed with oil and dressed in her endowment robe—the original "chemiloon." It is something like a child's night-gown combined with a pair of linen—well, let me say pantaloons. (This costuming is a recent innovation. Formerly—this is a fact—they were attired simply in a fig leaf.) Then she is enveloped in a white robe and led into the Garden, where her husband that is to be, is awaiting her, he having undergone like manipulations. Eve is represented by an undraped woman, and Adam (similarly) by a man. The Creator stands behind a tree and performs the ceremony, making the woman 'bone of man's bone,' etc. In the Reynold's ceremony (a case prominently before the public not long ago) Mayor Daniel H. Wells officiated as the Creator. The oaths they are obliged to take are kept Masonically secret. They are said to be of an awful character."

A Protest

To the action of the General Conference of the Methodist church lately met at Princton, Ill.

Believing and affirming that the Bible contains all the principles of sound doctrine and exhibits all the lessons of pure morality that God has authorized and enjoined; and being fully convinced and assured that there is a positive testimony in the Bible against all associations, whether formed for benevolent purposes, or for political designs, or for social culture, which impose an enforce an obligation to obey a code of unknown laws, or which maintain an existence under a bond of union that is kept hidden from public and general scrutiny; and finding in the authentic and authenticated records of history and revealments of the past, that oath-bound societies and brotherhoods have invariably at some period of their duration and vitality, aroused enmity against the advancement of learning, exercised hostility to the claims of civil government, injuriously effected the interest of religion and impaired the prosperity of the cause of Christianity; and having sufficient reason to adopt the opinion that the taking of any oath of blind compliance and concealment is in violation of the civil law of the land, opposed to the duty of equal and exact justice to all men, incompatible with the claims and requirements of a good conscience toward God, and inconsistent with Christian professions, being contrary, in the nature of things, to the spirit and genius of the religion of Christ, and unfavorable to the general safety and permanent prosperity of any people under a republican form of national government. Having also in memory or before my eyes many plain proofs that any society that requires and exacts an oath, affirmation, or promise of blind submission and concealment, as a condition of initiation and membership, is likely either to be or to become a bad and dangerous institution; and believing that those ministers and members of the Methodist church who join such societies and remain in fellowship therewith, are in danger of violating their covenant obligations to God and the church, by coming under fealty to bad and corrupt men who may, and who often do, sway these vast bodies in a way that seems calculated and is evidently designed to withdraw the sympathy and active zeal of professed Christians from their respective churches; and knowing, or thinking I know, that any good institution can safely and judiciously perform its whole work in open daylight, and without cloaking itself up with tests, grips, passwords, etc., swearing or solemnly engaging, like a nest of robbers and outlaws, to maintain the tongue of silence in the presence of those persons who refuse to join; and finding, as any student of history can find, that nearly all of the ancient conclaves, and indeed all of them that exacted pledges of concealment, were founded in falsehood, begotten of deception, conceived in selfishness, born through fraud, and nurtured and conducted by the few, and for the few, to the serious hurt and damage of the many; and feeling, in common with many other people, that such societies are, even now, corrupting to every department of society, and vain, ostentatious and criminal in tendency, and that we have no need of them in this country,—I do most earnestly and emphatically protest against the action of the third session of the general conference of the Methodist church, in indefinitely postponing, without allowing any debate, the very mild resolution which I introduced against giving encouragement and support to societies which are so calculated to excite jealousies in the family, disturbances in the church, and outlawry in the State. I protest, on the ground that my resolution was entitled to a respectful hearing and discussion which it did not receive. I was, and am prepared to assert and bring proof of the fact, that many oath-bound conclaves which make concealment and unquestioning obedience an essential ritual element and demand, contain much that is repugnant to decency and propriety, and much that should receive the prompt condemnation of every patriot and of every Christian. I, therefore, protest that our General Conference has illegally refused to sanction what God says in Lev. v: 4, 5.

D. B. Turney,

Ministerial representative from South Illinois Conference.

—This is Kentucky's centennial year. One hundred years ago Richard Henderson purchased from the Indians all Kentucky south of the Kentucky river. One hundred years ago Daniel Boone surveyed the purchase for him. One hundred years ago Boone completed the fort at Boonsborough, in Madison county. One hundred years ago his wife and daughters came as the first white women to Kentucky. One hundred years ago the first sermon was preached at the Big Spring, in Harrodsburg, Mercer county, Kentucky.

Religious Intelligence.

—The General Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran church, which recently convened in Baltimore, represented 23 district synods, 769 ministers, 1,228 churches, 117,029 communicants. The Rev. G. F. Sterling of Pennsylvania presided over the Synod.

—The saleries of the bishops of the Southern Methodist Episcopal church are paid by voluntary contributions from the members of the churches. Their treasurer reports them fully paid up.

—Prof. Brugset, while accompanying the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mechlenburgh-Schweria on an expedition to Sinai, has, it is stated, discovered in the library of the monastery nine hitherto unknown portions of the "Codex Sinaiticus," the oldest extant MS. of the Old Testament.

—They say of Bishop Miles, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal church, that he bought his freedom before the war for $2,000, and earned the money in three years as a boot and shoe maker. When he was sold, at the death of his mistress, a citizen of his place advanced him the money to effect the purchase.

—The annual reports of the agents of the Methodist Book Concern in New York, presented to the Book Committee, represented the aggregate sales at New York and Cincinnati, during the past year, of $1,552,048; being an increase of the sales of the previous year of $92,639, notwithstanding the depression in business.

—At the thirty-ninth anniversary of the Union Theological seminary, held in the Madison Square Church on Monday evening, the 10th inst., Dr. H. M. Scudder, in the course of a brilliant address on Hindoo Pantheism and American Trancendentalism, held the latter was substantially derived from the former.

—Dr. Samuel Tragelles of Plymouth, England, one of the greatest Bible scholars of the age, recently died, aged about 60 years. He was a self-made man. He worked thirty years at a revised edition of the Greek Testament, and visited all the libraries of Europe to examine manuscripts.

—Dr. Gray, of the Utica Asylum, declared some time ago, that he never had known a case of insanity which could clearly be traced to religious excitement, as its cause. And the London Lancet, the highest medical authority in Great Britain, says that these cases of insanity which may have taken on a religious form, are to be attributed to entirely other causes.

—Dr. Samuel R. Wilson, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Louisville, was deposed lately by the Louisville Presbytery from administering the ordinances of the church. The deposition was due to the refusal of Dr. Wilson to recognize the authority of the Presbytery or General Assembly to examine certain charges pending against him. The action of the Presbytery has been sustained by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church South at St. Louis.

—Rev. Henry M. Boehm, the well-known Methodist preacher, attained to the age of one hundred years on Tuesday, June 8th. The rare event was commemorated by services in one of the Methodist churches of Jersey City, the aged man making an address.

—The English revisers of the New Testament held their fiftieth session May 10. They furnished the revision to the 10th verse of the 10th chapter of Romans.

—The corner-stone of a Memorial hall to Dr. Isaac Watts was laid in his native town, Southampton, England, May 6.

—Mr. Spurgeon has begun to second the evangelistic labors of Moody and Sankey in London with his accustomed enthusiasm and consequent success. He opened the hall in Camberwell for revival meetings on Thursday night. Though the building is capable of containing 12,000 persons, many were obliged to depart from the doors disappointed in not obtaining admission. In the great center of the world's commerce a work is manifestly in progress which will be far-reaching in its results.

News of the Week.

General.

Last week the Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court presented three indictments against W. H. Talcott, buyer for H. B. Claflin & Co., for purchasing smuggled silks, and three indictments against the firm of H. B. Claflin & Co., for receiving and concealing quantities of smuggled silk, aggregating in value upwards of $1,000,000. Other indictments were found against C. W. Field, Aaron Field, J. J. Morris, and W. D. Fenner, for receiving and concealing silks worth $600,000; on which duty had not been paid. The sensation caused by the indictment of the long-known house of H. B. Claflin & Co. is profound. ——The mining engineer accompanying the government expedition to the Black Hills reports no gold-bearing formation in the section yet explored. Harney's Park has yet to be visited. The long strike among the Pennsylvania miners has ended by an unconditional surrender of the men. There has been great disagreement among the different nationalities, the Welsh continuing the strike, the Irish and Germans wanting to go to work. Hunger and poverty have conquered.——Tweed, the New York ring swindler, has an order for release, but he will be met at the prison door with a new writ of arrest on which his bail will be $3,000,000.

Foreign.

M. Ollivier's book in defense of the Ministry of which he was the head on the breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war has appeared. It declares that Prussia, by her insults, really declared the war, and that his (Ollivier's) Ministry could not be held responsible for entering upon the conflict, because the act was unanimously approved by the Senate and the legislative body; and that the Ministry was not responsible for the military organization, which was the work of years before it came into power. In conclusion M. Ollivier urges the Bonapartists to help the present government, maintain peace and respect the Constitution, and when the time comes for revising the Constitution, then strive for an appeal to the plebiscite.——The Carlists assert that the victory of their troops over the Alfonsists at Carinera was an important one. They say 500 Alfonsist infantry and 300 calvary, together with arms and stores were captured.——The authorities of Santander, Spain, seized last week a lot of Protestant books imported from the United States for the American mission in Spain.——The Sultan of Zanzibar is now visiting England, where he will remain a month or more. The expenses of his visit are defrayed by the British Government.——An attack has been made upon the American Methodist Episcopal church in Kinkiang, in consequence of a quarrel arising from a superstitious belief among the natives that children were maltreated by missionaries.——A severe storm, which passed over Paris, and moved south of the Pyrenees on Wednesday the 9th, resulted in widespread destruction of property. The damage done in Paris alone is estimated at 11,000,000 francs. In the Pyrenees a house was blown down and eleven persons killed.

DUTY.

"No matter where," if duty calls thee, go!
Amid contagion, poverty and death,
Bend o'er the sufferer in his hour of woe,
Nor fear the blast of pestilential breath.

Go o'er the wintry ocean! tremble not
When night, and storm, and darkness, round about,
Hover like ravens—self-approving thought
In thy soul nestles, like the soft-winged dove.

Go to the desert! burning heats by day,
Nor foes by night disturb thy sweet repose.
Up-springing flowers adorn thy lonely way;
To slake thy thirst, the sudden fountain flows.

Speak thou, as duty bids thee, truthful words,
If danger threatens, still be bravely true,
Trust thou in him who rules the raging floods,
And thou shalt triumph o'er the billows too!

Speak thou for the oppressed! Be thou his friend,
"Mercy," the poet saith, like heaven's own rain,
"Is doubly blessed," which upward doth ascend
To gather might, then break on earth again.

Toil in thy Master's vineyard! Watch and pray!
Toil for thy race, for whom the Saviour bled;
Let his example cheer thee on thy way;
And if he bids thee, toil for daily bread.

Do, suffer, die, at duty's call divine,
Nor rest from battle till the victory's won:
Then, soldier of the cross, a crown is thine—
Then, faithful servant, hear thy glad, "Well done."

—Selected.

Daring to be True.

"Dare to be right! Dare to be true!
God who created you, cares for you too;
Bottles the tears that his striving ones shed,
Counts and protects every hair of your head.

"Dare to be right! Dare to be true!
Cannot Omnipotence carry you through?
City and mansion and throne all in sight,
Cannot you dare to be true and be right?"

Dare you be true, brother? dare you be true, sister? Dare you, editor? dare you, minister? Dare you be true as God is true, as Jesus Christ is true, who resisted unto blood, striving against sin? Dare you be true as Moses was true, as Samuel was true, as Elijah was true, as Daniel was true? —true to God, true to man? Dare you be true as Paul was true, who counted not his life dear that he might win Christ and be found in him? Dare you, in this day of commotion, upheavings, and wicked compromisings, take the higher law, plant you feet on Bible record, there stand, come life, come death? stand, "though the earth be removed; and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea. Though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof?"

"Fear was within the tossing bark,
When stormy winds grew loud,
And waves came rolling high and dark,
And the tall mast was bowed;
And men stood breathless in their dread,
And baffled in their skill;
But one was there, who rose and said,
'Peace—be still; peace—be still.'"

Stand, though countless millions are lost, though property depreciate, though stocks and bonds continue to fall, though civil war shall rage, our enemies force us into blood, and the nation be turned into sadness and mourning?—rather than do wrong, permit injustice, countenance oppression, forsake the principles of truth and righteousness, let us imitate our fathers, glorious names of the Revolution: lay down our lives! That man is not a man who is wanting in nerve, in the fear of God, in holy principles, stoutly to resist every innovation on the moral rights and the rights of his brethren, the crushed millions in bonds, who dares not be true to his enlightened convictions, though the heavens fall to rise no more. A man, to be a true man of God, must dare be in the minority, dare be despised and rejected of men, dare maintain his rightful position, though it cost him his life.

"Dare to be right! Dare to be true!
Other men's failures will not excuse you,
Stand by your conscience, your honor, your faith;
Stand like a hero, and battle till death."

If you desire real prosperity, stand firm for the right; if you desire real peace, stand firm; if you desire this nation to arise to superior grandeur, stand firm; if you sympathize with the whole world, now groaning and struggling for freedom, stand firm; if you desire God's blessing, stand firm. Stand by your principles; stand by those who will be strengthened by your example, by those who have long been co-workers with you in the cause of human rights, by those who have long been praying, "Thy kingdom come." In the name of the oppressed and of the down-trodden of earth, of the poor and the weak, in the name of struggling humanity the world over, we beseech you, stand firm!

"Glory to those who die in freedom's cause.
Courts, judges can inflict no brand of shame,
Or shape of death, to shroud them from applause;
No, manglers of the martyr's earthly frame,
Your hangman fingers cannot touch his fame!
Still in our guilty land there shall be some
True hearts, the shrine of freedom's vestal flame;
Long trains of ill may pass unheeded—dumb;
But vengeance is behind and justice is to come."

Satan's Taxes.

In the report of Mr. Ruffner, superintendent of the Virginia Board of Public Instruction, for 1873, we find arrayed in startling figures, a statement of taxation for liquors drank within the State, which fully accounts for the poverty, not only of Virginia, but of all the Southern States; while it also gives the reason for the straitened circumstances of millions in the North. There are 2,856 retail liquor shops in Virginia. If these shops sell the average amount of liquor sold by the liquor shops of the United States, and there is no reason to suppose they do not, the annual amount consumed is $10,622,888. There are additions to be made to this from wholesale dealers and patent medicines which are bought and consumed for their alcohol, that raise the aggregate to $12,000,000. There is no doubt that the sum total exceeds these terrific figures, which leave out entirely the alcohol used for mechanical and manufacturing purposes. This sum exceeds the total value of all the farm productions, increase in live stock, and value of improvements, of the year 1870, according to the U. S. census, in the seven best counties of the State, and by just about the same amount, the value of the productions of forty-five smaller counties during the same year. The wheat crop of Virginia, for 1870, was, in round numbers, 8,000,000 bushels. This, at $1.50 per bushel, which is more than was received, makes exactly $12,000,000. In brief, Virginia drank up its entire wheat crop to the last gill!

Mr. Ruffner presents other illustrative estimates, and goes on to show that the total taxation for State purposes, including legislation, saleries, courts, institutions for dumb, blind and insane, public schools and interest on the public debt, only reaches the sum of $3,500,000, while to add to this sum all the local taxation, would not equal the burden which the people voluntarily lay upon themselves. But this is not all. The injury done to public order, and to private health and enterprise, is to be taken into account. Mr. Ruffner believes that the time wasted, the injury done to business, and the cost of crime, pauperism, insanity and litigation resulting from intemperance, would be more costly than the liquor itself. Then with figures furnished by the distinguished English actuary, Neison, in the interests of life insurance, Mr. Ruffner shows how much valuable life is thrown away in the State. Between fifteen and twenty years of age the number of deaths of temperate and intemperate persons, is as 10 to 18; between twenty-one and thirty, 10 to 51; between thirty and forty, 10 to 40. At twenty years of age a temperate person's chance for life is 44.2 years—intemperate, 15.6; at thirty, the temperate man's chance is for 36.5 years, intemperate, 13.8; at forty years, the proportionate chances are 18.8 to 11.6 years. Thus money, health, morality, industry, good order, and life itself, in enormous sums, go into this bottomless caldron. Is there any return of good for all this expenditure? None. The loss is entire and irremediable. If the whole had gone over Niagara Falls, something would be picked up, on the shore below, but nothing is left of this waste. A bushel of grain transformed into alcohol and swallowed as a beverage, is a bushel of grain annihilated. If all that is spent for liquor were put into a huge furnace, and burned, we should have the ashes; but as it is, we have no ashes except such as, with shame and tears, we are obliged to bury.

We have not displayed these figures for the special purpose of reading a lesson to Virginia, for that State is no worse than the rest of the States of the Union. They give us the facts that account for all our public distress. Our taxation for the legitimate purposes of government and the payment of the public debt, is a mere bagatelle by the side of the taxation to which the people voluntarily subject themselves, for that which harms them. We consume, as a nation, $600,000,000 a year in spirituous liquors, a sum which only needs a very few multiplications to pay the whole public debt of the country. If this tax could be entirely abated, the impetus that would be given, not only to our prosperity, but to our civilization, would soon place us in advance of every nation under heaven. Liquor is at the bottom of all our poverty. If the tax for it were lifted, there would not need to be a man, woman or child without bread. If it could be lifted from the Southern States alone, it would not take five years to make them not only prosperous but rich. There cannot be a more pitiful and contemptible sight, than a man quarreling over and bemoaning his taxes, while tickling his palate, and burning up his stomach and his substance with glass after glass of whiskey. Men dread the cholera, the yellow fever and small pox, and take expensive precautions against them, while the ravages of them in a year do not produce the mischief that intemperance does in a month. It is worse than a plague, worse than fire, or inundation, or war. Nothing but sickness, death, immorality, crime, pauperism, and a frightful waste of resources come of it. Nothing noble is born of it. Meantime our public men are timid about it, our churches are half indifferent over it, our ministers talk about the scriptural use of wine, our scientific men dispute about the nutritive properties of alcohol, our politicians utter wise things about personal rights and sumptuary laws, and the people are going to the devil.—Scribner's Magazine.

Neglecting the Lord's Corn.

A mission station in the Indian Territory was at one time my home. Tobaccowell, one of our neighbors, was a member of the little mission church; and, like many a white professor, was spasmodically zealous for the glory of God.

On Sabbath he listened to a sermon from Genesis 28; xxii. "And of all that thou shalt give me, I will surely give the tenth unto thee."

At the close of the service he said to the missionary, "Me plant big corn-field next week. Me make in ten pieces; plant all, then one piece be the Lord's corn."

He did so. The part of the field to be devoted to the Lord's corn was ploughed and planted with great care. In the early part of the season the corn in every portion of the field was equally fine and promising, but when the time for hoeing arrived our neighbor hoed his own corn, but did not find it convenient to hoe the Lord's. As the season advanced the Lord's corn uncultivated and dwarfed, and Tobaccowell's, well-hoed, tall and thrifty, produced a sad and striking contrast.

The sight of that corn-field has been a life-long lesson for me, and whenever I find myself more devoted to my own personal interests than to the glory of God, (and alas I find it so whenever I look into my own heart,) I say to myself, "I too am neglecting the Lord's corn." Am. Messenger.

The Lawlessness of the Land.

Our secular and religious press has much to say about the growing lawlessness of our people, and the reckless disregard of human life, evidently increasing at a fearful rate in every part of the land, especially in our large cities.

Why should we be surprised at it? Strong governments in a great measure, keep this lawless spirit in check; but when there is no restraint upon individual freedom, where men grow up without parental restraint, or the more wholesome restraint of God's law, and every man, because he is a man, without regard to his fitness, is permitted to have a voice in the government, and from his very infancy, is reminded by the demagogue, who governs the land, of his "God-like privileges," this lawless and reckless spirit must of necessity be generated. Nothing but Christian culture can keep it in check. And where is this wholesome Christian culture to be had? A very large proportion of the working people of our land have no Christian training at all, and in most instances where they have any, it is most defective. Even the very literature of our Sunday-schools is poisoned wit this idea of every man's "glorious right as a free citizen of 'the greatest of nations.'" Instead of teaching the boy "to do his duty in the sphere of life in which it pleases God to call him," his Sunday-school book tells him to do right, and he may become President or Senator.

The French revolution which to-day tears down and destroys everything that is hallowed and sacred, and would rob every prosperous individual of his rights clearly shows what may always be expected, where unrestrained freedom exists, without Christian culture.

Is there not much reason to fear that we are rapidly drifting into the same current, and that fearful revolutions may be in store for us? Like causes may be expected to produce like results. Even now we are beginning to hear in our midst the vandal cry of the communist and the agrarian, "Down with the rich, down with corporations, down with churches." None can deny the fact that the vulgar crowd now governs the land. Men of the highest character are now rarely selected to office. It is well known that the man who controls the most money and distributes it most freely is the man who gets the office without regard to his fitness for it. Bribery and corruption are fearfully on the increase. Though it is not yet true, it is a common saying that 'every man in office has his price.' Questions of the deepest interest, connected with the constitutional law, and vitality affecting the welfare of States and individuals, are now constantly settled according to the numerical strength of the party, whose prosperity is to be promoted or insured by its settlement. Solemn compacts, justice, truth, and everything else that is sacred and holy, are now trodden under foot, where the interests of party demand it. Men in high places violate their oaths of office, and shamelessly say, "We cannot afford to go against our party." Thus we see everything like Christian principle disappearing from among our rulers, and a very large proportion of the worst elements of our population turned aside from honorable pursuits. and absorbed in an everlasting "hunt for the spoils of office."—*N. Social Wine-Drinking—A Crushing Retort.

At an ecclesiastical meeting, wine-drinking came under discussion. Some favored it—some condemned. At length an influential member made a vehement speech in its favor, denouncing opposers as fanatics. When he had ended, a layman asked permission to speak. "Moderator," said he, "it is not my purpose to reply to all that you have just heard. My object is humble and practical. I know a father who was at pains and sacrifice to educate a son at college. There he became dissipated, but, after he returned to his home, its genial influences, acting upon a generous nature, reformed him. I need not tell you that that father rejoiced.

"Well, years passed. The young man completed his professional studies, and was about to leave home to enter upon his life-work, when, in an evil hour, he was invited to dine with a neighboring clergyman, noted for his hospitality. At dinner wine was introduced, was offered to that young man—was refused; was offered again—again refused. He was offered again, again refused. He was then laughed at for his singularity. He could withstand appetite—ridicule he could not. He drank—he fell. From that time he became a drunkard, and long since has gone to a drunkard's grave!

"Moderator," continued the old man with streaming eyes, "I am that father; and he who just addressed you—it was he that ruined that son!"—American Messenger.

Children's Corner.

Little Fingers.

Busy little fingers,
Everywhere they go,
Rosy little fingers,
The sweetest that I know!

Now into my work-box,
All the buttons finding,
Tangling up the knitting,
Every spool unwinding!

Now into the basket
Where the keys are hidden,
So mischievous looking,
Knowing it forbidden.

Then in mother's tresses,
Now her neck enfolding,
With such sweet caresses,
Keeping off a scolding.

Darling little fingers,
Never, never still,
Make them, heavenly Father,
One day to thy will.

Hard Knots.

The spot wouldn't come out. The more they rubbed it the blacker it grew, and at last they had to give it up in despair. It was too bad. Mamma had told them not to touch it, and they didn't mean to disobey; but Susy asked Katy to let her hold it in her hands a minute, and Katy forgot what mamma said.

"Oh dear!" said Katy, "mamma told me if I disobeyed in any way today, I couldn't go to grandma's tomorrow to spend the day; and now I have got to stay at home, and I've got to go and tell mother, besides."

"'Tis too bad," said the girls. "I wouldn't tell," said Mary Rice; "let us go and wash it off, and she never need know."

"But that wouldn't be right," said Katy, "for I really did take it down."

"Well, of course your mother didn't mean you mustn't touch it; she only meant you mustn't hurt it," said Mary.

Poor Katy; she didn't feel as if that was just what mamma meant; but she did want to go to grandma's so much that she thought she would just wash it off first and then tell mamma afterwards. She did not see just then that this was what Tom Gillies called tying one of Satan's knots in her life, which always have to be untied by confession and forgiveness before the heart can be free and happy again. So they all ran out in the kitchen, and rubbed the little statue with water and soap, till it was streaked all over. "Oh dear!" said Katy again, "I feel as if I couldn't tell mother."

"Hide it," said Susy," "and she will never know. I guess I can turn it round so the mark won't show." So they ran back again and put it on its shelf, and put a vase in front of it, and all went into the garden to play.

Katy forgot her Bible verse that mamma had explained so carefully: "He that covereth his sin shall not prosper," and she tied another of Satan's knots, and a very hard one, too. Her heart was heavy all the afternoon, and not all the nice plays of her companions could make her forget that she was hiding something from her dear, kind mamma. She couldn't bear to go in to supper; and when mamma kissed her good-night, and said: "Has my little girl been good all day?" she thought at first she must tell; but she said: "Yes, mamma," and so tied another knot, and the worst one of all—a lie.

She ran away to bed; but she remembered her verse now, and what Tom had said about Satan's making a harder knot each time we do wrong, and she remembered how bravely Tom untied his knots by confessing.

Katy began to think she must tell the truth, and untie her knots too, and have a happy heart again. So she called mamma to her, and told her about it; and though mamma was very sorry Katy had done wrong, and sorry she would have to stay at home from grandma's, she was glad to forgive her little daughter, and explain again to her God's word, that "he that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but he that confesseth and forsaketh them, shall find mercy."

Look-up Legion.

"Look up and not down,
Look out and not in;
Look forward and not back,
And lend a hand."

There is a ring of the right metal in these four lines. I wish every one of us knew it by heart.

"Why, I know that by heart, just reading it over once!" says one of our boys who feels equal to almost anything.

Perhaps you can remember the words, but I mean a great deal more than that, my boy, when I wish you knew it by heart. Let us see.

"Look up, and not down." Are you always cheerful, making the best of things that can't be helped, and not stopping to grumble over difficulties? Do you look up for all you need, and trust God to give it to you? Do you walk with a firm step, hold up your head, and look people sincerely in the face when you speak to them?

"Look out, and not in." How is it about that little circle which bounds your self-life? Do you go outside for the sake of others, or do you live mostly inside? Are you occupied more with thoughts and plans and work for the good of others than with your thoughts, your plans, your work and pleasures? And do you think less about your own difficulties than of helping others out of trouble?

"Look forward, and not back." Have you an aim in life, and are you keeping your eye on it? Do you "forgot the things that are behind," and keep moving?

"And lend a hand?" That sounds stirring and strong! To be sure you lend a hand; you are too generous to refuse. But do you seek opportunities when it is most needed, and do you help when it costs you something, or, perhaps, hurts your pride? And is it the habit of your life instead of a spasm of generous feeling?

In three words, are you cheerful, hopeful and helpful? Then you have learned my four lines of wisdom by heart.

And now what say you, boys and girls of the Bay-Window group, to a society for the promotion of the spirit of this motto—for we will take it for our motto.

We should like to receive the names of any who will take it into their hearts and lives for every day use. We will call ourselves

"LOOK-UP LEGION."

And now let the boys and girls ask themselves if they can heartily put their names on the roll of the "L. L." This involves no promise to do a very difficult thing; it is a promise to try to carry out the spirit of our motto. If there is anything about it that perplexes you let us hear from you.—Sunday School Advocate.

Of the extent to which sectional strength in Congress has been changed within the last twenty years, the following returns will bear witness: In 1854 the members of the Senate from New England and the Middle States comprised more than one-third of the whole number; in 1874 they comprised less than one-fourth. In 1854 the House was made up of 76 members from the South, 59 from the West, and 99 from the Middle States and New England; total 214. In 1874 the House was made up of 86 from the South, 104 from the West, and 102 from the Middle States and New England; total, 292. The Western States have nearly doubled their membership; the New England States have lost one member, and the Middle States have gained four; the South (counting West Virginia as a Southern State) has gained ten members. The ruling power of the country is thus passing away from the "old thirteen" and their near neighbors, and is being absorbed by the more rapidly growing population of the West. But this change involves no more danger of sectional legislation than existed when New England and the Middle States held the ruling power. It may be expected, however, to somewhat influence the general drift of legislation.

We further commend to the attention of this convention, the tract work, especially as the secretary of the tract committee reports the fund more than exhausted by the draft of 20,000 pages sent to the Connecticut State meeting, and 20,000 sent here for use before and during this convention. Each subscription to this fund now, will count double, and fifty dollars thus pays for one hundred thousand pages of tracts.

We further recommend the publication in pamphlet form of the proceedings and addresses of this convention and the appointment of a committee to solicit cash orders for such minutes, it being necessary to secure at least $100 in such subscriptions. The price will be: 25 cents each; $2.00 per loz. post paid; by express $10 per hundred. 25 copies at the one hundred rate.

On this report Rev. D. Yant of Bolivar, Ohio, made earnest remarks:

We find, he said, great difficulty in securing reports in the public press. Our country papers sneer at our Conventions, and the Cleveland Leader said our Mansfield Convention broke up in a row; but all the row was the good feeling and enthusiasm that would hardly allow adjournment. We must support our reform papers. We can never make the progress we should until we give them a large circulation.

Brethren Hinman and Barlow spoke warmly for the Cynosure, urging renewed efforts for its circulation as a most important adjunct of the reform.

In connection with this report it was announced by the General Agent that the able address of Pres. H. H. George of Geneva College, West Geneva, Ohio, prepared for this Convention, was in print and would be sold at the book stand. Pres. George had sent word that he was pressed with many duties, yet if the demand was urgent would come at the call of a telegram. On consultation there seemed to be addresses and business before the Convention to fully occupy the time, and he had therefore not been sent for. It was hoped, however, that his contribution to the literature of the reform would have a large sale.

Rev. B. T. Roberts rose to speak of the incorporate body and by-laws adopted for its regulation. He thought it highly desirable that the General Convention should have a voice in the control of funds, and moved that the Board of Directors be requested to amend the by-laws so that the National Convention may elect the Board of Directors. The Corresponding Secretary, C. A. Blanchard, explained the provision of the law under which the body was incorporated which would not allow of such an arrangement, but the small body of incorporators might be increased at pleasure, and would be, so as to secure a fair representation from those laboring and contributing for this reform.

Mr. Roberts withdrew his motion and renewed it in this form:

Resolved, That we recommend to the Board of Directors to amend the second bylaw of the N. C. A. so that it shall read; "Those who held life memberships in the unincorporated National Christian Association before the adoption of these bylaws, together with those who shall hereafter contribute—dollars to the treasury of the National Christian Association, provided further, that they shall be so elected by the delegates enrolled at the National Anniversary will constitute the members of the National Christian Association.

This resolution was carried and the blank filled by a vote that the sum required for membership should be $25.

Rev. Milton Wright was chosen to fill a vacancy in the Committee on Resolutions; Prof. Sloane having gone to attend the Pan-Presbyterian Council in England as representative of his church.

The Business Commitee now presented their report on Mr. Levington's case, which was adopted without change. In accordance with the subsequent action of the Convention, the statement of grievances is presented in connection:

WHEREAS; in the proceedings of the Syracuse Convention as published, first in the Cynosure, and afterward in pamphlet form, it is represented that "Mr. Levington said he would leave the lecture field unless appointed National lecturer like Mr. Stoddard;" and also that "he was elected over a considerable negative vote after an effort to refer it to the Executive committee;" and

WHEREAS; Mr. Levington never sought that or any other appointment; never said, or intimated, "that he would leave the lecture field;" nor was there "a considerable negative vote;" neither was there any effort to "refer it to the Executive Committee," save the effort made by Mr. Stoddard; and

WHEREAS; Mr. Levington feels that he is deeply injured by representations so much at variance with the truth in the case; therefore,

Resolved; That it is the sense of this body that the representations of which Mr. Levington complains are not correct, and we regret that they have been made; and further we exonerate Mr. Levington from any reflection or blame expressed or implied in the representations complained of; for Mr. Levington so far from saying that he would leave the lecture field, said just the contrary, there and then.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

WHEREAS; Brother John Levington feels that he has been misrepresented by the last year's minutes of the National Association at Syracuse assembled, and

WHEREAS; This Convention has no knowledge in regard to the facts in the case, and

WHEREAS; Brother Levington has made a full statement of the matter as he understands it; therefore Resolved, 1, That we regret the different statements and understandings that have caused brother Levington pain.

2. That we are grateful to his self-sacrificing labors and faithful service, and trust he will dismiss from his mind the entire subject.

A. M. MILLIGAN.
HENRY COGSWELL.
A. L. POST.

On the motion to adopt the report Mr. Levington said that the representation of himself had been one of the most painful things of his life. He had been published to the world in the Cynosure and these proceedings as having been chosen a lecturer only over a considerable negative vote and as having threatened to leave the lecture field unless elected by the Natl. Convention. This slander should be counteracted. The Committee plead ignorance; say that it is a matter of misunderstanding merely; and want John Levington to dismiss the subject from his mind. That is a thing that can't be done. It is a subject that can't be dismissed from my mind. I am suffering now from that slanderous statement. That resolution is not all this body can do. Will my complaint be published? and this action with it?——

A motion to amend by adding that the papers be published in the Cynosure was immediately made and agreed to without dissent, and there seemed to be nothing more to be said.

The hour having arrived for the address of Rev. Woodruff Post, the order of the day was set aside and business continued; the time of speakers being limited to five minutes.

A resolution addressed to Christian ministers drawn up by Dr. Easton was presented by Rev. J. H. Lieper, and appears as finally adopted as the last in the series of resolutions adopted in the afternoon. Prof. Clark moved to amend by introducing briefly a reason for the implied recommendation. Rev. J. Levington denounced the idea of "affectionately requesting" men to leave the lodge classing them with adulterers, and arguing that we should be more severe with this evil. The resolution was finally sent to the committee where it belonged:

The place of holding the next anniversary was the next topic and drew a number of delegates into the discussion of different places. Rev. Woodruff Post nominated Rochester, N. Y.; J. T. Kiggins spoke for Indianapolis; another member for Philadelphia; C. F. Hawley suggested Jamestown, N. Y.; E. A Cook recommended Chicago. The merits of these points were discussed at length with no prospect of a satisfactory decision and the matter was finally referred to the Executive board; and this closed the business of the morning.

AFTERNOON.

Bishop Edwards in the chair.

Rev. B. T. Roberts from the Committee on Resolutions presented their report, which was adopted as a whole after but little discussion, during which Bro. Roberts explained his views on the injury done to the business interests of the country by the lodge combinations. (Bro. Roberts has promised at his convenience to reproduce these views at length for the readers of the Cynosure).

RESOLUTIONS.

1. Resolved, That all secret Corporations, Trade Unions and Leagues, that assume to control the price of land, labor, goods, produce, or transportation, amount, if successful, to monopolies; are conspiracies against the public welfare, and should be suppressed by legal enactment.

2. That for bodies of men to organize in secret, enact laws with penalties, administer oaths, levy contributions or taxes, and acquire military drill and discipline, is treasonable in its tendency, dangerous to our Republican institutions and should not be tolerated under any pretense whatever.

3. That while we view with alarm the encroachments of the Jesuitical priesthood on our common school system, and deprecate its influence on Republican institutions, we utterly deny that Freemasonry is in any sense the conservator of Republican institutions or of free common schools; and we hereby declare our conviction that in no way can the encroachments of Romanism be successfully met but by showing that Protestantism gives no countenance to the paganism of the lodge, and that our common schools shall neither be Godless nor sectarian.

4 That in the opinion of this Convention, the claim which is set up by members of the lodge for especial favor and consideration from the American people as true defenders and champions of the reformation against the Jesuitry of the Roman priesthood, is entirely without foundation; that, on the contrary, the lodge is Jesuitical itself: is totally and utterly void of the spirit of the reformation, is a swift and frightful agent of demoralization, and, while pretending opposition to the encroachments of the Roman priesthood, is in fact tending to corrupt the reformed church, to build up priest-craft, and destroy the Christian religion itself.

5. That in religion our Anti-masonic association claims to be, by the help of God, Christian, as contra-distinguished from the manufactured mystifications of paganism; and in politics we are Americans, and we will never knowingly lend our votes to elevate to office any persons who sustain foreign institutions, nationalities or ideas that are hostile to the Christian religion and republican government.

6. That ministers of the Christian religion have no right to prostitute to the uses of a foreign and Jesuitical institution called Freemasonry, a modern revival of ancient paganism, the sacred office with which by the assent of the people they have become invested; that by so doing they tend to confound fact with fiction, living truth with cunningly devised falsehood, saving faith with debasing superstition, thereby misleading and unsettling the faith of believers and hardening the unbelief of infidels and atheists: and if they are suffered to continue, unrepentant, in such a perversion of their sacred office, it is only through the neglect and omission of Christian duty on the part of their respective congregations.

7. That we affectionately request ministers of all Christian denominations, having connection with any secret society to "come out" therefrom and admonish the people of their congregations to have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them.

Rev. A. M. Milligan, D. D., of the Reformed Presbyterian church, Pittsburgh, was introduced by the chairman, and addressed the Convention at length on the character and binding force of oaths, with special reference to the obligations of the lodge. His address was eloquent, original and forcible, and seemed to the Convention one of the most satisfactory efforts of the occasion. Immediately as he closed, Rev. J. L. Barlow moved that the speaker be requested to prepare the address for publication in popular form; which was unanimously voted.

Rev. Woodruff Post of Rochester, N. Y., was then introduced and addressed the Convention on "The Genius of Masonry hostile to our Government and anti-Christian," in an interestering manner.

The following statement of the work in Missouri, prepared by Mr. G. W. Needels, delegate from that State, was presented by Mr. E. A. Cook, Mr. Needels having returned home to meet the Executive Committee of his State Association:

The work in Missouri is progressing as well as could be expected. Since the last anniversary we have organized our State, but have no general lecturer. A number of lecturers have spoken in many places and aroused the people to the dangers of these heathen mysteries that are filling our land. Some Masons and many grangers have been convinced that these institutions are selfish if not sinful. Some are publicly withdrawing and others quietly, so that the cause is manifestly gaining ground. The opposition of the craft is not of that bold domineering character as heretofore, but equally as great. They have resorted to the silent-tongue strategy, but work hard and long in the old, serpent style. Specimen pictures find their way to us and one man got a cartridge and orders to leave. But this only shows what extremities the old handmaid has to resort to in order to keep up appearances. Pres. J. Blanchard gave some lectures in our State, and they were well received. But our great need is a State lecturer and we must have one. I think there is no doubt but we will support one.

The report of the Recording Secretary on seceding Masons as voted by the Syracuse Convention, was read, giving the names of sixty seceders. This report was necessarily incomplete, there being no arrangement to secure names by correspondence. Several other names were handed in afterwards.

The minutes of the day's sessions were then read and revised, and a motion to adjourn was suspended by consent of the mover to hear a few remarks from Rev. A. L. Dearing of Connecticut, which were in brief as follows:

I am a novice in the business of this convention. My attention was first called to this reform last winter. Bro. Levington spoke in our town at that time, and I was led to examine his arguments and those of the fraternity and was led to conclude that my duty required me to oppose the lodge. I met many rebuffs, especially in Conference where, on examination, the lodge was found well entrenched, and excuses plenty for dull consciences on the subject. The State was now organized and he hoped the work would go forward and was willing to perform his part in it.

The session then adjourned after benediction by Pres. Blanchard.

EVENING SESSION.

The exercises of the closing session were opened with a song by Prof. G. W. Clark and prayer by Rev. Mr. Miller of Galion, Ohio. A large audience was present, many said to be Masons, attracted by the programme of the evening.

Rev. Henry Cogswell was the first speaker; his subject, Royal Arch Masonry. He spoke in an earnest and entertaining manner, and was rewarded with frequent applause, though the lodgemen as frequently reminded themselves that they were listening to a "perjurer." Mr. Cogswell's challenge to any Mason present to refute his statements was met by silence. In closing he made an eloquent plea for the Publishing House in Chicago, assuring the Convention that no blow would be more severely felt by the lodge than the successful completion of that enterprise.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard followed in eloquent, but disappointingly brief remarks on the social disorders connected with Freemasonry. He was followed in a closing address by Rev. W. E. Coquilette of Marengo, Ill., who spoke on the Fifth Libation of the Knight Templar's degree, and of his personal experience in lodges, chapters and commanderies in this country and Canada.

As he closed, Elder J. L. Barlow made a few impromptu and spirited remarks; the thanks of the Convention were tendered the citizens of Pittsburgh for the hospitality of their homes and their cordial co-operation with the Convention; also to Messrs Kleber & Co. for the use of a fine Burdett organ, which gave fine accompaniment to the singing under the hand of Mr. Clark; and, with the benediction, the Eighth Annual Convention adjourned.

Report of the Corresponding Secretary.

When soldiers are mustered after a hotly contested battle, the roll is called that the list of dying and dead may be made out. To-day we gather to gain courage for the future from the experience of the past. It is fitting on such an occasion to recall the names and deeds of those who, heretofore our comrades militant, have crossed the river and taken their places in the ranks of the triumphant armies of the skies. During the year, Gerrit Smith, of New York, Owen Cravath, of Minnesota, Rev. Adam Crooks, Rev. Robert Powell, of Michigan, Revs. Thomas E. Farnham and J. H. Peacock, of Illinois, and E. B. Rollins, of Vermont, Merchant Kelley, of Indiana, have gone to their rest and reward. They were friends to the poor and the oppressed when the night of slavery enveloped our land. They were laborers in this cause of light against darkness that calls us together to-day. In different places and in different ways they labored for the glory of God and the good of men. One born to wealth poured out his inherited treasure for the downtrodden and poor as clouds pour down rain on the thirsty ground. Two born to labor, labored until riches crowned their toil and then laid up those riches in heaven by devoting them to Christ's cause. The others having preached the Gospel on earth are gone to realize it in the city not made with hands. They were good soldiers of our Lord Jesus Christ. They did not fear to abide by his truth when it it was nailed to the cross of scorn or buried in the tomb of hate. The burden has fallen from their shoulders, the weapons from their hands. They have climbed the Celestial mountains and can now see that promised land they toiled to attain. Not less sweet is the rest of these soldiers who fall in unseen conflict for than of those who pour out life for fatherland on the field of blood. Together,

"On Fame's eternal camping ground,
Their silent tents are spread
And glory guards with solemn round
The bivouac of the dead."

It remains that we enter into their labors, and carry on to a glorious termination the glorious work on which they and we have entered.

HISTORY OF WORK.

At our last anniversary there were two subjects that occupied our attention very largely, viz: The means of raising funds and our duty in regard to political action. The course adopted for financial support was to sell tickets of annual membership at twenty-five cents each, and certificates of life membership at ten dollars each. In this way one hundred and ninety dollars have been raised, which has passed through the Secretary's hands, besides a sum nearly as large, which has been retained by lecturers on their salaries. A large number of tickets are still in the hands of agents for sale. It seems that this plan has not succeeded fully, and still a larger sum has been collected in this way than in any other, except by asking and receiving large gifts from individuals. If our organization is to be supported and increase its work, it must be in one of three ways, either by raising an endowment fund, the interest to be used in our work, by asking continually large donations from a few individuals, or by asking small donations from a great number. The first and third methods seem to the Secretary the ones which should be pursued. Let those who are able and willing to give largely have the assurance that they are not putting money into a bag with holes, but that their benefactions are in a place where they will be a permanent force. In the second place let us mass the anti-secret forces, and by obtaining from each a small sum receive in the aggregate sufficient money to do the work we all wish to see accomplished. It is right to learn even from an enemy, and we can easily see that the power of the lodges to override law, intimidate churches and draw in men, is derived in great part, from the fact that they have full treasuries sustained by small contributions from many members. The National Grange is said to have raised over two hundred thousand dollars last year by a tax of six cents per month on its members, while Masons claim to have raised $10,000,000 in 1874 in the same manner.

PERIODICALS.

The papers which are on record against this Anti-Christ are much the same as last year. The Methodist Free Press has been united to the Reformer which now appears as the Reformer and Free Press. The American Freeman is continued and gaining in power. The Anti-masonic Herald is still published by W. A. Wallace. The 4 denominational organs which are in the work against lodge favoritism and infidelity are all as last year. The organ of this association, The Christian Cynosure, has as last year about four thousand subscribers. This is not one-tenth of the number needed to make a strong national paper, and we must have such a paper if we are to have a strong national movement. If you load a cannon with a hundred pounds of buckshot and fire it at a fort three miles away it won't speck the wall. If you put in a hundred pound ball it will knock out a ton of stones. Buckshot are good and ounce balls are good, but for long range you must use heavy metal. Tracts are good and speeches are good, but to organize, the Republican party required the New York Tribune and one hundred and fifty thousand subscribers. To organize the opponents of lodgism will require a national paper. We are not jealous of local papers. We would they were ten times as many as they are. We must have and will have, if this movement is successful, a paper which shall take to every village and city the tidings which these Christian papers take to the denominations which they represent.

CONVENTIONS.

During the year State Conventions have been held in the following places: Lockport, New York; Chicago, Illinois; Dublin, Indiana; Brashear, Mo.; Darby Chapel and Mansfield, Ohio; Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Delevan, Wis.; Fenton, Mich.; Eldora, Iowa, and Hartford, Conn. Two of these conventions, those in Illinois and Michigan, were arranged for, in great part, by Mrs. M. E. Cook, who was elected Assistant Corresponding Secretary, and to whose labors the success of these meetings was due. The Assistant Secretary also prepared and sent out blank petitions to Congress asking for the withdrawal of the charter given to the Masonic Hall Association. These petitions have been signed by fourteen thousand persons and are awaiting the action of this Convention or the Board of Directors.

LECTURES.

There are now laboring in the lecture field and reporting to this Association, the following gentlemen: Rev. J. P. Stoddard, General Agent and Lecturer; Rev. H. H. Hinman, State Lecturer for Illinois; Rev. J. T. Kiggins, State Lecturer for Indiana; Rev. D. S. Caldwell, Lecturer for Ohio. The following lecturers are recommended by this Association, but employed by the Associations of their respective States: Rev. J. L. Barlow, New York; Rev. Philo Elzea, Wisconsin; Rev. John Levington was elected at Syracuse lecturer at large. He has labored throughout the New England States, and organized the Connecticut State Association.

It is needless to emphasize the statement that we imperatively need a lecturer in every State, to arouse, enlighten and unite the American people on this subject. The average pulpit and secular press are silent as the grave. The anti-secret denominations are very largely inactive, and this work will not prosper as it should until we have able men in every part of our country, backed by an able paper in the interior, telling the American people what is so plain to the thoughtful man, namely, that secret society is a conspiracy against God and man which ought to be put down. Our progress in this direction is encouraging, but we must hasten on.

INCORPORATION.

One grave obstacle to our success has been removed during the present year. Before this time our association had no legal existence; it was incapable of collecting a note, receiving a bequest, or acquiring a deed of real estate. That defect has been remedied and the National Christian Association has been organized and incorporated under the laws of the State of Illinois. The certificate for organization was signed in February and issued by the Secretary of State on the 17th of April following. The provision for membership is as follows:

BY-LAWS—MEMBERSHIP.

I. The membership of the National Christian Association shall consist of the persons incorporated, together with those they shall from time to time elect to increase their number, to fill vacancies, and also the presiding officer of the National Anniversary, chosen by that body who shall be a member ex officio. Any person recommended in writing by two members of said association, who is in sympathy with its objects, and who shall receive a two-thirds vote of the members present, shall be declared elected.

II. Those who held life-memberships in the unincorporated National Christian Association before the adoption of these by-laws, together with those who shall hereafter contribute twenty-five dollars to the treasury of the National Christian Association provided, further, that they shall be so elected by the delegates enrolled at the National Anniversary, shall constitute the honorary members of the National Christian Association.

The fourth by-law provides that the Association meet annually for election of officers and that the Board of Directors arrange for a national anniversary, which shall transact its own business and elect its own officers as heretofore. As at present constituted the National Christian Association is a corporate body, able to acquire property, and perform the labor of carrying on this reform far more effectively than a mere voluntary association incapable of transacting business legally, could.

PUBLISHING HOUSE.

The necessity of this action will be more apparent from what immediately follows: No sooner was the incorporation fairly completed, than Philo Carpenter, of Chicago, proposed to give the Association a building and lot in Chicago, Illinois. He made one condition, viz: that the Association secure from the friends throughout the entire country the sum of thirty thousand dollars as a fund with which to use the building. To have a well-built brick and stone structure, three stories high above a well-lighted, well ventilated basement, 25 by 70 feet on the ground, as a permanent head-quarters for the reform against the lodge, will give the movement in which we are engaged a moral influence that can be scarcely overestimated. The work of raising the necessary sum of money was entered upon at once, and has proceeded very satisfactorily thus far. A little over two months have passed since the plan was formulated, and already $4,300, or more than one-third of the sum needed to secure possession of the building, is secured. Provided ten thousand dollars are raised by the first of April next, the Association have full possession of the building, and provided the further sum of twenty thousand dollars is raised before the first of April, 1878, a deed will be given, conveying the entire property. Thus three hundred men, who are hostile to the unfruitful works of secretism, by giving one hundred dollars each, can secure for this work a building and lot worth twenty thousand dollars and a fund of thirty thousand with which to carry it on.

RENUNCIATIONS.

One of the effects of our movement is to be seen in the frequent renunciations of Masonry and other secret orders. Among them may be mentioned those of Rev. H. Cogswell, Rev. W. A. Coquilette and Rev. James Hankins. The most conspicuous instance of this sort during the present year is that of Edmond Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, Chicago. Becoming convinced that Freemasonry was an anti-Christian deception and fraud, he advised some who had entered to go no further. For this offense he was expelled from the lodge and is now initiating candidates publicly in Chicago and surrounding villages.

Masonry gives evidence of understanding our work by increased activity; temple dedications, lodge installations, corner stone layings, and Masonic lectures; the insanity respecting the Grange which is growing with marvellous rapidity; all these and like things indicate that Satan has come down, having great wrath. We have the satisfaction of knowing that it is because he has only a short time.

SUMMARY.

In conclusion we can see that we have four papers especially devoted to our cause, viz: The Christian Cynosure, Reformer and Free Press, American Freeman and Anti-Masonic Christian Herald. There are a large number of others that are conducted by opponents of secretism, viz: The United Presbyterian, Christian Instructer, Our Banner, Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter, American Wesleyan Religious Telescope, Evangelical Messenger, Christian Statesman, Free Methodist, Christian Pilgrim, Evangelical Repository, Lutheran Standard, Christian Secretary, Christian Repository, Literary Review, Earnest Christian, Bible Standard, Bible Banner and Biblical Messenger.

Six States have lecturers beside a number of gentlemen who lecture occasionally.

The Publishing House is within our reach if we are active and earnest.

We must push the circulation of our papers, increase the number of our lecturers, secure the Publishing House immediately and press on the work until the lodges, chapters, commanderies, granges and other midnight conspiracies are among the dark evils that have been.

Home and Health Hints.

Position in Sleeping.

It is better to go to sleep on the right side, for then the stomach is very much in the position of a bottle turned up side down, and the contents are aided in passing out by gravitation. If one goes to sleep on the left side, the operation of emptying the stomach of its contents is more like drawing water from a well. After going to sleep let the body take its own position. If you sleep on your back, especially soon after a heavy meal, the weight of the digestive organs, and that of the food resting on the great vein of the body, near the back bone, compresses it, and arrests the flow of blood more or less. If the arrest is partial, the sleep is disturbed, and there are unpleasant dreams. If the meal has been recent or hearty, the arrest is more decided, and the various sensations, such as falling over a precipice, or the pursuit of a wild beast, or other impending danger, and the desperate effort to get rid of it, arouses us; that sends on the stagnating blood, and we wake in a fright, or trembling, or perspiration, or feelings of exhaustion, according to the degree of stagnation, and the length of the effort made to escape the danger. Eating a large, or what is called "a hearty meal," before going to bed, should always be avoided; it is the frequent cause of nightmare and sometimes the cause of sudden death.

Utilizing Steam.—Steam may be made of great use in the kitchen. Stale bread may be steamed; potatoes are better steamed than boiled, and the same is true of dumplings and puddings.

But, aside from the steamer, steam will be found very useful if properly utilized. All the pots and kettles should be nicely fitted with tin basins of "pressed" ware; let the wire of the basin rest firmly on the top of the kettle. The basins being shallow, leave room enough beneath them for vegetables or meat, and they will be found to be as useful as another hole in the stove. Mashed turnip, a desirable but impossible breakfast dish for people who have any business on hand, if put into one of these basins, and steamed over a kettle of potatoes or other vegetables, will be found to be "as good as new;" it will remain light-colored and have no taste of scorched butter. If picked codfish and milk is to be prepared, put the fish, which has been soaked over night, on the stove, and let it boil a minute or two, pour off the water and set the basin over a boiling kettle, add the milk, seasoning and thickening—eggs, if used, should not be put in till it is nearly done—and it will cook nicely, without any danger of burning. Cracked wheat is best prepared in this way: Use one-third wheat and two-thirds cold water; stir occasionally, and add salt when nearly done. It is also a good substitute for a farina kettle for farina, blanc-mange, boiled custards, etc., but when much stirring is necessary a stone milk bowl should be used instead of the tin basin. Many more ways in which steam may be used will suggest themselves to the intelligent housewife, and we will merely add, that it requires about one-third more time to cook food by steam.

To Mend China.—Take a very thick solution of gum arabic in water, and stir into it plaster of Paris until the mixture becomes of a proper consistency. Apply it with a brush to the fractured edges of the china, and stick them together. In three days the articles cannot be broken in the same place. The whiteness of the cement renders it doubly valuable.

Farm and Garden.

Pole Beans Without Poles.

J. B. Root, of Rockford, Ill., tells in his Garden Manual how he succeeded last year in raising Lima beans without poles. One-fifth of an acre was planted in hills, six seeds to each, eyes down, and when the runners were three feet high if straightened up, the tips were nipped off, thus inducing prompt development of all blossoms, and a set of side shoots which clung to each other and formed a sort of cone.

No more pinching in was practised, for fear of too late a growth. The result was the plants seemed content with a less stature, and a large proportion of the settlements matured. The crop was fully one-half greater than ever before, and more than a half greater than that on poles the same season.

Hereafter he will confine himself to this method, with the difference that a lath, set deep, will be used for each hill. This will furnish something for the cone to cling to in a wind, and the top of the lath will be a good point at which to nip the vine.

Turnips.—Any farmer who grows three or five acres of corn may have three to five hundred bushels of flat or field turnips to feed, if he will take the trouble to save the seed. If any one wishes to try it next season, and will follow the directions here given, I will guarantee him a full crop every season.

Get good seed. Sow half a pound per acre in among the corn any time in July, when working the corn the last time. Be sure and put the seed down broadcast, before you plow or cultivate the corn, so as to work the seed into the ground; no matter if you are marking with the plow, you will not get them in too deep. The seed will come up sure. For the good of your corn and turnips, keep the weeds down.—A. Donald, in Moore's Rural New Yorker.

There are two principal reasons why a mellow soil prevents drouth. First cohesive soil passes off moisture faster than porous soil, and here, again, for two reasons. It is heated to a greater depth by the rays of the sun than the mellow soil; and from its continuity it enables moisture to be drawn up to the surface more easily.

It is apparent to any one that, if a fire be built upon a solid rock of a given size that the mass will be heated through more easily than if it were broken to pieces and fire made upon the pile. So with earth baked solidly together. It absorbs the rays of the sun to a greater depth than the loose, porous soil. On the other hand the friable soil gives up its heat sooner for the reason that it is strongly heated superficially, and of course parts with its heat as quickly.

The other principal reason why the mellow soil retains moisture to a greater degree than the hard one, is from its porosity. It is a well known law that air absorbs moisture in proportion to its temperature; every elevation of this temperature by 27° Fahrenheit doubling its capacity for holding moisture. A soil, when not filled with moisture, must be filled with air, and the air being of a higher temperature than the soil must part with a portion of this moisture. Thus, condensation is constantly going on. The continuity of the soil also being broken, the moisture from below is arrested and prevented from passing into the atmosphere as freely as it otherwise would.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

"A MASONIC REVELATION.—Mr. Samuel D. Greene is a venerable gentleman of the highest respectability, whose statements seem to be worthy of full credence. The Broken Seal; or, Personal Reminiscences of the Morgan Abduction and Murder, is the title of a book of some three hnndred pages just issued by him, purporting to give a full and accurate account, from personal knowledge, of the Morgan 'abduction,' and other masonic matters which made such an excitement in this country, now almost half a century ago."—Congregationalist and Recorder, Boston.

"We are acquainted with Mr. Greene, and have no doubt that his account is entirely reliable, and of great historic and moral interest. Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abdnction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."—Boston Daily News.

TRACT NO. 1:

HISTORY OF MASONRY.

BY PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD, OF WHEATON COLLEGE.

This is now published in three tracts of four pages each. Price of each, 50 cents per 100; $4 per 1000.

TRACT No. 1, PART FIRST—Shows the origin of Speculative Freemasonry, and is entiled "HISTORY OF MASONRY."

TRACT No. 1, PART SECOND—Is entitled "DESPOTIC CHARACTER OF FREEMASONRY"

TRACT No. 1, PART THIRD—Is entitled "FREEMASONRY A CHRIST-EXCLUDING RELIGION."

TRACT NO. 1, IN SWEDISH;

translated by Prof. A. R. CERVIN. A 15-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 2:

MASONIC MURDER,

By REV. J. R. BAIRD, of Pleasantville, Pa., a seceding Mason who has taken 17 degrees. A 2-page tract at 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 3:

SECRETS OF MASONRY,

BY ELI TAPLEY.

This is a 4-page Illustrated Tract, showing the signs, grips and pass-words, of the first three degrees. 50 cents per 100, or $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 4:

GRAND! GREAT GRAND!!

BY PHILO CARPENTER.

This is a 2-page tract, calling the attention of the public to the despotic and ridiculous titles of Freemasonry. Price 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1,000.

TRACT. NO, 5:

Extracts From Masonic Oaths and Penalties, as Sworn to by the Grand Lodge of Rhode Island.

This tract is a reprint of a tract published in 1834, and is a very weighty document. A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 6:

Hon. John Quincy Adams' Letter.

Giving His and His Father's Opinion of Freemasonry (1831.);

AND

Hon. James Madison's Letter,

Giving His Opinion of Freemasonry (1832).

TRACT NO. 7:

SATAN'S CABLE-TOW.

A 4-page tract. This is a careful analysis of the character of Masonic oaths, and shows them to be most blasphemous and unchristian; and the Masonic Cable Tow is clearly shown to be the Cable Tow by which Satan is leading thousands to eternal death. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 8:

Is a 2-page double tract, "ILLUSTRATED." The first page represents a Mason proclaiming the wonderful wisdom and benevolence of the order, with an article below, entitled "Freemasonry is only 152 Years Old," and gives the time and place of its birth.

The second side is entitled, "Murder and Treason not Excepted," and shows that the Masonic order is treasonable in its constitution, and is both anti-Republican and anti-Christian. Price 25 cents per 100; $2 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 9, ILLUSTRATED:

FREEMASONRY IN THE CHURCH.

Copy of a petition for the higher degrees of Freemasonry, in which Blasphemous and Despotic Titles are enumerated and prayed for. The Copy was printed for the use of "Occidental Sovereign Consistory S. P. R. S.," 32d degree—a Chicago Lodge—and was ordered by a deacon of a Christian Church who is Grand Orator of the Grand Lodge of Ill..

TRACT NO. 10:

CHARACTER AND SYMBOLS OF FREEMASONRY.

A 2-page tract, (ILLUSTRATED) by its "Grand Secretaries, Grand Lecturers, Perfect Prince Freemasons, Grand Inspector, Inquisitor Commanders, Grand High Priests," etc. The wonderful symbolical meaning of "the Cable Tow," "the Sqnare and Compass," "the Lamb Skin, or white Apron," and "the Common Gavel," are given in the exact words of the highest Masonic authority. 25 cents per 100 or $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 11;

Address of Niagara County Association, New York.

TO THE PUBLIC;

Concerning the Morgan Murder, and the character of Freemasonry, as shown by this and other Masonic murders. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 12:

JUDGE WHITNEY AND MASONRY.

This tract contains a condensed account of Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois, on charge of unmasonic conduct in bringing Samuel L. Keith the murderer of Ellen Slade, and a member of his Lodge, to justice, with Judge Whitney's subsequent renunciation of Masonry,

An 8-page tract, $1.00 per 100; $8.00 per 1000.

Chancellor of the University of New York, on SECRET SOCIETIES. A donble 2-page tract 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 14:

GRAND LODGE MASONRY.

ITS RELATION TO CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

Opening address before the Monmouth Convention, by PRES. J. BLANCHARD of WHEATON COLLEGE. This is a 16-page tract at $2.00 per 100; $15.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 15:

MASONIC OATHS NULL AND VOID.

A clear and conclusive argument proving the invalidity of any oath or obligation to do evil. By REV. I. A. HART, Secretary National Christian Association. Published by special order of the Association. 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 16:

HON. SETH M. GATES ON FREEMASONRY.

PROOF THAT THE INSTITUTION THAT MURDERED MORGAN IS UNCHANGED IN CHARACTER

This is a letter to the Monmouth Convention by Hon. Seth M. Gates who was Deputy Sheriff of Genesee County, and also Secretary of the Leroy Lodge at the time of Morgan's Abduction. A 4-page tract, 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 17:

Origin, Obligations and Expenses of The Grange.

WITH A CONSTITUTION OF A FARMERS' CLUB.

This little tract ought to be put into the hands of every Farmer in the United States. Four-page tract, 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO. 18:

HON. WM. H. SEWARD ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

Extracts from a Speech on Know-Nothingism in the U. S. Senate in 1855. The testimony of JOHN QUINCY ADAMS, MILLARD FILLMORE, CHIEF JUSTIC MARSHALL and others, is added.

A 2-page tract, 25 cents per 100; $2.00 per 1000.

TRACT NO, 19.

BRICKS FOR MASONS TO LAY.

TRACT NO. 20:

OBJECTIONS TO MASONRY.

By A SECEDING MASON, of Cornton, Vermont.

This tract contains many strong arguments against the Lodge drawn from personal experience, observation and study of its character. A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE,

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

GERMAN CYNOSURE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason

By REV. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Chur ,

WORCESTER, MASS.

This is our first German tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure . charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.

C&N-W LINES

This great corporation now owns and operates over two thousand miles of road. With one branch it reaches Racine, Kenosha, Milwaukee, and the country north thereof; with another line it pushes through Janesville, Watertown, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Escanaba, to Negaunee and Marquette; with another line it passes through Madison, Elroy, and for St. Paul and Minneapolis; branching westward from Elroy, it runs to and through Winona, Owatonna, St. Peter, Mankato, New Ulm, and stops not until Lake Kampeska, Dakota, is reached; another line starts from Chicago, and runs through Elgin and Rockford, to Freeport, and, via the Illinois Central, reaches Warren, Galena and Dubuque, and the country beyond. Still another line runs almost due westward from Chicago, and passes through Dixon, Sterling, Fulton, Clinton (Iowa), Cedar Rapids, Marshaltown, Grand Junction, Missouri Valley Junction, to Council Bluffs and Omaha. This last-named is the "GREAT TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE," and the pioneer overland line for NEBRASKA, COLORADO, UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA.

CALIFORNIA and the PACIFIC COAST.

It runs through the Garden of Illinois and Iowa, and is the best, safest, shortest and quickest route for OMAHA, LINCOLN, and other points in NEBRASKA; and for CHEYENNE, DENVER, SALT LAKE CITY, VIRGINIA CITY, CARSON, SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, and all other points west of the Missouri River.

If you want to go to Milwaukee, Manitowoe, Sheboygan, De Pere, Ripon, Baraboo, Eau Claire, Hudson, Stillwater, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Breckenridge, Morehead, Fort Garry, Winona, Plattville, Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Sioux City, Yankton, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, or a hundred other northren, north-western or western points, this line is the one you should take. The track is of the best steel rail, and all the appointments are first-class in every respect. The trains are made up of elegant new Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Coaches, luxurious Day Coaches, and pleasant lounging and smoking-cars. The cars are all equipped with the celebrated Miller Safety Platform, and patent Buffers and Couplings, Westinghouse Safety Air Brakes, and every other appliance that has been devised for the safety of passenger trains. All trains are run by telegraph. In a word, this GREAT LINE has the best and smoothest track, and the most elegant and comfortable equipment of any road in the West, and has no competitor in the country. It is eminently the favorite route with Chicagoans traveling west, north, or northwest, and is acknowledged by the traveling public to be the popular line for all points in Northren Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Dakota, Western Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California and the Pacific Slope.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway leave Chicago as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, Four through trains daily, Pullman cars on night trains.

For Winona and points in Minnesota, One through train daily.

For Dubuque, via Freeport, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Dubuque and La Crosse, via Clinton, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Sioux City and Yankton, Two trains daily. Pullman Cars to Missouri Valley Junction.

For Lake Geneva, Four trains daily.

For Rockford, Sterling, Kenosha, Janesville, and other points, you can have from two to ten trains daily.

The Lord is Come.

The Lord is come! On Syrian soil,
The child of poverty and toil—
The Man of Sorrows, born to know
Each varying shade of human woe:
His joy, his glory to fulfill
In earth and heaven, his Father's will;
On lonely mount, by festive board,
On bitter cross—despised, adored.

The Lord is come! Dull hearts to wake,
He speaks, as never yet man spake,
The truth which makes his servants free,
The royal law of liberty.
Though heaven and earth shall pass away,
His living words our spirits stay,
And from his treasures, new and old,
The eternal mysteries unfold.

The Lord is come! With joy behold
The gracious signs, declared of old;
The ear that hears, the eye that sees,
The sick restored to health and ease;
The poor, that from their low estate
Are roused to seek a nobler fate;
The minds with doubt and dread possessed
To find in him their perfect rest.

The Lord is come! The world's great stage
Begins a better, brighter age!
The old gives place unto the new;
The false retires before the true;
A progress that shall never tire,
A central heat of sacred fire,
A hope that soars beyond the tomb,
Reveal that Christ has truly come.

The Lord is come! In him we trace
The fulness of God's truth and grace;
Throughout those words and acts divine
Gleams of the eternal splendor shine;
And from his inmost Spirit flow,
As from a height of sun-lit snow,
The rivers of perennial life
To heal and sweeten Nature's strife.

The Lord is come! In every heart
Where truth and mercy claim a part;
In every land where right is might,
The deeds of darkness shun the light;
In every church where faith and love
Lift earthward thoughts to things above;
In every holy, happy home,
We bless thee, Lord, that thou has come.

Our Florida Letter.

DEVELOPING THE COUNTRY—FINDING A HOME IN THE EVERGLADES—ST. AUGUSTINE, AND ITS HISTORICAL CURIOSITIES.

MELLONVILLE & ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla. April, 1875.

Although the obstacles and uncertainties connected with the cultivation of the soil in Florida will wisely deter many who have good health and comfortable homes at the North from rashly engaging in it, it is plainly evident that an earnest attempt to subjugate and settle her is now being made—not this time by the indolent, gold-loving Spaniard, but by the energetic and persistent Yankee. In spite of the expression ever uppermost on the lips of many visitors: "Florida is a humbug;" "Nothing but her climate to recommend her;" "I would not take the whole State as a gift;" "Every one wants to sell out;" and the most dampening one of all from a professed scientist "Her soil is not yet made"—leaving us to guess how many millions of years may be necessary to complete the process,—we find that many are pleased and design to locate here. Some have poor health or sickly friends, and are convinced that life may be prolonged, at least, by a permanent residence. This alone will induce many families of means and intelligence to come who will form a nucleus for others. Those who have hastily made purchases will be obliged to stay or sell out. Capitalists who have invested largely will in self-interest develop the natural resources and offer inducements for emigration. We meet with persons who have been prospecting in different parts of the State. Some landing on the Gulf side have crossed over from Tampa Bay to the St. John's river in wagons, camping out at night. Others have visited the Indian river, not merely to enjoy the fine hunting and fishing it affords and to feast on its famous oranges and oysters, but to find out the resources of the adjacent region, and devise plans for opening uninterrupted communication between it and the St. John's river. Sooner perhaps than is dreamed of steamers will be ploughing their way the entire distance, or the iron horse will be waking up the lonely solitudes of its shore, and conveying the tourist to some thriving point at its terminus, where under the shade of the palm and cocoanut tree he may luxuriate in all the delicacies of a tropical clime.

The hardy pioneer, too, is on the track, he who has a home to make, and brawny arms and willing hands with which to do it. The high prices may drive him into the interior; but no obstacle can daunt him, and with self-denying labor, he will subdue the soil, drain the marshes, utilize the products, and rear for his family a comfortable and tasteful abode. One of this class we saw at Jacksonville on his way with his father, wife and child to Lake Worth, south of the Indian river. There he had found what he considered quite a paradise. His lumber for house building was on a boat which he had chartered for the purpose, and soon he expected to be sitting under his "own vine and fig tree." He was full of enthusiasm and when we again met him some weeks later, he told us he had discovered a way by which some very rich land, under water, could be drained at small expense. His garden was fine and he sanguine as ever of his success.

On our return trip from Mellonville we stop at Tocoi, and take street cars propelled by steam for St. Augustine, fourteen miles distant. Arrived at the depot a half mile drive takes us over the Sebastian river, through a marshy district, where whiffs of salt air make our hearts bound at our near proximity to the ocean, on to a street leading down the right hand side of the Plaza. This is a small park containing a quaint old Spanish monument in the centre. At our left hand as we enter facing this park is a building containing the post office, library and reading rooms, law offices and a public school. On the North side is the old cathedral and St. Augustine hotel. On the opposite side is a neat Episcopal church, several stores and a dwelling house. Before us lies the Matanzas river (a lagoon) with its inlet sweeping around the northern end of Anastasia island, into the ocean a mile or two beyond. The old and new light-houses are in full view, and the white caps of the breakers, as the waves ceaselessly dash upon the sand bars are seen in the distance. The sea wall built of coquina with a coping of granite three feet in width, extends a mile along the shore from the barracks on the right to Fort Marion on the left.

We are happy in securing a good boarding place near the sea wall in sight of the breakers. Aside from the ocean and the pure air, our first impressions are not very favorable. We wonder that the Plaza is not made more attractive when such abundant resources are at hand, and the market at the sea end savors too strongly of poor beef to please the esthetic taste. The narrow streets, from ten to thirty feet in width; the many prison-like looking houses rising directly from the ground with no ornament, built of coquina (a concretion of shells) and cemented, some of them whitewashed and others weather-stained and dilapidated, with wooden shutters; the high close fences and small stores make a dismal, homesick feeling come over us, which, however, is soon dispelled as the hidden mysteries of the place unfold themselves.

Pleasant surprises continually greet us. The sudden opening of a door as we pass along the gloomy high wall of a narrow street discloses a garden filled with luxurious vegetation and gay with flowers. A glance into an open window at eve of some of the somber old Spanish houses, reveals comfort and luxury in striking contrast with their exterior. Entering one morning the yard of one of the fine modern residences we soon found ourselves in a magnificent orange grove of 800 large trees, concealed from outside view by a ridge of soil thrown up inside the fence and covered with shrubs. The approach to another fine building is through a beautiful avenue of orange trees, the branches interlacing over head and forming a perfect archway. The date palm tree rears its stately head in many places, and glimpses of Eden may be caught in all directions as we peer through close fences at the roses, or are admitted into courts where the palm, orange, lemon, citron and banana thrive so luxuriantly.

But the historical associations connected with St. Augustine are its great attraction. Here we begin to realize what we had scarcely thought of before, that Florida is an old country, and this the oldest European town in North America. A new interest invests these old houses and the moss-covered and roofless and dilapidated ones seem most to be venerated of all. The narrow streets, overhanging balconies, cathedral, old gateway, and fort, all speak of another people, another tongue, and of bygone centuries. In a contemplative mood we ascend the sea wall, walk to the old fort and on the fine promenade which its top affords give ourselves up for a time to retrospection of the past. The Indian, Spaniard, Englishman and American pass successively in review. The record of each is stained with acts of cruelty and oppression and written in blood. The memory of the horrible massacre by the Indians, that ushered in the Seminole war, is perpetuated in a quiet cemetery near the barracks, where three white pyramids cover the bones of Col. Dade and his company of 107 who there perished. In 1565, the year St. Augustine was founded, fourteen miles down the Matanzas river on the southern end of Anastasia island, two hundred and eight poor shipwrecked French Huegenots, on one day, and one hundred and thirty-four on another, were murdered among the sand hills, by the bigoted Romish zealot Men-andez,—his hands still reeking with the blood of the martyrs of Fort Carolina. Two hundred others escaped by fleeing in the night. A lonely fort now stands on the point of a sandy, barren island, cut off by a portion of the inlet from the main one. Desolate as the grave no sounds disturb its solitude save the washing of the tide and the screaming of the sea bird, and no signs of life are seen but the innumerable fiddler crabs that cluster around its base.

This is their monument, built by the survivors, who afterwards themselves fell victims to Menandez' persecutions. Many people land there, walk through the marshy ground, take a piece of stone from the crumbling wall, carry it home and repeat the tale of horror. This massive fort on which we walk, built by the combined labor of the Spaniards and Indians, during more than a century's length of time, echoed to the tread of English soldiers when we were struggling for our dearly bought liberties. A plain monument, not visible from this point, inscribed with the names of the Confederate dead, proclaims the fratricidal strife that overthrew oppression and secured equal rights to all.

But it is time that we retrace our steps. We gladly turn from these sad pictures of the past to the peaceful scene before us. The lovely bay is dotted all over with sail boats filled with civilized and happy people, and we return, trusting that a brighter record is in store for Florida.

Masonic Promises.

BY D. B. TURNEY.

[Concluded from last week.]

Sir William Draper said, "I could give some instances where a breach of promise would be a virtue." Yes, and so can any man who will study the promises exacted in Freemasonry. For Masonic promises are wrong:

1st. They fail to have Bible sanction, or the commendation of an enlightened Christian conscience.

2nd. They are sealed by unauthorized and extrajudicial penalties, the performance of which is an unlawful.

3d. They are secured by misrepresentation and false pretenses.

4th. A fulfillment of them would violate prior and lawful engagements.

5th. An adherence to their terms would involve moral culpability.

6th. They relate to customs, etc., of which the man is confessedly ignorant at the time of giving them.

7th. They have a fraudulent tendency.

8th. Their consequences justify their nullification.

9th. They impair the power of civil law, and gradually lead to the loss of personal liberty.

10. They interfere with duties arising from the various relations of life.

11th. They often serve to effect a terrible impairment of life's security.

12. They frequently school men to the gratification of malignant feelings.

13. They enable one man to encroach upon the rights of another, and tend to foster licentiousness, by affording dissolute men the means of lustful gratification.

14th. They require a violation of the law of God, the dignity of manhood, and the principles of true religion.

15th. They nurture selfishness at the expense of generosity.

16th. They bring trouble upon families, communities, churches, nations and individuals, and have a corrupting effect upon social life.

17th. They devise and erect a false standard of morality, and establish a line of caste independent of merit.

18th. They effect an abrogation of the rights of conscience, and introduce an arbitrary ground of accountability to a man-made ritual which claims as much authority over the soul as God himself could possibly exercise.

19th. They crush the spirit of progress, stay the wheels of inquiry, and block up the pathway of liberty.

20th. They hurry men into strange excesses, and produce dissentions where peace and harmony would otherwise prevail.

21st. They rouse a spirit of resentment against some of the purest institutions of the age, and revive pagan customs that ought to be buried in oblivion.

22d. They alienate many men from their duties to their country, and abrogate in some husbands their natural affection toward their wives.

23d. They prostitute the sanctity of benevolence into the vileness of pecuniary corruption for the interest of the immediate heirs of the votaries of the fraternity.

24th. They involve features and principles, expressed or implied, that are odious to the good, contemptible to the wise, and injudicious to the whole community.

25th. They authorize such wholesale persecution of the opponents of the system, that no honest or good man is safe from the felonious touches of slander.

26th. They beget a general distrust and dissatisfaction by pledging support to those who, in the interest of Freemasonry, falsely and maliciously traduce the best and purest characters in the nation.

27th. They are the main prop to all the false pretensions of the system, and by means of these oaths, the order manages to bolster up its false claims of antiquity, respectability, philosophy, and hand-maidenship to Christianity, in apparent unmindfulness of the fact that Christ has said: "What ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." "There is nothing hid, which shall not be manifested; neither was anything kept secret, but that it should come abroad." "Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets shall be proclaimed upon the housetops."

The facts on which I have founded these remarks, are too notorious to admit of any honest denial. They require an application and admit of but one addition: that Freemasonry must die, or our government must perish. Both cannot survive. The antagonism between them is too marked and too notorious to admit of doubt. The civil law establishes the illegality of extra-judicial oaths, and forbids any organization of men to exercise a jurisdiction over the lives and property of citizens of our national republic; but Freemasonry commits the crime of treason against the government, and engenders a misprison of treason against the civil law, by assuming that its own oaths and obligations are just as binding. If the oaths of the civil law are no more to be regarded than are the oaths and obligations of Freemasonry, then the light of our political liberty has fled, and the supposed authority of the government is a huge burlesque upon the ignorance and credulity of its subjects and citizens. This is a consideration of the very gravest magnitude and importance. The frivolous ceremonies and ostentatious displayments of lodge-pomp and pride, are perhaps crippling to the energies of spirituality and fatal to the grace of humility; but the disregard for civil law, induced by the assumption that Masonic promises are as binding as the oaths of a regularly constituted law-court, is absolutely a grievous crime against this government. Such an assumption must necessarily have an immoral bearing in society, an evil influence on the votaries of the order, and a dangerous tendency toward impairing the security of human life. And, as concerns the matter of fact, there is less general safety of life in a Masonic community than in an unmasonic one. The statistics of Gerrit Smith have proved this.

The security and stability of our national government may be at stake. In many points, the laws of the land and the requirements of Freemasonry are at variance. In such cases, the legal authority of the State must supercede and nullify the mandates of the lodge. There is no alternative. And whenever and wherever this is the case, Masonic promises cannot be of any weight either in a moral or legal aspect, and those who break such promises deserve praise, while those who keep such promises are to be blamed.

Church and Lodge in San Francisco.

A population of 275,000 is claimed for this city. What are the church accommodations for this vast multitude? I find on examination that there are about fifty-five places where the Gospel is preached every Sabbath. The Baptists have five churches; the Congregationalists five; the Episcopalians and Lutherans, each, seven; the Methodists ten (two of them German); the Presbyterians twelve. There are three churches for the colored people, three for the Chinese. The Disciples have one and the Plymouth Brethren one. There is also a mariner's church. One-third of the churches are quite small, with congregations averaging less than 100. The congregations of the remaining-two thirds will not average over 300. This estimate gives us only a little over 12,000 regular church-goers, less than five per cent. of the population. Where are the rest of these people on the Sabbath? Probably from ten to twenty thousand children go to Sabbath-school, more or less. Perhaps ten thousand are too young or too unwell to go out. Make the most liberal allowances and yet over 200,000 of our people who are able to go and hear the Gospel every Sabbath do not go. Where do they go? We have thirteen Roman Catholic churches, two Swedenborgian, one Universalist, one Unitarian, one of the Mormons, one of the Seven-day Adventists, and five Hebrew synagogues. These attract to what is called a religious service, possibly 20,000 people. Have the rest, the 180,000 not yet accounted for, nothing as a substitute for the church and its services? In trying to find an answer to this question I encountered this remarkable fact: There are in San Francisco organizations of semi-social, semi-benevolent character: lodges of Masons, Odd-fellows, Red Men, Druids, Templars, Champions; clubs, circles, chapters, divisions, etc. etc. I have counted only such organizations as have a regular hall or assembly-room and are not connected with any church, either Protestant or Catholic. If these organizations average only a hundred members each, the aggregate is over 30,000. Church-members no donbt are found in some of these organizations, and there are those who belong to more than one of them. Yet I believe that nearly half of our adult male population is in some society outside of the Christian church which is to it a substitute for the church. Many of these societies hold their regular meetings on the Sabbath, and others make excursions on that day, so that their influence is thrown, to a great extent, in direct opposition to that of the churches. Thus social life on this coast is largely anti-Christian. It is organized on an infidel basis. Men feel that they do not need the church; that they have all they want without it.

THREE HUNDRED AND FIVE

This state of things is not peculiar to California, but there is more of it here than any other part of the country. Only about three per cent. of the population on this coast belongs to the evangelical churches. Hence this is still a great missionary field. There is wealth here, there is enterprise, there are all the elements of natural prosperity; but "holiness to the Lord" is not written on our mines and our farms. The great land owners and money kings are, as a class, irreligious. Very few of them are ever outside contributors to any of our Protestant institutions. Hence Christians here have heavy burdens to bear. It costs a great deal to sustain our churches and that cost falls usually upon a few. In many cases the great est part of it falls upon the minister. A brother told me to-day that his expenses exceeded his salary $800 a year. At this rate the little property he brought here with him will soon be exhausted. His is not a peculiar case. Outside of the larger cities the salaries of ministers are small, much smaller than the average salaries in "the States."—San Francisco Correspondence Herald and Presbyter.

SETENTH ANNIVERSARY

ADDRESS OF PROF. MILTON WRIGHT.

Secret Societies and the Testimony Against Them.

It is to the features of secret societies that your attention is invited during this brief address. Some may say that none should speak of what they have never seen with their own eyes. This would shut us out from the ancients, from most of their deeds, their works, their institutions, their glory; the lessons of their rise and their fall; their prosperity and felicity; their decadence, ruin and woe. It would likewise shut us out from foreign nations and countries; it would ignore most of the affairs of our own country, of our neighborhoods, and even of our own home circles; for everywhere we are mostly dependent on information derived from others. So with regard to secret societies. So much relating to them is known to be unmistakably true, that it almost bewilders an anti-secresy speaker as to choice of what he shall say.

Photographs and portraits present features which we have never seen; maps exhibit countries we have never visited; engravings and paintings represent scenes, never otherwise brought before our vision. History introduces us to ages past, which otherwise would be to us unknown. Through the testimony of others we receive coveted knowledge of things which we could never desire to see; and even holy writ makes known to us a place and state the horrors of which no one could wish ever to realize in experience. So, well attested and amply corroberated revelations of the obligations, ceremonies, and doings of secret orders are furnished by those once inveigled into lodges, but who afterward have freed themselves from its dominion and have given their testimony to warn others against being involved also in its bondage and iniquity No one now need to be hoodwinked and led, in undress with a cable tow about his neck, into a lodge room, nor to swear to abide the penalty of having his throat cut from ear to ear, his tongue torn out by the roots, his body severed, his skull smote off, and his brains exposed on some tall spire of Christendom—all this in order to be made acquainted with the mysteries of Freemasonry. Nor need he be lead blindfold to a place where his eyes may suddenly be opened ou a human skeleton, nor listen to the story of David and Jonathan's disinterested, faithful and unexampled love—listen to the exquisite story perverted to the illustration and glorification of the bought friendship of a clan; nor need he swear by himself (an oath which Christ expressly forbade) and sport the ribbons and wear the yoke of Odd-fellowship in order to know its mysteries. Odd-fellow! a name betraying in its very composition its origin. No one need drink wine from a humau skull, solemnly invoking triple damnation upon his own soul if his fealty to the lodge should ever falter, iu order to know the obligation of a Royal Arch Mason. The obligations, the principles, the methods and the worship of the lodge are amply set forth by numerous and unquestionable witnesses, and attested by evidence much stronger than that on which nine-tenths of the criminals led to execution receive the verdict of "guilty" from the jury, and the sentence of death from the conscientious, discriminating undoubting judge of the law. A man zealous to know Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, Good Templarism, or the beauties of the heathen deities, Pomona and Flora, as worshipped in the songs of the grangers, need not pay his money to buy stale secrets, any more than a man need plunge into a volcano's crater, to test the power of its hidden fires, or kill his wife to know the depth of Herod's remorse over his murdered Marianne, or go to perdition that he may realize its unutterable woe. Men, good men, men in numbers large enough, have paid their money where stale secrets are sold in closely curtained markets; enough have taken upon them the yoke of clanhood slavery; enough have been spotted with its guilt; enough have felt its sharp iron in their souls; enough have come forth from its prison-house rejoicing, but gaunt and trembling, like lately escaped prisoners from Andersonville or Libby, "Out of the jaws of death; out of the mouth of hell." Why should any intelligent person of this age imitate the verdant youth who, in the chilling blasts of a cold December night, stands for hours, holding a sack to gather the snipes which boys have hitherto failed to drive into the nets of his witless predecessors.

Why should any one think that the mysteries of secret societies have not been revealed? The Eleusinian mysteries, the secret things of Jesuitism and of the Papacy, of the Sons of Liberty (or Knights of the Golden Circle), of the KuKlux clan, the secrets of royal courts, corrupt schemes in government, conspiracies in their various forms have all been revealed. It is confessed by every intelligent man that these have been revealed. Then why does any one deem it incredible that Freemasonry, Oddfellowship, Good Templarism and the grange should be revealed? Conspiracies can not long be kept secret. Military councils held in Washington were often well reported in Richmond; those of Paris, well digested in Berlin. If secrets of all time, of all kinds, sealed with obligations ever so binding, and visited with penalties speedy and sure, are confessedly revealed in every other case, why are we called upon to believe that Freemasonry has existed one hundred and fifty-eight years, and Oddfellowship for sixty-two years, and their mysteries have never been made known to the world? What shall we say to the proposition of Freemasonry, when it assumes to have existed for nearly or quite three thousand years, in various nations, including in its realm multitudes of men of every grade of morcharacter, and (not a few of these seceding or non-affiliating) still its oaths, ceremonies, its secret teachings and methods have never been revealed! If Masons ask us to believe that it has existed for over one hundred and fifty years without its mysteries being exposed to the light, they ask too much. They ask us to outdo the credulity of any April fool. Yet some men of seeming intelligence, even business men, clergymen, editors, and educators, pretend to embody in themselves the length and breadth, the depth and height of such verdancy, nay of such downright stupidity! The grange has been revealed; the Sons of Liberty have been exposed; the Good Templars' obligations are made known; the KuKlux have been compelled to face the light of day; Odd-fellows conceal their obligations, signs and grips no more; the Jesuit's oath and methods are open to the knowledge of those who read; Freemasonry with its barbarous oaths, its lodge-ceremonies, its conspiracy against the rights of others, and its signs and grips is open to the inspection of all disposed to examine its false pretenses, its perversions of Scripture, its Christless worship, its pernicious influences, and its evil workings. To the truth of the revelations of Freemasonry we have the testimony of Rev. David Bernard of life-long reputation for truthfulness, integrity and piety; of Samuel D. Greene, the sole surviving companion of Morgan and Miller: of President Chas. G. Finney, known throughout America, and in Europe, as one of the most intellectual, spiritual, and truthful men of the age; of William Wirt, one of the finest orators and greatest statesmen America has ever produced; of Richard Rush, one of the ablest, most upright, and patriotic men that ever honored American politics, or filled a place in any President's cabinet. We have also the testimony of a host of other men distinguished in their States, in their churches, and in the communities in which they live, as men of purity, truth, influence and usefulness, who with a still larger number less known but filling well the ranks of citizenship, of members of the church of God, and whose testimony is unimpeachable, join with those in clear, solemn, positive testimony concerning the mysteries of the Masonic realm, from which they have come out, the wrath and venom and secret plottings of which they have braved, renouncing their allegiance to it for time and to all eternity.

Corroborating the testimony of those Masons truly free, we have the concurrent testimony of Colonel Wm. A. Stone, a distinguished statesman, who apologized for the order but gave its obligations as administered in the grand lodge of his State, and others of reputable character who, like him, apologizing for Freemasonry, confirm the testimony of the martyrs and confessors who stirred this whole nation with their testimony, and struck the Masonic system a blow which sent it in swift decadence toward the confines of death, from which it could return only when other forms of secret organizations had paved the way for its long-bared, cloven feet.

Added to the testimony of seceding and apologizing Freemasons, was the statement of adhering Masons, who, in the persons of the officers of the Grand Lodge of the State of Rhode Island, being summoned before a committee appointed by the Legislature to investigate the subject, there gave the obligation of the order as administered in that State, which, except in a few, unessential particulars, agrees substantially with the revelations of Morgan, Bernard, Allyn, Richardson and Stone. Soon after this came the confession of a nation of Freemasons in the desertion of the order, the disbanding of lodges and even the discontinuance for years of the meetings of the Grand Lodge of the United States. Take now the fact that the testimony of seceding, apologizing, deserting and adhering Masons—a great cloud of witnesses, truly—substantially concur in one and only one grand statement, harmonious in all its divisions and particulars, with the no less significant fact that this grand statement as a whole, or in its essential departments, has never been positively and unequivocally denied by the Grand Lodge of the United States, by any State lodge, nor in public by Freemasons of character and reputation at any time nor anywhere, and how could the argument in support of the truth of the relations of Morgan, Bernard, Stone and the officers of the Grand Lodge of the State of Rhode Island, be made stronger and more conclusive this side of the day when God shall judge the secrets of men in the person of our Lord Jesus Christ; when every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess; when Masons, who by their lodge decrees, bore William Morgan from his wife and helpless children, in defiance of the law, and in contempt of the power of the greatest State of this Union, in violation of the statutes of Jehovah, the majesty of the great I AM, and the precepts of the Redeemer of mankind—imprisoned him in violation of all law, human and divine, deliberately in council inquisitorial planned his death, and took him—having denied him, in his preparation for his last conflict on earth, a copy of the Bible he loved—and fastening a weight to his body, plunged into the depths of the lake the mortal part of the martyr of truth and mental freedom, whose soul, like that of old John Brown, is still marching on. Since then Niagara's thunders roar in condemnation of a foul outrage, the intrinsic wickedness of which is enhanced a thousand fold by the fact the leading spirits of the lodge, having planned and consummated the deed, justified it and shielded the perpetrators of it from the avenging arm of the law of the great Commonwealth of New York; nor has the Grand Lodge of the United States, or that of the State of New York, formally disowned or repudiated that murder, to this day; but adherents in the lodge bandy the name of Morgan in derision, if they mention it at all, or exhibit a venom toward his memory worthy of the princes of the pit who held communion with the conclave of the lodge when the cold murder of a husband or father was planned, that a witness of the truth might be immolated for Freemasonry's sake. Niagara's roar shall not be hushed, till the Son of Man shall come, and before the shining face of the Judge of the living and the dead, a multitude innumerable of those who committed that murder and of those who by approval have become accessories to it, shall roar loud as Niagara's flood, "Amen!" To the condemnation which the righteous Judge shall pronounce against the murder of William Morgan—William Morgan murdered, cruelly murdered, for what? For that which heaven and earth declare to be the truth. Truth concerning what? Concerning oaths, and ceremonies, and teachings, and methods which cannot bear the light of day!

It is no wonder that that great representative of truth, justice and patriotic statesmanship, John Quiney Adams, devoted his strength of mind, his learning and his genius to the exposure of Freemasonry; that William Wirt, with his noble character and rare graces of rhetorie and elocution, himself once a Master Mason, uttered his condemnation of the order; that William Rush, the worthy son of that world-renowned philanthropist who was one of the signers of the Declaration of American Independence—that Richard Rush, a Fellow Craft Mason, raised his voice, and subscribed his name, in testimony against the dangers and abominations of the lodge; that Thaddeus Stevens, the acknowledged leader of the American Congress in the most perilous times our nation ever knew, and in the period of reconstruction, when order was to be brought out of chaos—that Thaddeus Stevens, the great Pennsylvania Commoner, upon whose memory the descendants of American patriots throughout all generations, shall heap garlands of praise, and the sable sons and daughters of a race redeemed from bondage, shall, with their advancing civilization, rear a worthy monument to his fame—that Thaddeus Stevens in his life, and to his grave, should have hated Freemasonry as he so intensely hated every conspiracy against the rights of mankind. It is no wonder that Daniel Webster said that Freemasonry ought to be put down by law; that Edward Everett directed the polished shafts of his rhetoric against the lodge; that Gerrit Smith, whose genial, philanthropic soul, loved all mankind, and, euthusiastieally, all that is truly beneficient, hated secret societies with a hatred intense, mingled with pity for its deluded serfs. It is no wonder that Horace Mann, who hated secret societies as he also hated slavery, should have arraigned Masonry and all its kindred, with the strength of his logic, and denounced it; that Charles Sumner, colossal in genius, learning and eloquence; foremost of his age in patriotism, philanthropy and great-souled hatred of all shams, meanness and wrong, should have held opposition to secrecy as only second in duty to that of opposition to slavery, "the sum of all villainies." It is not astonishing that Henry Wilson, the great anti-slavery Senator, and the honored Vice-president of the United States, should, amid all the bewitching enticements of office and popularity, strongly disapprobate the conclaves of secretism. Nor is it astonishing that Charles Francis Adams, the son of the old man eloquent, the grandson of John Adams, of revolutionary fame,—Charles Francis Adams, in learning, strength and polish,, standing in the front rank of American orators, in diplomacy without a rival in this country; the bright star of the Genevan arbitration—it is not astonishing that such a man should, not long since, within the observation of the people of this country and of the civilized world, stand, and in language rivalling elegance that of classical antiquity proclaim sentiments of opposition to secret societies.

It is no wonder that Professor Stuart, with his eminent learning and piety; that President Fiuney, in his unconverted days a bright Master Mason, with his surpassing talent and spirituality; that President Blanchard, a champion of reform from the days of his early manhood; that President Fairchild, the polished ornament of a college exhibiting the spirit of the angelic song, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men;" that Albert Barnes, whose matchless notes on portions of the Old Testament, and the whole of the New, shall, in succeeding ages, through the mouths of a host of ministers, inculcate piety, teach theology, and preach salvation to multitudes of the human family. It is no marvel that such men as these should give their voices in opposition to the blasphemous obligations, the foolish ceremonies, the Christless worship, the Scripture-perverting teachings, and the underhand methods of secret societies. It is no wonder that Thomas H. Stockton, one of the grandest pulpit orators America has ever produced, should have said: 'Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man—an American—and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity to approve of secret institutions of any kind."

Freemasons and Odd-fellows most unfairly, being trained to craft, dodge the question concerning the truth of exposures of the order. One will say: "I never took such oaths as are set forth in the exposures of Freemasonry, and I am a Master Mason;" but he refers to oaths higher in degree; for Master Masons have taken but three degrees of the order. Another plays the game of abused innocence, saying: "Do you think I would submit to such degrading ceremonies?" Still another pronounces all statements about the oaths and ceremonies of the lodge lies, because he can find one or two points of minutiae in which his recollection varies a hairbreadth from the statement of an anti-secrecy book or lecturer. What indeed must be the horrid nature of Masonic oaths if its millions of every sort and character have never revealed them! They must be stronger than have ever been known on earth, in heaven, or in hell! more horrid than revelations of the order have ever declare them to be. Masonic secrets, so-called, are secrets no longer, and the lodges that sell them, sell shams.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT BLANCHARD.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy.

Ladies and Gentlemen, Members of the National Christian Association, Friends and Fellow Citizens:

We have come back to this first home of our national organization, like glad children to their birth-place. We are met where, seven years since, we plighted faith to God and each other, to resist what we believed to be, in its origin, and true nature, a fourfold conspiracy against our religion and our government; against God and the human race; a conspiracy not less, but far more fatal because secret; and so secret that thousands of well disposed men embarked in it "know not what they do;" but are like the betrayers and crucifiers of old, blinded by personal and pecuniary ends, of whom it is written: "Had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." Let us pause and review our ground. Let us re-examine our principles and our purposes: what we believe and what we hope to do.

It is easy to bring rhetorical indictments. But are not our fears exaggerated, and our conclusions groundless? If they are not, and if we can convince sober, thinking men that they are not; if we persuade them that our country and religion are in actual, pressing danger; that, as has been well said, "Secret societies and the civil government are two masters whom no one man can serve;" then all good men will be with us. Surely they will be with us, if convinced that the dangers we denonnce are real; that our principles are sound; our objects attainable; our aims just.

As to names and professions: we are Christians in religion; and in politics, Americans. Now seven years ago (May, 1868,) we voted to call ourselves a "Christian Association opposed to Secret Societies." In our incorporation, (April 18, 1872), we named ourselves simply "The National Christian Association," and put our object in our constitution. We hope to make it understood by the country and the world, that Christianity is opposition to secret societies, unless it is spurious Christianity. For a like reason we voted last year at Syracuse (1874), to call ourselves in politics simply Americans; believing that the lodge extinguishes American principles, as the choke damp extinguishes light and life. Are we in error? Or are these doctrines true? The proof that lodge-masonry subverts Christianity are as numerons as the principles in the two systems.

Christianity places men in the church as equals in Christ. Masonry packs them in higher and lower degrees in the lodge. The law of Christ is a "perfect law of liberty," whose highest penalty is withdrawal of love and fellowship. The law of the lodge is unreasoning obedience, and its penalty, death. No appeal lies from a local lodge-master to his lodge; and their standard lexicon declares, "The edicts of a Grand Lodge must be obeyed without examination!" And men, freemen (!) submit to such laws as burglars, bandits and brigands obey their laws, for the sake of the clan. The brotherhood of Christianity is based on regeneration and love: that of the lodge on oaths, imprecations and terror. Christianity, too, abolished the Jewish distinctions against women. The lodge retains and intensifies them. It swears its members never to initiate women. Then, also, Christ's Gospel is pre-eminently for the poor. But the lodge excludes the poor. It receives its members for money and drops them when they cease to pay.

Thus the lodge is anti-Christ in its spirit, constitution, laws, principle and forms. But the crowning proof of its fearful antagonism to Christ is, that while Christ commanded Christianity to be preached "in all the world," "to every creature," the lodge swears its members to "conceal" Masonry in all the world, from every creature but themselves, on pain of death by mangling and mutilation! So plain is it that the lodge, in theory at least, is death to the Christian religion. And its theory is the law of its practice.

The proofs of its antaognism to civil government and especially to our own, are equally plain. The theory of American politics is that, under God, the people are the source of power, and so "ordain" their own constitutions. Even in England, the mightiest and most stable of hereditary monarchies, the supreme power has again and again reverted to the people. This was the case when John granted the trial by jury; when Charles I. lost his head, and when James II. lost his three kingdoms. But, in Masonry, the Grand Lodge, which consists of a few officials, is the source of power, and issues all local constitutions, called charters, which it can withdraw, erase or extinguish at its pleasure! And as those composing the Grand Lodge are known to comparatively few, the Masonic masses are, as a general rule, in the words of Robinson, who had visited the leading lodges of the world, "underling adherents to unknown superiors." These statements rest on the authority of Chase, Mackey, Robison, Rebold, Arnold and other Masonic writers. And, taken thus from its own standards, there is not a completer despotism on earth, or one more utterly subversive of every American idea and principle, civil or religious.

But facts are more striking than principles. Does Freemasonry, it is asked, in fact destroy religion and government, and especially popular government? I need scarcely say that its history, as well as its theory and principles, charges the lodge with defiance and demolition of all law and all religion but its own.

William L. Marcy was appointed by the New York Legislature, its Special Justice to try the Morgan murder cases. When he saw that grave, honored, respected citizens regarded falsehood and perjury as Masonic virtues if called for by the lodge, Judge Marcy exclaimed, from the bench, "If men will defy heaven and earth, what can human courts do?" And John C. Spencer, then first of living jurists, perhaps, who was special counsel and the assistant of the New York Executive in the same cases, in his letter resigning the office, charged the Governor himself with betraying his State in favor of the murderers of Morgan! These, with multitudes of cases equally authentic, are but the lodge theory reduced to practice, viz: That no obligation, human or divine, is good or binding against the lodge. The late Hon. Gerrit Smith told us at Syracuse, that what chiefly shocked and roused the people after Morgan's death, was the discovery that law and government were virtually annihilated and dead before the lodge. I will add a single case more: It is the overthrow of the Commonwealth and the restoration of despotic government by accepted Masons in the local lodges of England, on the death of Cromwell. I quote from "A general history of Freemasonry in Europe," by Emanuel Rebold. This Masonic authority says:—"After the death of Charles I., the Masonic corporations in England, labored in secret for the re-establishment of the throne destroyed by Cromwell;" and thus "gave to this time-honored institution a character entirely political." And the writer adds: "Charles II., during his exile, was received as an accepted Mason and gave to Masonry the title of the 'Royal Art,' because it was mainly by its instrumentality that he was raised to the throne and monarchy restored to England." (Rebold's Gen. His. etc., p. 55.)

More proofs of the hostility and danger of the lodge to established government and of Masonic hatred of popular rights than are given in this brief extract, could scarcely be condensed into the same space. It is given, too, by a Masonic writer.

The story is short and familiar. If kings can commit treason, everybody knows that the Stuarts were traitors to the realm. Charles I. was beheaded. Eleven years of success had given stability to the Commonwealth; and England was never stronger at home or abroad: and republican principles were dear to the English masses. Had England then put herself at the head of the movement for popular rights, she might have spared her American colonies the blood of the Revolution; treated them, as we have treated our new States which have risen since; and made England then what America is now, the cynosure of the nations.

Other obstructions doubtless existed; but one thing we know prevented it, which was this: Long before stone masonry was dropped by the Appletree Tavern Grand Lodge, and Masonry turned into a false religion, (1717), the lodges of working masons, anxious, in their phrase "to have a nobleman their chairman," had accepted, initiated and corrupted the young and spendthrift English nobility; and being humble mechanics, were, in turn, led and corrupted by them. And to minds drilled, darkened and debased in the nightly despotism and debaucheries of the lodge, a republic was as inconceivable as to our slave-holding Freemasons of the South, whose highest conception of government was an empire based on the bondage of the laboring masses. These men restored Charles Stuart, a libertine, hypocrite and disguised papist, but a Freemason. His vices, especially the good-natured vice of indolence, saved England from oppression in part, and himself, perhaps, from the fate of his father. But his scepter fell from the hand of his brother and successor, James II., a worse tyrant, though a better man, who, after systematically overturning Constitution, liberties and laws, attempted to throttle the national administration by throwing the Great Seal into the Thames, and fleeing to a foreign court. Such were the men, whom, this Masonic historian tells us, the English lodges "worked in secret" to restore by the overthrow of the established government. These, too, were the monarchs, at whose feet the abject Masonic nobility of England threw down the rights and liberties of the English people. And in every crisis since, our own bloody struggle with slavery included, the lodge has been the same fawning sycophant of power, and the same dark foe of popular rights.

I pause here to meet an objection which everywhere and on all occasions meets us: If Freemasonry is deadly hostility to American principles, why do Americans love it? They know what it is after they are initiated; why do they continue in the lodge? Are half a million Freemasons in this country seeking the destruction of the country? Do men set fire to their own houses, in which their goods are stored, over the heads of their wives and children, and over their own heads? Our answer is that history is one vast record of nations which have perished by the errors or delusions of their inhabitants; nor is our own age or nation certain to prove an exception. We have seen not half a million, but eight millions of our people fightiug for slavery, a cause in which success would have been their ultimate ruin. This deluge of fraternal blood, the millions of graves we decorate are proofs, staring us in our faces, that Americans may fall into delusions that are fatal. It is not impossible that our secret orders may be such a delusion. There is surely no inherent impossibility that, bewitched by their sorceries, we may become giddy in their whirlpools and blinded by their fog, and so drift into the wake of the effete or fossil nations which have sunk by like causes.

The arts by which the goblin of secretism has come back from its grave of popular contempt in which it lay less than fifty years ago, are chiefly four, viz: Its harmless name—Its mystic origin—The blindness of self-interest—and the witchery of a crowd.

1. Thousands enter a "saloon" who would shun it if the word "grog-shop" were above its door. So the swindling worships of the lodge are called "Masonry," a beautiful and useful art. The thing itself has no name. No word in human speech would describe it. And so it skulks under the fragments of architectural fictions, like serpents under the ruins of temples, which are related to their sly and subtle occupants only as a screen, and the grim pantomine of corner-stone-laying is but to carry out the pretense.

2. And the mystic origin of Masonry serves, equally well with its name, the purposes of popular delusion and cheat.—Not ordinary blue-lodge Masonry. The rise of that in the London tavern, in 1717, is known. But both friends and foes of the lodge now use the term Masonry in the broad sense, including the whole assemblage of secret, symbolical institutions, throughout the world, present and past.

In this broad sense, it is as impossible to assign any particular origin to Masonry, as to mists and miasm in a marsh. We know that secret, solemn, swindling impositions have always been rising by cunning from the mire of human selfishness and depravity; but the time when, or the particular bog whence they first arose lies hid. Hence we are informed by Thory, cited by Rebold, that "The general opinion among the most distinguished Masons is, that it is impossible to write a general history of Masonry, which will approach correctness in dates and authenticated facts." (Rebold p. 21.) And this very cloud which covers its origin, casts a shadow over its real nature, and at once provokes curiosity, quiets apprehension and allays fear. So men are both lured and deceived. Curious to know what the thing is, they think it harmless because common.

3. As a rule, men enter the lodge, not to benefit the public, but themselves; and selfishness is blind. Is it wonderful that men see not the true nature of the lodge who are hoping for secret advantages by it? Judas saw not the nature of the betrayal, while thinking of the silver; but when his eyes were opened to the act itself, he loathed it. So men are blinded to the lodge. They go in for advantage, are kept there by false honor or intimidation; and those who think Masonry cannot be as bad as it is represented because such men are in the lodge, are guiding their footsteps by the eyes of the blind.

4. And then delusions like diseases, propagate themselves by the very number of their victims. And the Divine command, "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil," is aimed at one of the strongest propensities of the human heart. And the lodge, like the Crusades, has numbers on its sides, and the nature of the two delusions is in some respects the same. Thus reason, philosophy, and religion combine to prove the present rage for secret societies to be one of those moral epidemics which sometimes sweep nations to their undoing. It is, therefore, no want of charity to our Masonic neighbors, to say, that, like men intoxicated with drugs or liquor, they are indeed pulling down the country on their own heads and on ours. This fourfold delusion, as we have shown, both explains and proves it. Their name, mystery, self-interest, and numbers show why they go into the lodge, and what keeps them there; and the lodge itself, its own standards have shown us, is direct antagonism to the religion and government of the United States.

But our indictment of this Masonic mischief is universal; not only hostility to our government and religion; but 'a conspiracy against God and the human race.' Of course this term, Masonic, is here to be taken in its broad sense, including not only the London blue-lodge of 1717 and its derivatives, but that Masonry, whose "name is legion," scientific in the college, beneficial in the society, infidel in the club, political in the circle, reformatory in temperance, benevolent, charitable, social, or patriotic, Pagan or Christian, the Purrow in Africa, the Jesuits, with their "Monita Secreta," and the Papacy at Rome, the mother of them all, secret from Confessional to Inquisition; whatever the hollow pretence set up for show; these delnges of darkness pour along all our channels of life like the flood from the mouth of the Dragon, diverse, yet the same:

"Distinct like the billows yet one like the sea."

Let us see whether these societies have a common nature, and what that common nature is, and whether, in any just sense, it is conspiracy against God. There can be but one moral system of the Universe, whose author and executive is God. And for this plain reason, that a that a second Infinite, if distinct, must displace the first. And the badge and binding-force of this moral system; the very bottom on which right and wrong rest, is WORSHIP, which binds mind to the God of mind. Now the one point which we make is that these secret societies, by substituting another worship for the true, in effect displace God from his own moral system, and so destroy it; that, in short, horrible as it may seem, there is no obligatory right and wrong in a lodge!

There is a book issued in 1678, and so now becoming ancient, entitled, "The True Intellectual System of the Universe." Writers of the day called it "the noblest performance of the age;" and that the age of Oliver Cromwell, when English mind influenced human affairs as never before or since. This great and learned writer (Cudworth) teaches that "the intellectual system of the universe, as known on our globe, is divided into two realms, of darkness and of light." He shows by quotations which seem to exhaust the learning of pagan antiquity, that all their writers and their systems taught one supreme deity, "a god of this world," whose realm was a "polity of lapsed angels, with which the souls of wicked men are also incorporated."—"That there is acontinual war betwixt the two polities or kingdoms in the world; and that our Saviour Christ is appointed head chieftain over the forces of the kingdom of light." And that this religion of one God and one Mediator, did effectually destroy all the pagan inferior deities, middle gods, and mediators, demons and heroes;" with much more to the like effect. (Cud. Int. System, vol. I, p. 161, 2 and 3.)

Such were the teachings of Cambridge University, England, during thirty years incumbency of this learned writer and great man in its principal professorship. It is the view given in the Bible, amplified by human learning, of the two supernatnral, invisible realms of mind at war with each other on this earth. And Cudworth comforts us with the assurance that: "There will be at length a palpable and signal overthrow of the whole kingdom of darkness, managed by our Saviour, as God's vicegerent." (Id. vol. I. 263.)

Upon the ground question, whether there exists a conspiracy against God, it is sufficient to receivers of the Scriptures, (and we address such) that they declare there is such a conspiracy; that there is such a person as Satan, "the god of this world" and the king of its evils, warring against God and goodness. And even infidels and atheists, if they are honest ones, one would think, must admit that the evils of this world, if not the result of conspiracy, are yet managed with craft.

But are secret societies part and parcel of that conspiracy? Do they belong to that dark movement which makes the heathen nations heathen; incapable of moral order and good government; "without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful." And though we should acquit the masses of secretism on the score of their ignorance or delusion, are the leaders of these secret movements conscious or unconscious conspirators against God and mankind?

I shall bring some proofs that they are such conspirators, from three sources, viz: AUTHORITY, FACTS, and the SCRIPTURES.

A volume might easily be filled with quotations from Masonic writers who declare, substantially, that Freemasonry is derived from the pagan religions and mysteries. Indeed, this is implied in the general declaration of their standard Lexicon (Mackey) that "the religion of Masonry is that in which mankind are agreed," for that certainly is not the religion of Christ.

Arnold, a respectable Masonic writer, page 10th, of his "Philosophical History of Freemasonry," says: "The Masonic order stands pre-eminent, not only because it is, in a degree, the successor of the Egyptian and Grecian mysteries, * * but also because it is the source whence all the secret fraternities have proceeded." If this be true, then secret fraternities are all, "in a degree," copied from the heathen mysteries.

The author of "The Ancient Scottish Rite," says of Masonic baptism of infants, that it is not a rival of the baptism practiced by Christian churches, but "has descended False Prophets.

Dear Bro. K:—Since I last wrote we had interesting meetings at Allentown, Lima, and Salem, Ohio, and our grand meeting at Pittsburgh.

On my return I stopped at Canton, Ohio, where I spoke in Richard's Hall to a good sized audience, composed almost entirely of Freemasons. I had aimed to be very conciliatory in manner and framed my arguments from purely Masonic statements, quoting from Mackey, Sickles, and Chase, and challenging any correction of my quotations or statements. I was met with the only argument with which Masonry can sustain itself. Two ministers, Rev. R. Kuhns, pastor of one of the Lutheran churches, and Rev. Smith, pastor of the M. E. church, replied, and a number of lewd fellows drawing their inspiration from these ministers, added their expected abuse, which of course deserved no attention.

Rev. Smith (whom I understand professes to be wholly sanctified) had been for many years a Mason and thought it simply a moral and benevolent institution, and yet Christianity was taught in the lodge. He pitied my ignorance of Masonry and was willing to forgive my misrepresentation and falsehood because of that ignorance.

I replied that what I had said of Masonry was not on my own authority, or on that of Anti-masons, but I had quoted directly from Masonic authorities, and that these quotations had not been denied, but I was answered only with a supercilious and contemptuous pity, which was truly Masonic.

The Rev. Kuhns claimed that he was not a Mason and knew nothing about it, but he was a member of a secret society. He held that all who pretended to reveal Masonry were perjured men and not entitled to any man's respect; that Masonry had been greatly misrepresented. He had come there to get some light on this subject, but was disappointed. He thought that the secrets of individuals or of societies were their private property, and that it was impertinent to inquire into them.

As I had not said anything in particular of the secrets of Freemasonry I was unable to see any pertinency in his reply, except as it was calculated to give comfort to the wounded feelings of the fraternity, and as indicating the drift of feeling in that congregation. These professed ministers of that Saviour whose name is excluded from the Masonic ritual, and thus excluded in order that Masonry may invite to its altars those who hate Christ just as truly as those who love him, yet these men unite in their hostility and contempt of a movement which has for its only object to conserve our holy religion, and our free institu tions. Feeling secure of the support of a corrupt public sentiment they threw their influence on the side of an institution founded on falsehood and teaching that men may be saved without repentance and without faith in the Great Mediator. Truly "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land, the prophets prophesy falsely, and my people love to have it so. Jer. v. 30, 31.

Yours for a pure Gospel and a pure ministry. H. H. Hinman.

From the Iowa State Agent—The Work in Bremer and Guthrie Counties.

Mason City, Iowa, June 5, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

The friends of our reform have just held a convention at Waverly, Bremer county, Iowa, on the 2nd and 3d inst. To say that it was a success is too tame; it was a grand victory. On account of trains not connecting I did not get there until a very late hour the first day, but we have a little man there who is well posted and he addressed the convention to their profit. He belongs to the Smith family and will do us good.

I go next week to Guthrie Center where I shall hold another convention and where the question is already somewhat agitated by way of a discussion between two Methodist Episcopal and one Wesleyan Methodist minister (as the Cynosure informs us).

The friends here who were appointed to arrange for our convention in June at Clear Lake, have arranged with the hotels for all who may come at $1.00 per day. Come one and all and let us have one of the best meetings ever known. May it be a good time for Iowa.

June 12, 1875.

Wherever I go I find our cause is gaining ground, and I have more calls than I can attend to. Two or three invitations are now before me asking me to set a time and tell them what I know about Masonry. We held a convention in Panora, Guthrie county, on the 9th and 10th inst., which was very largely attended throughout and gave great encouragement to the friends of our reform in that county. The chairman of the Association, having been a Master Mason, and another man who had taken one degree confirmed all I said so far as they had gone; also an Odd-fellow, who had taken all the degrees in that department of the devil's army spoke with good effect and exposed or rather confirmed the exposure of others in that society, and notwithstanding the Masons, as usual, tried to detract, and did very much interrupt us on Thursday night at Guthrie Center (where we thought best to transfer the seat of coflict), yet they were in the end much discomfitted, while we felt it good to be there. Masonry Worked in Public in Crystal Lake and Woodstock, Ill.

Mr. E. Ronayne, late Past Master of Keystone Lodge, Chicago, came to Crystal Lake Crossings a second time and gave the candidate, whom on his first visit he had initiated, not into the very ancient, but very dishonorable institution of Freemasonry, the benefit the grand and sublime degree of Master Mason by knocking him down, ki-lling him and burying him in the rubbish about the temple till midnight, and then taking him to the brow of a hill on Mount Moriah and burying him in a grave six feet deep perpendicular, due east and west, and then after a lapse of fourteen days he raised him from the dead by the Master's grip and the five points of fellowship and the magic sword "Mah-hah-bone." This farce was witnessed by a large audience.

We also learn that this Mr. Ronayne went to that beautiful city of Woodstock and into one of their splendid churches, and then and there initiated a poor blind candidate who was neither naked nor clothed, barefoot nor shod, with a cable-tow about his neck, to an astonished audience, and caricatured one of the prominent ministers of the place who had been led with the cable-tow into the sublime mysteries of Freemasonry. At the same time he delivered a most interesting and scathing lecture, showing that Freemasonry is a lie, a cheat and a swindle, which apparently stirred up the bile in the stomachs of some of the craft so that they gave vent to some very extravagant and excited remarks, as if they almost expected the stars would fall from the heavens if Freemasonry was exposed to vulgar cowans outside the lodge. "Tis too bad to caricature a minister," Some said, "and yet that same minister and every other man who goes into the lodge practices a very awkward and clumsy caricature of the Christian religion and at the same time swears allegiance to one of the most despotic governments the world ever saw.

Yours for more light,

Anno Lucis.

Meetings in Fon du Lac County, Wis.

Editor Cynosure:—Immediately after my last lecture at Oakfield, I left for Waupun. Two or three miles before reaching there, I stopped to make inquiry, and providentially found mysel in the house of Bro. D. S. Dean, a reader of the Cynosure and an earnest reformer. At Waupun we secured the Free-will Baptist church for the next Monday evening and also made arrangements for lectures in the Cateraugus school-house, and lectured Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings to good audiences. Matters moved quite pleasantly there. No pains were spared to give the notice in Waupun as wide a circulation as possible, and the result was a full house. The lodges were well represented, but good order prevailed. They had heard of the West Bend mob, and I think they had determined not to repeat such a folly. But the next day they could not keep entirely still. Tuesday it rained up to the time of the meeting, and it was supposed that there would not be enough out to warrant the lecture, but to the surprise of the friends the house was about two-thirds full. The next evening the house was about full again, but it was evident that the lodge men were biting the file very hard. for they got up a little confusion, and their tobacco mills were going at a rapid rate, in consequence of their peculiar nervous condition, or out of spite at the Free Baptist brethren for opening their house for the lectures. The side of the house occupied by them was filthy enough. The next morning on the church door, coarsely printed in pencil marks on paper was to be seen the following: "This Temple Dedicated to Falsehood and Slander." In another place was tacked up a piece of paper, with a poor sketch of a humble, long-eared animal and "Anti-masonic champion" and "Sperry, Groom" written upon it. Surely a system that takes all the manhood out of men like this must be exposed. Bro. Sperry was assailed on the street, but like a Christian man maintained his position against his enemies. Though they have a few secretists in this church, they have some that stand firmly for the truth, and a pastor that does not bow to these wretched impositions upon mankind.

I am indebted to Bro. Webb of Green Bush for the following information in regard to the grange. They have as a part of their lodge trinkets, a set of little farming tools like children's playthings, plows, drags, hoes, shovels, etc., costing from $5 to $15 a set. These are to farm with in the lodge symbolically. In two places adherents of the lodge have admitted the above facts. If the 22,000 granges have purchased only at the lowest figure, the cost of these trinkets is $110,000, but more than likely that sum is doubled. How is it that Christian men can use the money that God has given for such folly while the world is old and hoary with sin, and reeking in pollution, for the want of the means to carry saving truth to the millions?

For the war, P. Elzea.

From Chautauqua County, N. Y.—The Visit of the State Lecturer.

Ellington, N. Y., June 7th, 1875.

Dear Editor:—I hereby report to the readers of the Cynosure some of the incidents connected with our county association, opposed to secret societies, which was held on the 1st and 2d of this month at Ellington.

Some three weeks previous to this our 6th anniversary, the State Agent, J. L. Barlow, came to labor in our county, and his work has been crowned by the help of God, with abundant success.

I met him at Clymer, one of the extreme western towns in the county and the State, to pilot him from one town to another, till we should swing around the whole circle, following the example of our illustrious predecessors, Andy Johnson and U. S. Grant, but on a more grand and glorious mission.

On our arrival in Clymer we met with no reception at all, and had to go to the public house for entertainment and to break our twenty four hour's fast, and after doing ample justice to the multiplicity of viands set before us by our hostess we made our way to the office of our landlord to settle the bill, mine was 40 cents, his 50. This was a new idea to us. over which we had a little laugh, to ourselves of course. This appears to me to be a great improvement on hotel-keeping, and this is the reason why I publish it, so that it may be adopted by others, and thus equalizing the price according to capacity.

I then took my station by the stove, and my colleague made for the Baptist minister who lived in the place, to find out, if possible, something about the appointment of the meeting, etc., and in his absence, our good brother and co-laborer made his appearance, E. Amadon of French Creek, who at once relieved us of all anxiety on the point, and we were soon in conversation in regard to the subject that had brought us together. I said to him there was an absolute necessity for the movement we were making, to put a stop to the wholesale murder going on in the South, committed by the secret bandits, and of whom President Grant says in proclamation, it is impossible to bring to justice and punish according to their crimes, because they swear each other clear; and in this respect they resemble the Masons. And among other things I told him that the Masons had one emblem the most significant, perhaps, than any other, and that was the bee-hive, and that was a dark place, and there they would work very busily, and those among them that rebelled they would sting to death and drag out. Up to this time the two Masons present kept their three precious jewels untarnished, and now lost the most important one, a silent tongue, by saying, were it not for my gray hairs, they would do something to me, I do not now recollect what, and these were my only protection. Poor creatures, how much they need our sympathy!

My friends, anticipating a row, one of them kindly took me by the arm and told me it was time to go to church, and as I was about to start, Capt. Mary, one of the two Worshipful Masters said to me, "If you come on my premises after dark, I will put daylight through you." We can see by this what bad whiskey and Masonry would do when well mixed, having a time and place suitable to do it in. But barking dogs as a general thing are not the ones that bite; so let them bark.

Some dozen meetings were held in our county besides our yearly meeting to elect officers, and we formed a town society in Ellington, and obtained a number of names through the county to sign our constitution, and good was done in various ways for which we rejoice and take fresh courage. Our State can boast of having one of the most capable lecturers in the field and it is just and proper it should be so, because right here in New York Morgan suffered; and another good reason is that it is the Empire State and in it is the great metropolis, wherein was held last Wednesday one of the greatest splurges ever held by the "high-cockalorums" in this land or in any other. This must have been a fine sight for patriots to behold, thousands of armed and equipped soldiers of the secret empire marching and countermarching, well calculated to awe into silence and submission the poor cowans that ran hither and thither to get a peep at the lamb-skin apron tribe.

But I must not forget to mention the fact that George W. Lewis of Freedonia was duly elected president of the county society, J. B. Nessel, secretary, G. W. Merritt, treasurer. We have now a vice-president in each town in the county, and we have the pleasure of adding to our list the name of ex-Lieut.-governor Patterson of Westfield, an old and tried Anti-mason.

Reply to the Masonic Oration of Rev Clark of Colchester, Conn.

West Unity, O., June 12, 1875.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

We wish to notice through your paper some of the remarks of Rev. Edgar F. Clark, in his lecture on Masonry delivered May 18th, 1875, at Colchester, Conn.

We agree with him in many things; for instance, "We cannot trace Masonry back to Paradise as some foolishly assert;" and, "any man who thinks a Masonic lodge existed in the days of Cain and Abel, is a fit candidate for an insane asylum;" or, "Neither is there any more reason for crediting Noah with being a Mason, than there would be for claiming the same honor for the angel Gabriel. And those who trace anything like the present order back to the days of King Solomon and Hiram, merit our pity." "In fact," (how we do love to hear men state facts) "modern Freemasonry is of recent origin, and was unknown to either Solomon or Hiram. Prior to A. D. 1717 legitmate Freemasonry was simply a trade union." Again, "it is probable that Masonry became a secret institution about A. D. 906." Near 2000 years after the days of Solomon and Hiram.

So far we credit him with having said a good many sensible things. We of course infer from the above that he has no faith in the story of Hiram Abiff, and the conspiracy among the fellow craft that resulted in the death of their Grand Master, and how one of the conspirators had his throat cut across, and his tongue torn out by the roots, and how another one had his left breast torn open, and the third had his body severed in two in the midst. He thinks Masonry received its Christian coloring about the eleventh or twelfth centuries, but when an infidel could forbid his praying in the Blue lodge in the name of Christ, and he would be compelled to obey, we think the Christian coloring is about faded out. He claims its teachings would do honor to the sanctuary of the Most High. And he might have added: and some of its practices would shame his Majesty below.

Again, "It is a great moral teacher, exerting a happy and powerful influence for social reform." And yet so anxious were the craft for the safety of King Alcohol a little more than a year ago, that Asa H. Battin, M. W. Grand Master of Masons in Ohio, writes as follows: "As lodges it is unwise in my opinion to pledge by resolution or otherwise, our support or influence to any particular organization having for its object the suppression of evil," and yet our Rev. friend speaks of its influence for social reform as being powerful and happy.

Again; "Some say those who have been Masons should be believed," and he spends considerable time to prove that they should not; and yet, how many Rev. gentlemen like himself have been backed down by the simple question: Will you go before a magistrate and swear that these statements are not substantially correct? We claim that no man should be believed who will not when asked, back up his assertions with an affidavit as to their truthfulness, especially when it is of great importance, and his opponent offers to pay the expense.

He says hundreds of Masons have been expelled for immorality, and then compares the lodges with the churches, and says he is not sure but the lodges are as thorough in disciplining members for the crime of immorality as the churches. Now I appeal to any honest man who is acquainted with the members of a lodge and a church, does our Rev. friend see it in the same light as you have? Of what church can it be said, as a Mason once said of a lodge, "It is the strangest medley of priests and murderers, deacons and whoremasters, church members and gamblers, decent men and loafers, drunkards and rowdies, that the All-seeing eye looks down upon."

To prove that Masonry is not a disloyal institution, he tells us that Washington was the first Grand Master in America, and an enthusiastic Mason all of his life, and yet Washington writes at one time, "I have not been in a lodge more than once or twice for the last thirty years." What would our Rev. friend think of an enthusiastic Methodist who had not been to meeting more than once or twice for thirty years. And farther to prove Masonry loyal he says: "Nearly all of the American Generals of the Revolutionary army were Masons." Now if that proves Masonry to be right, the fact that nearly all of them held slaves, proves slavery to be right. And if the American Generals being Masons made Masonry right, would not the British Generals being Masons make it wrong?

Again, "Any oath is terrible if any one violates it." We had always supposed an oath to do right was terrible when violated, but an oath to do wrong was terrible only when executed, for instance, the beheading of John the Baptist by Herod; or the conspiracy to kill Paul, both of which should have been kept according to Mr. Clark, or at least it would have been a terrible thing to have broken them.

He believes that the very cream of American society may be found in our lodges; and he might have added, and much of the scum. In reference to the great Anti-masonic excitement of 1831 he says, "the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts published a declaration to the effect that no punishment is known or inflicted greater than expulsion," and that the same declaration was adopted in 1833 by the Grand Lodge of Connecticut. Now we know of no surer way to "ever conceal" any thing than to deny it, and if that is, or was the greatest punishment known or inflicted, surely every Mason knew it; and they must have known that the story of the murder of Morgan was false, and if such was the case, and they knew it, why did nine-tenths of the Masons leave the lodge to return no more? Was it because the lodge had been lied about? No man ever deserted a friend for such a cause. That would only seem to bind them the closer. We think there can be no stronger proof of guilt, than to see the friends who have the means of knowing all about the circumstances deserting the party accused.

But he triumphantly asks, "would any man marry a woman who would publish all the affairs of the family?" Suppose a young man starts out in search of a wife, but would require of her something like the following oath, she being previously prepared as to apparel after the fashion of an Entered Apprentice, blindfolded, a rope around her neck, on her left knee, with her left hand under the Bible, (we will omit the compass and square) and her right hand on top of it: You, ———, do solemnly and sincerely promise and swear, that you will always hail, ever conceal and never reveal, any part or parts, art or arts, point or points, of secrets, arts, or mysteries of our family. Binding yourself under no less penalty than to have your throat cut across, your tongue torn out by the roots, and your body buried in the rough sands of the sea. We know nothing of the temper of the Connecticut girls, but we can assure our Rev. friend that such girls are very scarce in Ohio. He closes by expressing the sentiment that all good Masons will ascend to the starry firmament above, by the mystic ladder. But as Masonry has only existed since 1717, will he please inform us about what time the mystic ladder was set up?

Yours for the war, J. G. Mattoon.

From an Old Minister.

Editor of the Cynosure:

Dear Brother:—I have belonged to a religious organization known as Christian, as given first in Antioch; said organization makes Christian character the only test of Christian fellowship, to which I have never objected. But the question comes up, are secret, oath-bound societies compatible with our test of fellowship? Are Christians authorized by the Word of God, or can it be implied from its teaching that a Christian, a member of a body of whom Christ is the head, organize, belong to, or affiliate with, a fraternity, the obligations of which, if proclaimed on the house-top, as Jesus commanded, would sink it and render it repulsive to every Christian or moral sensibility of the godly soul. And as all such societies can only exist in the dark, and meet in secret conclave, do they not furnish indisputable evidence of their evil deeds, for Christ declares men "love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil;" and he commands his followers to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them." Should not the church be as "a city set on a hill that cannot be hid?" Must the Gospel light in regard to secret societies be put under a bushel, and the light of the world be hid? Must truth be garbed or concealed, must a lock be placed on a ministers' lips? Can light and darkness commune together? Is there any concord between Christ and Belial, or any fellowship between him that believeth and an infidel?

I say, dear Christian brethren, let us stand from under the judgments of God that must overtake a timid priesthood, that fails in this trying hour to give God's trumpet the "certain sound." We are commanded not to fear them that can kill the body but to fear Him who is able to "destroy both soul and body in hell." I am fully aware that there are many of my ministering brethren who belong to Freemasonry who may call me in question for what I am doing; let me say in all good Christian feeling I am having to do with measures to which I invite your serious consideration in any way you may think proper. I am quite a denominational man, but I stand for Christ; have been in the ministry over thirty years; have always felt opposed to secrecy in religion, and my opposition is not abating.

Yours for the war, J. J. HAYDEN.

Letter to a Methodist.

[We give below the substance of a letter addressed to a Methodist of Halifax, Vermont, Mr. A. H. Thomas, who, quite ignoring the character of the founder of Methodism, became the chaplain of a secret lodge of grangers! The original letter was written by Mr. Edson Blanchard of Guilford, who is a zealous Anti-mason, and, we believe, a regular descendant of John Rogers, the martyr. We deem a letter so eloquent with Biblical spirit, well worthy of publication.]

GUILFORD, Jan'y 5, 1875.

Mr. Thomas:

DEAR BROTHER:—You may think it strange to find this addressed to you from me; but I must excuse myself in behalf of the church, which I respect, being a spiritual member of that body in Christ. Now, therefore, knowing that you, who were once free in the church, free to act, free to think, to breathe, have lost that freedom by having taken upon your shoulders a combination of principles, or fetters, which will in the eyes of the church be detrimental to your freedom and happiness, both here and hereafter, as well as a dishonor to the cause of Christ, since you have become the chaplain of a secret organization, I would enquire whether your office, and the membership of your lodge, must not be recognized by the MASTER (a title which Christians are forbidden to give any man) or else, being without the lodge wedding garments on, you are to be cast out—perhaps as you think into outer darkness where there is weeping and wailing, etc?

When all things have been made ready by first shutting out the unworthy from this assembly; when you have built a spiritual wall around your secret organization, so that no one can enter unless he bends the knee to an unknown god, then are prayers offered up for the brothers and sisters within.

Is this following the precepts of Christ, who, for three years ministered unto the wants of sinful man in casting out devils, healing the sick, and raising the dead, and never did anything in secret, but all things openly? He taught all his disciples that spiritual things need no concealment. They are of the highest order, and need no concealment; for the Spirit is manifested perfect in Christ, who taught no secret combinations.

"Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." This is the language of our blessed Saviour while here in the flesh, and by it we can see that he had a complete trust in the Father and in mankind. Have we that trust in our hearts, or shall we seek an opposite pathway to incline our hearts to him, and to our fellowmen? God forbid!

The first secret society was instituted in the Garden of Eden, where our first parents hid themselves from the face of God. Who was the Grand Master of this lodge? Was it not Satan? Is he not the father and originator of all secret societies? From away back in the night of past ages methinks I can hear an echoed affirmative to this. Where do we find Cain, the first murderer, but under a dark cover in league with the adversary?

The time changes, but the scene is still a garden. We behold twelve Apostles, chosen as messengers of peace and good-will towards man, eleven of whom have been made a bright and shining light to our fallen race, but where now do we find the twelfth? He entered into consultation with a Grand Master; Satan took possession of his heart under a secret cover of darkness; he confederated with the learned and select men of Judaism—the Pharisees and soldiers for the paltry sum of thirty pieces of silver, the equivalent of a barrel or so of flour; with a sign he betrayed the innocent one into the hands of the wicked; yes, sold his own birth-right and title to happiness; for all righteousness comes from the Father through him whom this Judas betrayed.

But in the appointed time of the Father, he whom the secret confederacy of evil plotters consigned to disgraceful death, came forth from the great resceptacle of darkness where he had mingled with the dead; yes, with you and me, for we were once all dead, but now alive forever more. If we are in Christ, we are made new creatures; born of the Spirit, and separated from that multiplicity of spirits which proceeds from the kingdom of darkness.

OUR MAIL.

John Macauley, Pittsfield, Ill., writes:

"The Cynosure suits me exactly. I will do all I can for it. I have the promise of some subscribers in the fall."

P. R. Adams, Alexis, Ill., writes:

"My heart is with you in this good work of reform. My prayers have for years been offered in behalf of the great movement against secret societies and I am just as firm as ever against them."

Mrs. M. F. Ballard, Connersville, Ind., writes:

"I value the Cynosure because it is founded on a righteous and honest basis. The Masons here try to make me believe that they are not so bad as you make them out to be, but I tell them if they had been swindled out of everything by Masons in spite of the law, they would think differently. There is nothing so sneaking and selfish as secret societies."

W. Q. Dallas, Salineville, O., writes:

"The topic of secretism is taking hold upon the minds of the people in this section of country; but in this town the lodge horde, is so powerful that there is a fear on the inhabitants to do or say anything that would touch them. Some of the most wealthy and best business men are Masons, or Odd-fellows. It is certainly the greatest curse on the nation, and if not overcome will be the ruin of our country."

Mrs. Eliza Tuttle, Ontario, Wis., writes:

"I have for a good many years, together with my departed husband, (Elder B. Tuttle) felt a deep interest in the advancement of the anti-secret cause. If I had the means to defray the expenses I would try to introduce our State lecturer into this village, and see if the people could not be waked up to read and investigate the subject."

Wm. B. Walthall, Quaker Hill, Ind., writes:

"I love the cause in which thou art so nobly engaged, and do heartily desire thy encouragement in so good a work. I am not only willing but anxious to assist in circulating your excellent paper."

R. O. S., Siam, Ohio, writes:

"The Masons are very strong here. God only knows the vileness in this institutions. They seem to take every one into the lodge that presents himself. They have a lodge of drunken men and men who swear and gamble.

They exclude Christ from their midst, yet Sundays we see them partaking of the Lord's supper. Eating the representation of the body of the only holy One, also drinking the blood of that rejected One. O how sinful to see my dear brethren thus do! to-day, that he believed in no organization not under the laws of Christ, or under his jurisdiction. He is a Mason of several degrees, but claims that when he was called to preach, he was not called to be a Mason. That is a good proof that Masonry is not a hand-maid to Christianity, and in fact she needs no hand-maid.

It also proves Masonry to be antagonistic to good morals, "which cannot be denied." Why? Because if our ministers cannot preach the Gospel and be Masons too, it surely must be impure in its motives. I am young yet, but as soon as I can I want to lecture in this place and see if I cannot close the plague soon. May God bless the Cynosure in the war of life."

Samuel Flint, Coburn Corners, Ind., writes:

"I am 77 years old, and have been a cripple for the last 16 years, so that I cannot walk about the house without a crutch and cane. I have distributed all the papers that I have received from your office—by sending them about the neighborhood, and some to friends in Nebraska—so that they are all gone on a mission somewhere. The cause of the Cynosure lies near my heart."

Edger G. Burnham, Williamsburg, N. Y., writes:

"My whole soul is favorable to the downfall of all secret societies, but to engage in the work at present is impossible, though I have hopes for the future. Keep fighting, I believe the victory is ours."

John M. Mohler, Cornelia, Mo., writes:

"We are about eaten out by the locusts, and there is no prospect of making a living. The judgments of God are very heavy upon us. Masonry is pretty popular here and rather touchy, but we do not fear it. We would like to see it go down. No doubt but what it is one of the things that has brought this severe judgment upon us at this time."

The Sabbath School.

Lesson for July 4, 1875,—The Word Made Flesh.—John 1: 1-14.

1 In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

2 The same was in the beginning with God.

3 All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made.

4 In him was life; and the life was the light of men.

5 And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not.

6 There was a man sent from God, whose name was John.

7 The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light, that all men through him might believe.

8 He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light.

9 That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

10 He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.

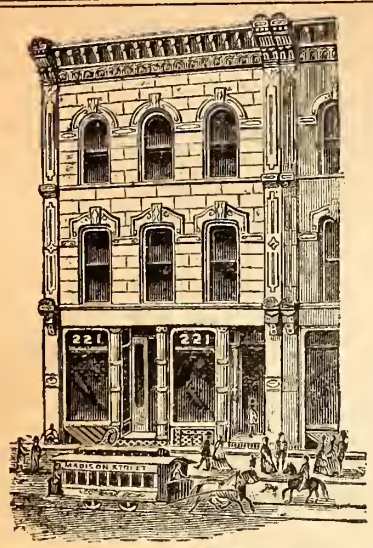
11 He came unto his own, and his own received him not.

12 But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name.

13 Which were born not of blood nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.

14 And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth.

CHRIST THE WORD—was "in the bebinning" (Gen. i. 1.) of all time and created existence for he gave it being, therefore "before the world was:" John viii. 57, 58, and xvii. 5, 24; Eph. i. 4; Rev. i. 8; iii. 14; xxii. 13.—"The Word." He is to God what man's word is to himself, the manifestation or expression of himself, his character, habits, attributes, to those about him. So when God spoke to men, telling them of himself, especially in his character of a loving Father, that word was Christ: John i. 18; viii. 33–55; xvii. 6–8; 25, 26; 1 Cor. i. 6; Heb. i. 1–3; 1 John i. 1–3; v. 7; Rev. 1. 5. —"Was God:" ohn x. 30.—"All things" made by him: 1 Cor. viii. 6; Col. 1. 16, 17.



CHRIST THE LIGHT.—"In him was life." He is the living word: 1 John v. 12, and i. 1, 2; John vi. 47–58; xiv. 6; Col. iii. 4 —"The light of men;" all that in men which is true light, knowledge, integrity, intelligent and willing subjection to God, love to him and to their fellows, wisdom, purity, holy joy, rational happiness—all this "light of men" has its fountain in the essential, original life of "the Word:" Ps. xxxvi. 9; cxix. 105; Is. lx. 1, 19, 20; Luke ii. 29–32; Acts xiii. 47. Christ's followers are like him: Matt. v. 14, 16; John xviii. 20; Eph. v. 8. False hopes and false worships, such as are not founded and built up in Christ are darkness: John iii. 19–21; 2 Cor. vi 14.

CHRIST REJECTED IN HIS OWN WORLD. —"The world," in the first two clauses, plainly means the created world; "into which he came." "The world which knew him not" is of course the intelligent world of mankind. Taking the two clauses as one statement we try to apprehend it by thinking of the infant Christ, conceived in the womb and borne in the arms of his own creature, and of the man Christ Jesus breathing his own air, treading upon his own ground, supported by substances to which he himself gave being, and the Creator of the very men he came to save. Trace him in his matchless history walking amid all the elements of nature, the disea e of men, and death itself, the secrets of the human heart, and "the rulers of the darkness of this world" in all their number, subtlety and malignity, not only with absolute ease as their conscious Lord, but, as we may say with full conscientiousness on their part of the presence of their Maker whose will to one and all of them was law. And this is he of whom it is added, "The world knew him not." —Jamieson.

—When the main features of a library come to be the Bible, and books bearing directly on the Bible, and when we have these books bound as cheaply and substantially as cyclopedias and geographies, and when the literature of the Sunday school shall be the literature of the home, and fathers and mothers go back to the blessed custom when the Bible was the household book, we shall have gained a great victory.—Emily Huntington Miller.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1875.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and $20.000 the ownership.

AT HOME—FIRST CORPORATE ACTION.

The incorporated National Christian Association met at the house of Philo Carpenter, their chairman, on Wednesday, June 16th, according to its published by-laws. It was their first meeting under the new constitution as a legal body. A quorum was present and Mr. Carpenter arose from his sick bed to preside. The following gentlemen were elected members in full of the legal body: Rev. J. W. Bain of Chicago (United Presbyterian); Rev. William Leuty of Ligoier, Ind., (Episcopal Methodist); Dr. J. A. Bingham, Mallet Creek, Ohio, (Congregationalist); Isaac Preston, Esq., Lockport, Ill., (Congregationalist); I. R. B. Arnold, Esq., of the Reformer and Free Press, Sycamore, Ill., (Wesleyan Methodist); Rev. B. T. Roberts, Rochester, N. Y., (Free Methdist); Rev. Dr. A. M. Milligan, Pittsburgh, Pa., (Ref. Presbyterian); Rev. A. D. Freeman, Downer's Grove, Ill., (Baptist). As I did not arrive in Chicago in time to attend this, our first meeting as an incorporated body, and knew nothing of the proceedings till they were enacted, it is not improper for me to say that this first action of the incorporated National Christian Association seems to me eminently wise and proper. Beside the above eight new members chosen I am informed over twelve more are in nomination. If we can secure the Carpenter building and its rents, we can provide for the expenses of all members at a distance who do not prefer to donate their expenses to the treasury, and so secure what we have failed to do heretofore: a representation from all parts of the country in our business meetings. I could have wished Prof. Milton Wright of the "Telescope" had been among the first members added, as I have great confidence in that gentleman's wisdom and singleness of heart. But I hail this morning action of our incorporated body as a harbinger and token that God is, and will be with us guiding our councils.

Mr. Carpenter's health is improving, but as he rose from his bed to preside in the meeting, but little business was transacted, and an adjourned meeting was set for July 7th, of which, and all other matters the Secretary will give due notice.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

OUR PITTSBURGH ANNIVERSARY—OUR SECRETARY, AGENTS AND LABORERS IN THE CAUSE—SPEAKERS AND THE PRESS—CASE OF MR. LEVINGTON—PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS—INCORPORATION, ETC., ETC.

Fairmount, Grant Co., Ind., Monday, June 14, 1875.

Dear Cynosure:—I came down to this place to speak; and I improve the time between lectures to give our readers a running sketch of matters as the panorama turns before me.

Our Pittsburgh Anniversary has been, as it ought to be, a decided advance on previous meetings. The largest hall of the city was filled, every seat below, and at times a crowd in the gallery. The people of Pittsburgh had lately entertained a National Temperance Convention, and their hospitality is often heavily taxed. Still many delegates were entertained free of charge, and the crowd attending and the courtesy of the city dailies showed their increasing interest in the cause which brought us together. I believe a large convention can be entertained on the good old Scripture plan of Christian hospitality another year. Mr. Stoddard, our General Agent, was unwearied in his toil and attention to the comfort of the delegates; and I heard at Pittsburgh, and here in Indiana, on all hands, a united testimony to his ability, integrity and devotedness to the cause. The State Agents, Barlow, Hinman and Kiggins gave interesting information and addresses, and Messrs. Cook and Kellogg were repeatedly spoken of by some of the soundest and most observing men and women of Pittsburgh, as patterns of industry and efficiency and gentlemanly deportment in their respective departments. Brethren Springstein and Caldwell were here, but I failed to see them as I wished. I record these facts with gratitude for the benefit of the readers of the Cynosure, well knowing that the life and success of a cause depends on the impression made by its agents. I therefore asked no questions, but observed carefully all references to them in the conversations going on around me.

Our Secretary, C. A. Blanchard, whose excellent report is given entire in the Pittsburgh Commercial of the 10th, is thus noticed by the old and respected Pittsburgh Gazette of June 11th:

"Prof. C. A. Blanchard was announced for an address, but what he had to say was said quite briefly. He knows enough of the power of oratory to use it with good effect. He is a fine speaker and it is a keen pleasure to listen to him."

Our cause was equally fortunate in its occasional advocates this year. Rev. Dr. Kerr of Pittsburgh, who was chosen President for the current year, Prof. Sloane of Allegheny and our President Roberts of Chilli, N. Y., made powerful addresses the first night, and thereby secured the attendance, the attention and respect of the public for our entire sessions. Prof. Milton Wright's speech, which is given entire in the Commercial, like all that gentleman's efforts, bore the marks of candor, polish and power.

Being absent to visit the good Dr. Le Moyne of Washington, Pa., I did not hear the addresses of Dr. Milligan and Rev. Woodruff Post; but they are both noticed by the Gazette which says: "The speech of Rev. A. M. Milligan is pronounced by members of the convention one of the best arguments ever delivered at any one of their meetings."

The last evening was chiefly occupied by Rev. H. Cogswell of Mansfield, Ohio, a seceding Royal Arch Mason, who was followed and endorsed by Rev. Mr. Coquilette of Marengo, Ill., a seceding Knight Templar. Both gentlemen made strong impressions by their sincerity and intelligence; and, by turning it inside out, they made the lodge utterly loathed and abhorred by their hearers.

THE CASE OF JOHN LEVINGTON.

This gentleman came forward on Thursday and accused our last year's records of containing a "slander" on himself, which he told the convention he supposed "Dr. Blanchard" was responsible for.

[The extract complained of by Mr. Levington, with his paper thereupon, were given in the Cynosure last week.]

This unhappy brother, though never writing to me, I am assured by letters from Mr. Samuel D. Greene and others, has for years been uttering bitter complaints against the management of the National Christian Association, calculated to destroy confidence and cripple our means of usefulness. Up to this writing, the Cynosure has never contained a word adverse to him, but, overlooking his ungrateful and injurious treatment of us, it has given him all the aid in our power. As he now comes forward with a formal indictment and accusation of us, further silence on my part would be a wrong to the cause. But as neither our National Anniversary nor the Cynosure readers are courts to try such matters, I shall, in the fewest words possible, give my explanation of the matter, and leave this brother, if he has griefs, to take the remedy pointed out by Christ.

At Oberlin, in 1872, Mr. Levington started a scheme, by private conference with brethren, which, I heard, had for its object to raise fifty thousand dollars and start a "Methodist" paper opposed to secret societies. As soon as I received a number of his paper, the Cynosure gave it's God-speed to it; and to this day, has wished his just efforts success.

I am informed by Rev. Mr. Yant and others interested, that they have paid heavily to keep the paper up; and that its committee finally made it over to the Messrs. Arnolds who had a vigorous and sprightly paper, The Reformer, at Sycamore, Illinois, and who now own and control the united paper, Mr. Levington having no control of it and receiving no salary as editor.

At Monmouth, 1873, many of you heard Mr. Levington declare that his Methodist Free Press was as much the organ of the National Christian Association as the Cynosure, and, in open convention, you heard him reproach the Cynosure with being unfriendly to his paper. How unjust and untrue his reproach was, all who have read the Cynosure know. Now having started another committee with separate funds and another press beside ours, judge of my astonishment that he should come back, after exhausting the money drawn from his friends, and revile us because we do not take him up and support him.

Having now been assailed by this brother at two anniversaries without replying, we shall publish Mr. Levington's paper on the subject read at Pittsburgh, and here the matter must end. We shall object, however, to his hereafter occupying the time of our anniversaries with his personal and private matters, to the great and incalculable detriment of the cause. Our word to him is that of Abraham to Lot, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between thee and us."

OUR PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS.

We re-adopted our former platform with some modifications suggested by Dr. Taylor of Summerfield, Ohio; Mr. Barlow of New York and Mr. Needels of Missouri. Of this platform Prof. Sloane said in the Christian Statesman, of Philadelphia, that it was the platform of the future, and altogether the best ever put before the American people. Mr. Needles has requested that each article be separately and fully discussed.

Our candidates stand squarely on our platform. Hon. J. B. Walker was sometime Senator in the State of Michigan, President of Benzonia College, and is the author of books now translated into several European languages, and the widest circulated of any religious books by any living author; and he has made some of the clearest and best speeches, and written some of the best articles which our cause has produced. He has now nothing to do but take care of his property and devote his time and attention to the cause of the American party.

Mr. Donald Kirkpatrick of Syracuse, is well known to the readers of the Cynosure and needs no description. He is a dignified and able civilian, whose heart and soul are with us, and whose acquaintance with the politics and politicians of the day, especially those of New York, makes his name a great strength to our ticket.

The arguments in favor of a present nomination of Walker and Kirkpatrick for the campaign of 1876 were these:

1. We need all the time intervening to concentrate our energies; bring our forces into the field, and accomplish a fusion with other reforms and their candidates which we purpose to do.

2. The political deck is clear for action. Neither Democrats nor Republicans have either men or principles to which they attach any great importance or for whom they feel any enthusiasm.

3. If we had waited till the Masonic parties had invented their issues and drawn their lines, some of our friends might have been taken with their craftiness and been lost to our ticket. Now, we are unanimous, full of enthusiasm, and as the dying Wesley said: "The best of all is, God is with us."

DO WE EXPECT TO ELECT OUR CANDIDATES?

A sound United Presbyterian at Pittsburgh said: "I object to representing us as a party of mere testimony. Stranger things have happened than that we should see our candidates elected in 1876." His idea was that if all who believe our platform will vote it, we may poll so heavy a vote as to make it the interest of one party or the other to adopt our men. But elect or not elect, our banner is given to the breeze and we shall stand by it. Whatever happens we shall be a party of testimony and a party of success. We shall elect our tickets in many towns and counties, and there we shall be a party of success and have the vigor which is given by the hope to beat. And the general opinion that our Federal nominations are only for a testimony will keep our principles pure by removing all temptations to truckle for success. In every view, our nominations are wise and our prospects glorious.

IN OUR INCORPORATION

Our desire was two-fold: 1st, To give our National Anniversaries complete moral control over the corporation at Chicago; and 2d, To place the Carpenter Building and its contents in the hands of men who would attend meetings there as often as needed to manage that property for the cause, under that moral control.

The first object was provided for by making the presiding officer of each National Anniversary ex-officio, a member of the corporation in full. Dr. Kerr of Pittsburgh, is the present ex-officio member. He can, and we hope, will attend our meetings; and he is every way competent to report our affairs to the National Christian Anniversary if any thing should be done or attempted amiss.

And further, the by-law provides for an indefinite number of "honorary members," who can attend all or any of our meetings, examine books, make motions, debate, and sit on committees,—everything in short but vote. These honorary members are to be elected at each anniversary by the delegates who may be present. And it seems to me that this puts the corporation perfectly under the moral control of the National Anniversary whose approbation is the breath of its life.

While I was at Washington, Pa., to see a sick friend, Pres. Roberts moved, and the Convention voted to request the alteration of that by-law, so that the honorary members elected yearly at the anniversaries shall be members in full. I may, on further reflection, be in favor of the change, but as at present advised, I am opposed to it. I am opposed to making it possible for any one Anniversary, on the eve of a hot election, being enabled to choose Democratic or Republican members enough and send them into the Chicago Board to give the whole concern to the Republicans or Democrats for that year, or till a President of the United States is chosen.

But the matter will be laid before the Directors at their first meeting, and every vote, recommendation and act of the National Anniversary will be carefully considered and obeyed, unless in our judgment plain disaster would follow. It should be remembered that our anniversaries, moving over the country, are never made up of the same persons, and to give this annual convention, meeting, perhaps, in a remote part of the country, leave to elect and send in an unlimited number of members, to go in and control, sell, remove or otherwise dispose of the Chicago "HOME," might beget a want of confidence which would fatally weaken our holy cause. But we anticipate no such result, but that discussion, good sense and the Spirit of Christ will give us the same unanimity we now enjoy.

Yours in Christ, J. BLANCHARD.

HON. ROBERT AUDLEY BROWN, we learn by postal card, was nominated by the Prohibitionists at Harrisburgh for Governor of Pennsylvania. Mr. Brown is one of the most prominent men of western Pennsylvania, and an open decided friend of the National Christian Association. Now let our friends of the Keystone State meet and nominate Mr. Brown without delay and vote solid for him. Thus the wisdom of our early nominations at Pittsburgh appears. Every man with an honest purpose and an American heart can stand on our platform and vote with "THE AMERICAN PARTY."

The delegates to the Pittsburgh Convention made their reports in the Wheaton College Chapel on Sunday evening, June 20th, at the regular evening service, Prof. C. A. Blanchard in the chair, and making the closing speech. The editors of the Cynosure also made remarks. At the close of the services the elders of the College Church were, by vote, requested to co-operate with prominent members of the several churches in Wheaton to draw up and circulate petitions to be signed by the citizens who have so successfully labored against the dram-shops, requesting the suppression and removal of the lodge from their midst. The lodge, it was remarked, is as much worse than the dram-shops, as a false religion is worse than a particular vice.

MR. LEVINGTON.

As our Indiana letter did not arrive in time for our last Cynosure, it appears in this. We refer our readers to our statement of Mr. Levington's case in that letter. We repeat, neither the Cynosure nor the platform of our Anniversary is a court to try charges of "slander." Nothing but wrangling and acrimony could come of it. To the best of our recollection and belief, and that of others, the record complained of set forth the facts as they occurred at Syracuse. We have heard no complainant of the record but from Mr. Levington. If there were any other complaint it would have been in better taste, at least, that such other person should have brought in the complaint.

We are a Christian Association, and Paul says "set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church;" and surely Mr. Levington cannot complain of Dr. Milligan, Rev. Mr. Cogswell and Rev. A. L. Post, the committee to whom his matters were referred. They are as good men as there are among us, and as independent men. The persons, too, whom Mr. Levington accused by name on the platform, are all members of Christian churches, myself among the number; and we are ready to meet this brother under the principles, and, as we hope, in the spirit of Christ; and there is now a legally responsible body, composed, myself excepted, of just and self-denying men, who are ready to answer and redress any just complaints of injury or wrong.

We gave, in the last number, Mr. Levington's charges, which he explained at Pittsburgh on the platform, with the committee's report, and the action of the Association thereon. Here the matter must end till we receive further orders from the body whom we endeavor to represent.

POKING FUN AT A CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Awhile ago the Interior said the lodge "must expect and respect sharp criticism" from Christianity. Since that manly utterance, its paltering and shuffling to appease Masons are truly pitiful. It reminds one of the religious worldlings of Christ's day. The publicans and harlots behaved better than they did.

While the old and respectable dailies of Pittsburgh gave column after column to the anniversary at Pittsburgh without a gibe or fling, except, perhaps, one or two in the Democratic and Masonic organs; while the associated press sent wide over the country, carefully prepared dispatches, and grave papers like the New York Observer gave respectable and respectful notices of the meeting and its transactions, the Interior of Chicago, our near neighbor, regales its readers by poking fun at the National Christian Association in this style:

"The National Anti-Secret Society met at Pittsburgh June 8, and nominated Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., of Wheaton, Illinois, author of the "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," for President of the United States. A mass-meeting was then held, in which the speakers discussed the political aspects of their cause. Brother Blanchard, of Wheaton, was on hand, of course, and punished the "dark-lantern" transgressors with his usual skill and vigor."

And yet the writer of the above is "at heart" opposed to the lodge!

There are not wanting in the Bible precedents and examples for the writing of the Interior above. Isaiah lvii. 3, 4. says: "Draw near hither ye sons of the sorceress, the seed of the adulterer and whore. Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom do ye make a wide mouth? Are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falsehood; inflaming yourselves with idols?" And David complains of the same idolaters and their jacks, Ps. xxii. 7: "All they that see me laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lips," etc.

Now we have just this to say to these brethren of the Interior: Just so truly as Christ is in the movement which you sneer at or affect to sneer at; and call it "their cause" as though it were not equally your own; just so truly Christ will "laugh at your calamity and mock when your fear cometh."

NOTES.

—The St. Louis Freemason has finally expired and turned over its subscription list to the Voice of Masonry of this city. The Freemason in its life time was voracious as Pharoah's kine, absorbing several Masonic journals, the Masonic Trowel among them. Its late roaring against the Cynosure and National Association was the supreme effort. The Heart and Hand of New York, one of the strongest Oddfellow journals has also suspended.

—Mr. Edward Ronayne, P. M. Keystone Lodge, No. 689, will lecture on the evening of June 30th, in Father Mathew Temperance Hall, corner Harrison and Halstead Streets, Chicago, and will work the Entered Apprentice degree under the formula of the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Two following degrees subsequently. Persons residing in Chicago and vicinity should improve this opportunity.

—Mr. Ronayne was expecting to leave Woodstock early after the meeting described in our correspondence, but on account of abusive and threatening language by the Sheriff of McHenry county towards him, concluded to remain during the forenoon. Along with Father Chittenden he became engaged in a street discussion with lodge men and finally lectured them two hours from the steps of the Masonic hall. A large crowd gathered, and keenly appreciated his evisceration of the lodge. His challenge to discuss the principles of Freemasonry with any adherent was met only with cowardly whines and abuse.

—The Pittsburgh dailies in publishing the report of the finances made a serious error in the figures. The whole amount raised during the year reported by the treasurer was $2,623.30; agents raised $1,053.59 on the field, so far as reported, which was retained by them for expenses and salary. Thus the total amount raised is $3,676.89 and a balance of $289.85, chiefly Publishing House fund, remained on hand June 1st.

Pray.

"I will that men pray everywhere."—1 Tim. ii. 8.

What mean the sophists cold
Who in stern jargon hold,
That unregenerate men may not implore
The care or gifts of heaven,
Nor sue to be forgiven,
Nor Nature's God, by Nature taught, adore?

What can they mean who say,
The sinner cannot pray—
His prayer is sin—his cry will not be heard:
On God he may not call,
The Father of us all;
Thus making void the promise of his word.

Prayer is the cry of need;
And will not He give heed,
Who hears the ravens when they cry for food?
Prayer is the suppliant's plea;
How rich in mercy He
Whose sun beams on the evil and the good!

The prayer of faith? Oh, there
Is faith in earnest prayer;
Faith in the Power unseen, yet ever near.
And prayer that can take hold
Of promise may be bold
In humble faith, and no denial fear.

Prayer, warmed with heavenly fire,
Is pure, intense desire—
Strong with, concurrent with Almighty love:
For so the will of man,
In Heaven's eternal plan,
Can move the Hand that doth all Natnre move.

Pray, sinner, though thy case
Afford no sign of grace;
Pray for thy life—for pardoning mercy pray,
Who knows but God may hear
The cry of trembling fear,
Forgive, and take the heart of stone away!

Is want of faith thy grief?
Pray—help my unbelief;
Ask for the power, the grace to pray aright,
Put forth at His command,
The palsied, withered hand;
Obey, thy weakness shall be turned to might

Then, whosoe'er thou art,
Pray for a filial heart:
The trust that honors God, his grace rewards.
On him cast every care;
Pray always, every where;
And let thy life's whole service be the Lord's.

A Thought for Mothers.

I saw her at the window—a loving mother of middle age, graceful, intelligent, but worldly. With tender care she was nurturing a thrifty rose-bush, whose buds were just unfolding their blushing petals to the sun. She brushed the insects from the leaves, loosened the rich soil around its branching roots, and poured refreshing water upon the whole plant. She spared no pains nor time to render its growth luxurious, and manifested a sort of pride when visitors spoke of her beautiful rose-bush. It was committed to no other hands to be dressed; and the many little ones were closely watched, as they sported about the floor, lest they might jostle it from the window. And when her indulgent husband proposed to paint the worn and unseemly pot in which it was planted, she at once declined the proposition, because the paint would fill the pores of the vessel, and thus deny the roots that air and moisture, which would otherwise refresh them; and at the same time, would surround them with a poison, whose exhalations might wither them.

Careful woman! Would that she were half so careful of the daughters which a kind Father has given her! Would that worldliness had not blinded her eyes to the moral beauties which a tender nature would unfold in their youthful hearts! What are the mingled hues of the rose—be it the first or the last of the fragrant summer—compared with the moral virtues of a daughter's heart? Of what account is the injury inflicted on the choicest plant, by drought and insect compared with the moral detriment of worldly scenes and pleasures, to the immortal mind? Yet, she saw it not! A more studious watch, and more untiring and systematic attention were bestowed upon the plant, than upon the moral culture of the children. She was never anxious lest the vermin of pernicious sentiments should devour the unfolding buds of virtue, and never asked for the crystal waters of life to fall upon the fresh soil of the heart. She was not scrupulous about confining their training to her own hands, as she was that of the rose, but often committed them to the trust of irresponsible servants, while she was gadding abroad, or killing time at her toilet. And what is equally hazardous, she studied to adorn them with all the elegancies of dress and the finery of fashion; thus painting them over with a moral poison, more surely pernicious to their tender hearts, than a coat of Paris green to the roots of a petted rose.

Imprudent mother! Thou wilt rue the day a rose-bush was tended with a closer watch than the development of a daughter's moral nature.—Mother's Assistant.

Great Fire from Small Sparks.

A sturdy Puritan is serving in the parliamentary army under Oliver Cromwell. At the siege of Liecester, in 1645, he is drawn out to stand sentinel; a comrade, by his own consent, takes his place, and is shot through the head at his post. Thus was John Bunyan, whose life had already twice been saved from the most imminent danger of drowning, again spared an untimely death. Though long since dead, he yet speaketh to millions in his own language, and to as many millions in other tongues—one of the most signal instruments for good that ever lived.

John Newton was another chosen vessel; and how did God watch over him when calamity, pestilence, or disease were near, and shield him from danger, while his heart was at enmity with God. We quote a single instance:—"Though remarkable for his punctuality, one day some business so detained him, that he came to his boat much later than usual, much to the surprise of those who had observed his former punctuality. He went out in his boat as heretofore to inspect a ship, but the ship blew up just as he reached her." Had he arrived a few minutes sooner, he must have perished with those on board.

Again, an obscure Highland boy is aught the first principles of our religion by his humble parents amidst the glens of Scotland. He early learns to revere the Bible, and to honor God and the religion of his father. We next hear of him in maturer years, a marine on board a British man-of-war. A battle rages. The deck is swept by a tremendous broad-side from the enemy. Captain Haldane orders another company to be "piped up" from below, to take the place of the dead. On coming up they are seized with a sudden and irresistible panic at the mangled remains of their companions strewed on the deck. On seeing this, the Captain swore a horrid oath, wishing them all in hell. A pious old marine (our Highland boy) stepped up to him, and very respectfully touching his hat, said, "Captain, I believe God hears prayer, and if he had heard your prayer just now what would have become of us?" Having spoken thus, he made a respectful bow, and retired to his place. After the engagement, the Captain calmly reflected on the words of the old marine, which so affected him that he devoted his attention to the claims of religion, and became a pious man. Through his instrumentality, his brother, Robert Haldane, though at first contemptuously rejecting his kind intentions, was brought to reflection, and became a decided Christian.

James Haldane (the Captain) became a preacher, and was pastor of a church in Edinburgh. Robert subsequently settled in Geneva, and being much affected by the low spiritual condition of the Protestant church there, and the theological views of the clergy, he sought an acquaintance with the students of the theological school, invited them to his house, gained their confidence, and finally became the means of the conversion of ten or twelve, among whom were Felix Neff, Henry Pyt, J. H. Merle D'Aubigne. Few men have so honorably and successfully served their Divine Master as Neff and Pyt; and few have filled so wide a sphere in the world of usefulness as the President of the Theological school at Geneva, and the author of the immortal History of the Reformation; and few spots on earth are so precious to the truth, as the city of Geneva. It was a "little fire" that kindled these great lights, and made the ancient and honorable city of Calvin once more worthy of that great name; it was a little spark, struck from the luminous soil of a poor highlander, and well lodged in the soul of this unpretending boy.

After preaching successively and successfully in Berlin, Hamburgh, and Brussels, D'Aubigne was providentially brought back to Geneva, his native city, which event led to the establishment there of the present evangelical "School of the Prophets," with D'Aubigne at its head. This seminary is the hope of piety in Germany; the citadel of the doctrines of the ever-blessed Reformation; a fountain sending out the healing streams of salvation to all Europe, and to the waste places of the Gentiles.

A poor Choctaw boy (Dixon W. Lewis) is seen wandering in the streets of Mobile; is taken into the house of a kind, Christian lady, and fed at her table. The blessing she piously asked before eating, impressed him deeply, though he understood not a word of it. He is sent to a Sabbath school, learns to read, and is converted. The Juvenile Mission Society of Mobile send him to the Alabama Centenary Institute, and thence to Emory College, Georgia. In 1846, he is licensed to preach, and appointed to labor among a remnant of his own tribe in Kember county, Mississippi. His people, though not a Christian among them, build him a school-house and a church. His school opens with thirty-six scholars, from the child of five years old to the adult of thirty-eight. He instructs them, prays with them, and in three months thirty-two are converted. At the close of his conference year, he reports one hundred and three conversions, and a church organized among the Choctaws, ninety-eight strong. His father was among the converts, and many of his relations, and an old man of more than a hundred years old. —Selected.

Hidden Sin.

"There is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; neither hid, that shall not be known." The only safety any man has whether in a private or public station, is at all times to be doing what will bear the light, and that he may do this, to cultivate a sincere, transparent way of living. "He that doeth truth," —to whom truth is a life as well as a word—"cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." A man has every motive to cultivate such a character when he considers that God has sworn to reveal all hidden things, that he has made the whole course of nature to subserve this purpose, that a man betrays himself—face, gesture, voice are self-revealing—and that all about him, whether friends or foes, help on the disclosure, consciously and of intent, or unconsciously. What a revealer conscience is! Men sometimes going beyond the proper bounds, awakening doubt by excessive exculpation, and sometimes making piteous confessions in palor and trembling! Says a Roman poet of the Augustan age:

"Trust me, no torture which the poet feigns,
Can match the fierce, unutterable pain
He feels, who, night and day, devoid of rest,
Carries his own accuser in his breast."

The criminal peoples for himself the world he lives in; writes retribution upon the walls of the chamber he dwells in, and the fair face of heaven he looks upon is his own pursuer, quenches the light of day, and blackens the darkness of night. Guilt is so terrible a secret, when locked up in the soul, that confession is an easement, and punishment a relief. A felon's cell is a safer place than the open field, beneath the open sky; for each shaft of sunlight is a dagger. The winds whisper it, "the thunder, that deep and dreadful organ-pipe," pronounces it. Nature seems in league with an invisible avenger. No man is safe, nor can be happy, who is trying to cover up wrong, and this just in proportion as his conscience is enlightened, and his better nature cultivated. The better a man is, the more likely is he to be found out in any transgression; and certain traits, amiable and good in themselves, make it easy for such a man to be overtaken in a fault. A pure and loving nature is confiding and suspicionless, and through such open avenues the serpent, as of old times, often enters.—Dr. Buddington.

Willing to Live—Willing to Die.

"Grant me this honor, O, my Lord! to bear
Thy stamp upon life's mission;
Spend and be spent on earth; in heaven to share
Thy joy in its fruition."

Wish to die? What for? To be free from troubles, trials, persecutions, cross-bearings? Should such an idea ever enter the mind? A Christian wholly the Lord's, doing his will submissively, has no wish to leave the world till the time appointed. The brightest glories of heaven in full view should be no inducement for him to bid adieu to earthly things, till his work is done, and well done.

"Work! work! 'tis the Master requires thee
His vineyard to plant and sow;
For labor—for labor he hires thee,
Go, be thou his laborer, go!
Nor faint, nor grow weary, nor doubt, nor despair,
The most faithful servant most honor shall share."

Christ came to fulfill his mission—finish his Father's work—and at the close of which he said, "I have finished the work which Thou gavest me to do."—John xvii, 14. "Lo, I come to do Thy will." The last words of Jesus on the cross were, "It is finished," and he gave up the ghost.

"The disciple is not above his master, nor the servant above his lord. It is enough for the disciple to be as his master, and the servant as his lord." Matt. x. 25.

This wishing to die to shun the battle-field, the cross, the persecutions of the wicked, or from becoming weary in well-doing, is not the martyr spirit.

Should the Lord assign us labor in this vineyard a thousand years, or till old as Methuselah, we should rejoice to suffer for his name's sake, saying, "Thy will be done, O, Lord! not mine." The following lines will meet the hearty response of every follower of Jesus:

"Let me not die before I have done for Thee
My earthly work, whatever it may be;
Call me not hence with mission unfulfilled,
Let me not leave my space of ground untilled."

Wealth in China.

The mysteries of China are slowly revealed to the Christian world. Yet progress is made, enterprise pries into her secrets, and step by step draws her into the tide of progress. C. H. Colton Salter, Esq., for some years a consul in China, reports vast undeveloped wealth in the interior, and proposes an expedition for more extended and thorough research. In the New York Times he says:

"The development of the coal-fields of China would alone warrant an expedition. This coal area is upward of 400,000 square miles. In one of the provinces there are beds of 30,000 square miles, twelve to thirty feet thick; every kind of coal is found, hard soft, bituminous and anthracite. Millions of tons are gathered by surface mining, but scientific mining is, I believe, entirely unknown.

"Ships are dispatched every week from Cardiff and Liverpool with coal for California, a long and dangerous journey of 20,000 miles, and here are these vast coal fields of China, virgin fields, only 6,000 miles across the Pacific ocean.

"On the great river, the 'Child of the Ocean,' as the Chinese poetically term it, there are perhaps a hundred cities with dense populations, all eager for trade. In one place on the river the piscicultural nurseries line the banks for nearly fifty miles. Many drugs of great value are found. The so-called Turkey rhubarb; the Spanish fly, indigenous to the western Provinces of China, sent across the plains of Asia centuries ago and planted in Europe; the castor-oil, so repulsive to the taste here, is as delicate there as the finest olive-oil, and is used for cooking fish. It is a wonderful land, and full of mysteries. If Prof. Baird will accompany me, I will show him, in Southern China, a cotton-gin precisely similar to the one said to have been invented by the American Whitney. He will find all sorts of inventions and discoveries made forty centuries ago in Cathay; yet claimed to-day as the inventions of our race in Europe and this country. Even the familiar tobacco and potato, which Sir Walter Raleigh supposed were the sole productions of America, may be found growing wild in China, along with cotton (short staple,) the sweet potato, the maize, white and yellow corn, and the familiar buckwheat, so dear to the average American (soaked in butter, fat, and syrup), in winter time, and so bad for his poor stomach. All these grains and cereals were doubtless carried over Behring's Strait by the nomad tribes of the great Mongolian plains in some far forgotten period of the world's strange history, and the Chinaman of those ages became the ancestor of the American Indian of to-day."—Ex.

What a Century has Done.

One hundred and ten years ago there was not a single white man in Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana or Illinois. Then, what is the most flourishing part of America was as little known as the countries around the mysterious mountains of the moon. It was not until 1767 that Boone left his home in North Carolina, to become the first pioneer settler in Kentucky. The first pioneer of Ohio did not settle until twenty years after. Canada belonged to France, and the population did not exceed a million aud a half of people. A hundred years ago the great Frederick of Prussia was performing those grand exploits which have made him immortal in military annals, and with his little monarchy was sustaining a single contest with Russia, Austria, and France, the three great powers of Europe combined. Washington was a modest Virginia Colonel, and the great events in history of the two worlds in which these great but dissimilar men took leading parts were then scarcely foreshadowed.

A hundred years ago there were but four newspapers in America. Steam engines had not been imagined, railroads and telegraphs had not entered into the remotest conception of men. When we come to look back at it through the vista of history, we find that to the century just passed has been allotted more important events, in their bearing upon the happiness of the world, than almost any other which has elapsed since the creation.

Solomon says, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." And the words of an old epitaph are:

"That I spente, that I had;
That I gave, that I have;
That I lefte, that I loste.

Children's Corner.

"Hoe Out Your Row!"

One summer day a farmer's boy
Was hoeing out the corn,
And moodily had listened long,
To hear the dinner horn.
The welcome blast was heard at last,
And down he dropped his hoe;
But the good man shouted in his ear,
"My boy, hoe out your row!"

Although a hard one was the row,
To use a plowman's phrase,
And the boy, as sailor's have it,
Beginning now to "haze,"
"I can!" he said, and manfully
Again he seized his hoe;
And the good man smiled to see
The boy hoe out his row.

The lad the text remembered,
And learned the lesson well,
That perseverance to the end
At last will nobly tell.
Take courage, then, resolve you can,
And strike a vigorous blow:
In life's wide field of vigorous toil,
Always "hoe out your row!"

What Became of an Overworked Boy.

The boys of our time are too much afraid of work. They act as if the honest sweat of the brow was something to be ashamed of. Would that they were all equally afraid of a staggering gait and bloated face! This spirit builds the gambling houses, fills the jails, supplies the saloons and gaming places with loiterers, and keeps the alms-houses and charitable institutions doing a brisk business.

It doesn't build mammoth stores and factories, nor buildings like the Astor Library and Cooper Institute. The men who built such monuments of their industry and benevolence were not afraid of work.

All the boys have heard of the great publishing house of the Harpers. They know of their Monthly, Weekly, and Bazar, and interesting books of all kinds, and perhaps have seen their great publishing house in New York city. If I should ask them how the oldest of the brothers came to found such an industrious house, I should perhaps be told that he was a "wonderfully lucky man."

He was lucky, and an old friend and fellow-workman, a leading editor, recently let out the secret of his luck. He and the older Harper learned their trades together, fifty years ago, in John street, New York. They begun life with no fortune but willing hands and active brains; fortune enough for any young man in this free country.

"Sometimes after we had done a good day's work, James Harper would say, 'Thurlow let's break the back of another token—just break its back.' I would generally reluctantly consent just to break the back of the token; but James would beguile me, or laugh at my complaints, and never let me off until the token was completed, fair and square! It was our custom in summer to do a fair half day's work, before the other boys and men got their breakfast. We would meet by appointment in the gray of the morning, and go down to John street. We got the key of the office by tapping on the window, and Mr. Seymour would take it from under his pillow, and hand it to one of us through an opening in the blind.

"It kept us out of mischief, and put money in our pockets."

No wonder that the venerable man in relating this foundation story of his life of success could say, "Our employer was the best man God ever made."

The key handed through that window tells the secret of the luck that enabled these two men to rise to eminence, while so many boys that lay sleeping in those busy morning hours are unknown. No wonder that he became Mayor of the city and head of one of the largest publishing houses in the world. When this great printing house burned down, the giant perseverance learned in those hours of overwork, enabled him to raise, like magic from the ashes, a larger and finer one.

Instead of watching till his employer's back was turned, and saying, "Come boys, let's go home; we've done enough for one day," and sauntering off with a cigar in his mouth; or "I think it's time we had a holiday, to go a fishing;" his cry was "Let's do a little overwork."

That overwork that frightens boys nowadays out of good places, and sends them out West, on shipboard, anywhere, eating husks, in search of a spot where money can be had without work, laid the foundation of the apprentice boy's future greatness.

Such busy boys were only too glad to go to bed and sleep sound. They had no time nor spare strength for dissipation, and idle thoughts, and vulgar conversation.

Almost the last words that James Harper uttered were appropriate to the end of such a life, and ought to be engraved upon the mind of every boy who expects to make anything of himself: "It is not best to be studying how little we can work, but how much." Boys, make up your minds to one thing: the future great men of this country are doing just what those boys did. If you are dodging work, angry at your employer, or teacher, for trying to make you faithful; getting up late, cross and sleepy, after a night of pleasure-seeking, longing for the time when you can exchange honest work for speculation, you will be a victim to your course of conduct.

The plainly-dressed boys that you meet carrying packages, going of errands, working at trades, following the plow, are laying up stores of what you call good luck. Overwork has no terrors for them. They are preparing to take the places of the great leaders of our country's affairs. They have learned James Harper's great secret. The key handed out to him in the "gray of the morning"—that tells the story! —Evangelist.

For your own, as well as for your children's sake, learn to speak low. They will remember that tone when your head is under the willows. So, too, will they remember a harsh and angry tone. Which legacy will you leave to your children?

HON. JAMES B. WALKER.

Our readers have already been made somewhat acquainted with the public career of our candidate for President. Knowing, however, that a more intimate acquaintance would be highly satisfactory and could not fail to beget confidence, the following compendious sketch of his public life has been prepared. As is well known Mr. Walker was not at the convention at Pittsburgh and first learned of his nomination by the papers.

Mr. Walker was born in Philadelphia and raised in Pittsburgh. He began public life as printer and publisher and editor of the Western Courier, the first political paper published in Portage county, Ohio. He wrote at the age of twenty-three the first address in favor of Andrew Jackson for President, published in northern Ohio. He studied law in the office of Jonathan Sloan at Ravenna, the county seat, and afterwards with Chas. B. Thompson, Esq., of the same place.

He subsequently published and edited the Ohio Observer at Hudson, and was a member of the College at that place for three years.

During these years, he relinquished the study of law, and devoted himself to the interests of Christianity. He stated his purpose by the press, by the pulpit, by the volume, to promote reform and purity in the churches. This purpose he has pursued constantly. He embraced the Quaker doctrine of labor to do good for men as the end of life; but worked in Presbyterian and Congregational organizations, as he deemed most good could be accomplished in them.

In pursuance of his purpose he established a newspaper devoted to the interest of reform and religion in Cincinnati called The Watchman of the Valley, which still lives and circulates widely as the organ of the Presbyterian churches in the West and Southwest under the name of Central Christian Herald.

When established, the paper was transferred to good hands, and he revised and published his first book on Religious Philosophy, which has had a larger circulation in Christendom than any similar work of any other American author.

He then established a religious paper in the city of Chicago, and opened a room for the sale and circulation of useful books on all subjects, including religious and reform publications. He likewise aided to establish the first Baptist paper in Chicago, which was edited by Elder Stone, still resident in this city.

During his residence in the city, Mr. Walker engaged zealously in promoting educational and Christian work, by lectures before the Mechanics' Association, in the public halls, and by Sabbath School efforts. He was elected president of the Chicago Sabbath School Union, which then included the teachers and scholars of all the evangelical Sabbath Schools in the city.

While in Chicago Mr. Walker wrote his second volume and sold the copyright in London, where it was published in several forms and has since gone through several editions in this country.

Having disposed of his newspaper to Wight and Bross, two Christian gentlemen well known at that time in the city, Mr. Walker returned to his home in Mansfield, Ohio. There he preached the Gospel for several years and aided to organize and establish the largest Congregational church but one in the State of Ohio. He likewise led in the effort to pay a debt of $7,000 and establish a large church in the city of Sandusky.

He was an active member of the State convention that nominated Salmon P. Chase for Governor; and at the commencement of the war the Governor and Senate signed a petition for his appointment as consul in Europe. He never went to Washington to apply for a commission and consequently never received it.

Soon after his return to Mansfield, Mr. Walker obtained a larger subscription, including his own, than could be raised in any other place in the State to establish a Wesleyan Methodist Book Room and paper. These were under the management of Rev. Edward Smith, afterwards abolition candidate for Governor of Ohio. In all the papers established or edited by Mr. Walker the principles of Christian and moral reform were earnestly maintained, anti-slavery, temperance, the Sabbath, Anti-masonry etc.

About the commencement of the war Mr. Walker spent some time in Europe and published a third volume, which has gone through four editions in this country, and is, with his other publications a living book.

Soon after his return to this country he united with some other gentlemen to found a Christian agricultural college and colony in an entirely destitute region of Michigan. The region was a wilderness. A new county was organized, farms and schools opened, teachers provided, and the pioneer population were invited to educate their children at the merely nominal rate of twelve dollars per annum. It became a blessing to the laboring poor and supplied nine-tenths of the school-teachers within a radius of one hundred miles. Mr. Walker established a newspaper in the colony and preached to the people. During the campaign for Lincoln and Johnson, he canvassed the district in which he resided for Lincoln, who received an overwhelming majority of the votes of the district. He soon after was nominated for State Senator and received a larger number of votes than any other candidate, State or National. In the Senate he was chairman of the committee on Public Instruction, and got through a bill which had been digested by the State Superintendent, now President of the Illinois Agricultural College. The law is one of the very best existing in any State in the Union.

In order to be near the publishing and printing houses with which he had business, Mr. Walker removed some three years ago to the vicinity of Chicago where he now resides.

Mr. Walker is a retiring man of enthused, but energetic habits. He never did anything for the public that he did not do well. There is nothing of shallowness or sham about him, and if it were possible to elect him President, he would do better for the reputation and prosperity of the country than any man that either of the old parties can present.

Is Christ Crowded out of the Burial Services of the Grange?

"The burial prayer and benediction in the exposition of the grange, were in the name of Christ, and the remarks took no notice of it, but intimated that there was no Christ in the grange. Either the prayer was quoted wrong or the remarks were wrong, and would be an injury to the cause if left so. It would look like trying to palm off a little deception on the people."

The above quotation is taken from the letter of a friend and the remark intimating that there was no Christ in the burial service of the grange, states that the ceremonies of the grange are a part of "A pagan religion which boldly intrudes its weak, confused and confusing sentiments upon the solemn scenes of death and the grave, crowding out Christ and Christianity." We consider it a fact that Christ is crowded out of these services but admit that the remarks ought to explain our position more fully.

Christ speaking to his disciples, says: "Where two or three are gathered together IN MY NAME, there am I in the midst of them." Matt. xviii. 20. Grangers do not perform these funeral ceremonies as Christians but as grangers. They do not require persons to become the disciples of Christ before they admit them into the grange. Those who publicly deny Christ are welcomed into their order and often become their chaplains. Indeed since the name of Christ is not so much as mentioned in the secret or inside religious ceremonies and prayers of the order, are we not fully warranted in believing that the public use of his name in the burial services is a trick of the devil to deceive the Christians as to the real character of the grange ceremonies. Throughout their entire secret ritual they "teach for doctrines the commandments of men." Such worship Christ pronounces "in vain."

Grangers, as such, are not Christians, yet grangers, as such, perform funeral ceremonies over departed brothers and sisters; hence their closing prayer and benediction, offered in the name of Christ, seem to us, (in the light of Christ's teachings) blasphemous. And we believe that all candid and well-informed readers of the Exposition of the grange, on reflection, will see that while Christ is ignored in the secret ritual, he is not only "crowded out," but insulted, and his holy name blasphemed in the public burial service of the grange.

Religious Intelligence.

—The interest is the churches of St. Peter, Minn., is still so great that it is proposed to resume special services at a early day. Within the last two months about eighty conversions have occurred.

—The colored Baptists of Georgia intend to found a Normal and Theological school at Atlanta. They have solicited aid from the Northern Baptist Home Mission Society, and have adopted the centennial plan of dollar subscriptions from their own people in order to procure the desired amount.

—The General Conference of the "Methodist" church lately held in Princeton, Ill., appointed the following Commissioners on Reunion with the Methodist Protestant church: The Rev. John Beems, the Rev. J. J. Smith, D. D., the Rev. E. A. Wheat, the Rev. Alexander Clark, the Hon. F. H. Pierpont, J. J. Gillespie, the Rev. G. B. McElroy, D. D., T. J. Finch, and the Rev. Wm. Remsbury.

—The Union of the United Presbyterians of England and the English Presbyterian church is likely to be effected. Last year the Scottish United Presbyterian church withheld its sanction; this year its Synod has withdrawn all opposition, and a union will be consummated on the basis adopted in 1874. The effect will be the formation of a compact Presbyterian body in England.

—A letter from Mexico in the Missionary Herald says that Protestants are persecuted more than ever in that country. On the 20th of Febuary two large stones were thrown at the minister preaching in a Protestant church in Mexico. One of the stones struck the Bible on the desk before him, the other mortally wounding one of the members of the congregation. The very same day the Romanists shamefully insulted the Protestants at Calhuacan. The Monday and Tuesday following they badly wounded four Protestants, and burned one of their houses in the same place. In Zamora the Catholics drew a Protestant through the public streets with a lasso. In a place called Dolores, as well as in two or or three others places, Protestants have been killed."

—The revival meetings held by Messrs. Whittle and Bliss in Memphis and vicinity continue without abatement.

—Dr. Arnot of the Free Church of Scotland, and the eloquent representative in the Evangelical Alliance last year in New York, is dead.

from the religion which existed before the Pyramids;" that is, Egyptian heathenism.

But there is a statement by Emanuel Rebold, in his "General History of Freemasonry in Europe," page 329, which settles the point, so far as Masonic authority goes, that our common Blue-lodge Masonry is actually the heathenism of the nations. Rebold says:

"A very limited knowledge of the history of primitive worship and mysteries is necessary to enable any person to recognize, in the Master Mason, Hiram, the Osiris of the Egyptians, the Mithras of the Persians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, and the Atys of the Phrygians, of whom these peoples celebrated the passion, death, and resurrection, as Christians celebrate to-day that of Jesus Christ."

Here we have an explicit, Masonic, authoritative declaration that Freemasonry is a copy of the old heathenism, and that Hiram Abiff represents, or rather is, a reproduction of several of their principal gods, who were, it seems, killed and raised from the dead, as caricatures of Christ. If then heathenism is conspiracy against God and man, Freemasonry is.

Let us turn from Masonic authorities to Christian.

MacKnight, Adam Clark, Warburton, and other learned commentators, tell us that the "unfruitful works of darkness" which Paul commands Christians to disfellowship, (Eph., v: 11,) were these very heathen mysteries with which Freemasons now declare the spiritual identity of their lodge. MacKnight gives us an analysis of those mysteries, including the "terror infused into the minds of the initiated," and bringing him from darkness to light, thus showing the moral and literal identity of Masonry and those mysteries which the apostle commanded to be disfellowshipped, turned out of the Ephesian churches. Adam Clark paraphrases Paul thus: "Have no religious connection whatever with heathens or their worship." The apostle warns them not to be deceived by the "vain words" by which the mystagogues of that day covered and justified their abominations, adding: "Because of these things the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience." Eph. v:-6.

This testimony from authority is sufficient, and sufficiently explicit, that Freemasonry is but an expansion and continuance in our day of that dark system of mystic paganism which the apostles disfellowshipped as conspiracy against God.

"But," one says, "we are a practical people. Give us proof from facts." Well, these are facts:

1. Secret societies all practice more or less human substitutes for the worship of God. This is conspiracy to displace him.

2. Freemasons by what law or rule I know not, but I know the fact, commonly destroy books and writings which contain facts and reasoning against the lodge. This is conspiracy against truth and the God of truth.

3. Freemasons separate husbands from wives by a life-long oath of silence, and that in matters of mutual concern, as both wife and husband are certainly concerned in paying lodge dues. This is conspiracy to change marriage so that it will no more symbolize the union of Christ and souls.

4. For a like reason, Christ even in Christian countries, is omitted from the creed and prayers of the blue lodge or fundamental Masonry. And though the dangling additions to Masonry, called Templar degrees, recognize Christ, they insult him by brutal rites and blasphemous oaths, in which, while the Templar seems to recognize Christ in the Commandery he swears fealty to his exclusion from the Blue lodge below. This is conspiracy, blasphemy and insult combined.

5. Then Freemasonry repeals by implication, the laws of God. That against adultery, by limiting its prohibitions to the female relatives of Masons. That against fraud, by forbidding to wrong a member of the lodge. And the law against murder, by perpetually repeated illegal penalties of death. It thus repeals general laws by special limitations; impiously thrusts itself into the seat of the Universal Lawgiver, and by localizing and limiting morals destroys them! Is not this conspiracy against God?

6. Then the lodge, in all its published prayers, calls its unknown God "The Grand Architect of the Universe;" whereas Christ, the Bible tells us, "made the worlds," and is therefore the "Supreme Architect," but he is excluded from the creed at the door of the lodge.

Such facts might be multiplied; but these are sufficient. And any one who will, may satisfy himself of their truth. And just so truly as we know they are true, just so truly do we know that Freemasonry is conspiracy against God and man.

The Bible is our sole remaining witness:—Let us summon it to the stand. In this august volume of volumes, "the true intellectual system of the universe," is set before us, in simple sublimity, by its author himself, like a sea of glass with the conflicting winds of opinion blowing on it.

Why this conflict is endured; why He permits evil, we know not; but we know that there is evil, and that it struggles for the mastery of good, and that the strife is a religious one. The fight opens in Eden between the religion of Abel and Cain; and ends in the Apocalypse when the dragon is cast into the lake of fire where the beast and the false prophet were cast before. And through six thousand years of history, poetry, proverbs, phophecy, gospels, epistles, and the revelation; the parties and principles in this conflict are distinctly and unmistakably marked. And I put the whole case upon issue, with the declaration, that every lineament and feature, principle and end which mark that party in this long agony, which throughout the Bible is seeking the dethronement of God and the ruin of men, is found in a Masonic lodge!

The thing that separates these parties is Christ; whom Abel worshiped, and Cain omitted and ignored. That same lamb by which Abel worshipped Christ, "by faith," went down through the ages from true altar to true altar, till seen in angel-photograph at last, "as a Lamb that had been slain," standing "in the midst of the throne of God," where he "dieth no more." This is the atonement. This is none other than God in Christ, dying to save men: while Cain as a deist, Jew, or Freemason, without faith, by a self-projected worship, offered "the fruits of the earth," and proposed to be saved by practicing his religion; and the Cains of humanity have been inventing religions and murdering Abels ever since!

Let us compare now these two religions, to wit: Gentilism or opposition religion of the Bible, and the lodge. A bare inspection shows them to be the same.

Now I need scarcely remind those who hear me that the Bible represents Satan as the usurping "god of this world;" the aspirant for its worships, the king of its evils, and the god of its idolatries. As little need I remind them that the lodge-god is "the god of this world." That, excluding Christ, the lodge has neither Father, nor Son, nor Holy Ghost, and that Satan holds every religious shrine on earth not occupied by the true God. Both heathenism and the lodge take the world as it is, and make it continually worse, as the sinking nations show. That both take their candidates as they find them, requiring neither repentance, faith or regeneration, but only fealty, money and worship As Satan would have supported Christ if Christ would have worshipped him; so Masonry supports all ministers and churches which will worship at its altar, or encourage others to do so, no matter what else they may be or do. Both these opposition religions offer the same inducements to join, viz: worldly glory and advantage, which was Satan's offer to Christ. Both make the same promise, salvation to knowledge; to reveal something that will make their members divine. "Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil," Both call the uninitiated, though they may be children of God, "profane;" which word meaning "before the temple," the lodge has taken from heathenism. Both treat God and true religion as bigoted and over-strict. Both dispute God, and assure men they "shall not surely die." Both systems have one and the same creed, belief in one supreme deity; and as the creed makes the religion, the creeds being the same the religions are one. Both treat the Bible alike. Neither heathens nor Masons ever printed a Bible or taught one; but both quote and use the Bible for their purposes. Masons draw millions of money from the people; but the lodge never printed a Bible or Testament; but when Christians print them, the lodge picks them up, as in heathen countries it picks up heathen books, carries them in its processions, places them on its altars for show and quotes them in its lectures for effect, as the devil quoted Scripture to Christ for his own ends.

The Bible calls men together to serve God and to pray; the lodge to practice ceremonies and dance. The ceremonies of Gentilism are frivolous, as if Satan would burlesque worship and make it ridiculous. So nothing can can exceed the frivolity of the lodge. There seems in both too, the same devilish spite against men, and delight in degrading them. In the lodge-worship at Sinai, "Aaron made men naked unto their shame." (Ex. xxxii, 25.) So the lodge strips and fools its candidates, which begets a strange desire, as in a prostituted woman, who is their Scripture type, to bring others to the same degradation.

What but the most cruel spite could incite Satan to set men and women to worship horses, monkeys, etc., as our travelers now daily see them worshipping in Asia? The only explanation is, that he hates men because of Christ who died for them, and enjoys the damning joke of their degradation to cheapen their worship and spite the God whom he hates, who he knows will one day be worshipped by our race.

These, in part, are the facts and arguments which show the moral identity of the opposition religions of the Bible with the opposition religions of the lodge. And if two different movements ever had the same nature, source, end, spirit and object, these have.

For, under all these multifarious idolatries, lurks the one great, all-prevading principle of rivalship and opposition to the one "living and true God," and the "only Mediator between God and man." Knowing that "no man can come to the Father but by Christ;" if he can displace Christ from the religion of this earth, as he has displaced Him from the religion of the lodge, he has shut the door of hope on mankind; for Christ is that "door." "Liar and murderer from the beginning," he is seeking by false religions to deceive the nations' and, by one stroke displacing Christ, to murder the inhabitants of this globe! —as a Roman traitor wished the Empire had but one neck, that he might sever that neck at a single blow; with this infinite difference, that the death in this case is eternal and sought by the rebel usurping god of this world, not directly but indirectly, staunch and steady to the one stupendous, malignant end, of making God inaccessible to our race by getting control of the religions of men, and setting aside, ignoring, dropping out of them Christ Jesus, who is the only way to God.

If these facts and reasonings are true, we see where we are and what we have to meet. The secret orders in Christian lands are the outcroppings of paganism; the advance guards and skirmish line of the armies of the field of Armgeddon, mustering under those "spirits of devils working miracles which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

We see, too, that all our help is in Christ, who, in the quaint language of Cudworth, is appointed of God "Captain of the forces of the kingdom of light;" not that we are to do no fighting, but we must conquer in Him. Vainly may we hope that popery and Freemasonry, which are in nature one, the latter being like the "former" as the image is like the "beast," ever will purposely assist in destroying each other. True, God sometimes turns the swords of the enemies of His religion against each other, by panic, mutiny, or mistake; but though wolves and panthers and dogs may sometimes worry each other, they will all kill sheep, and these beasts are all enemies of the flock of Christ. Our help must therefore come from the Lord which made heaven and earth, and it will come if we seek it.

The practical inferences are: That Freemasonry must be destroyed if the country is saved. That fellowshipping Freemasonry is disintegrating the church. That voting for adhering Masons is voting for men who in practice deny the first principles of Republican government. And, as organized aggression can only be met effectually by organized resistance; we must unite to withhold our fellowship and our votes from known adherents of the lodge, if we will be consistent Christians or consistent Americans.

ABSTRACT OF PROF. SLOANE'S ADDRESS.

On the first evening of the Convention Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., of the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, being introduced, spoke in substance as follows:

He said he was present to show which side he was on, for he could not endure to see honest and faithful men grappling with a powerful social evil without giving them his help. The question under consideration is of a serious nature and the words spoken here should be well weighed. Who are the persons connected with these secret associations which we combat? They are our friends with whom we mingle in daily life, and relatives with whom we are connected by the closest and most loving ties. They are to be spoken of with respect and kindness. Our war is not with men, not with individuals, but against principles, and should be scrupulously carried on as such.

The oldest and most powerful of the secret orders is Freemasonry, and in many ways it is the most dangerous. I shall confine my remarks to a consideration of this society. We are opposed to Fremasonry because of the wicked and unholy character of the obligations which those who associate themselves with it are obliged to take. We affirm in regard to them, without fear of contradiction, that they are at war with our Christian religion and at war with our social and political institutions. It is a matter of wonder that men of understanding can take upon themselves such obligations as are taken in this order. John Quincy Adams once said that no decent butcher would cut up a hog in the way these oaths provide for the killing of a man for a violation of his Masonic obligation. The state and church alone have power to impose oaths, and when these societies administer them they usurp functions which do not belong to them, and are guilty of impiety.

Masonry is nothing but a system of impostnre from beginning to end. It claims great antiquity, yet as has been stated by the gentleman who preceded me, it is only a little more than one hundred and fifty years old. It comprises certain rites and ceremonies which have been introduced into it and which have come down from antiquity, which are as old as the oldest paganisms. But this is no proof of the antiquity of the order. The material of this building we now occupy is as old as creation, yet in its present form it is new. So it is with Masonry. It is a new institution constructed with old materials. It is neither ancient or old as is generally claimed by its advocates. Masonry is also a very gross mingling of sacred and profane things, of pagan worship and Christian religion. It can be clearly shown from the authenticated publications of the order that some of the Masonic ceremonies are taken from the vilest rites of heathen worship, and imposed upon the human mind as something of value and importance. When once within the order it is hard to escape from it, as has been time and time again asserted by the few who have escaped. We charge also that it is selfish from first to last, and because of the selfishness we believe it unworthy of any support.

But my strongest opposition to Masonry is because of its rivalry with religion. It steps in before the church, and is a false, an idolatrous religion; a religion without a Saviour and therefore a delusion and a snare to all who engage in it or rest their hope upon it.

But what do we hope to accomplish by opposing these orders? Why, we will battle for the right and trust to God to overthrow the wrong. This is a gigantic system of oppression. The end of it will come and truth and right must prevail. We know in our heart of hearts that these associations are evil, and they must be overthrown. Free, open and candid discussion will overthrow them, or cause them to shrivel into insignificance, and this is what is needed by the American people, and what this Association proposes for its object.

NOTICES.

—An adjourned meeting of the National Christian Association (a corporate body) will be held in the Cynosure office Chicago on Wednesday the 7th of July next at 9; 30 A. M., for the completion of business proposed at the annual meeting. The following new members are requested to be present and take part in the proceedings: Rev. A M. Milligan, of Allegheny City, Rev. W. Bain of Chicago, Rev. J. A. Bingham of Mallet Creek, O., Rev. B. T. Roberts of Rochester, Rev. Wm. Leuty of Ligonier, Ind., Isaac Preston of Lockport, Rev. A. D. Freeman of Downers Grove, and I. George Huntington, of Oak Park, will deliver the Anniversary address before the Society of Inquiry, in the evening. The Anniversary Exhibition of the Literary Union occurs Monday evening, June 28th. The Public Exercises of the Alumni Association on Tuesday evening, includes an address by Harvey Potter, Esq., and an essay by Miss E. M. Grant. The Commencement Exercises on Wednesday, June 30th, will begin at 10½ A. M. The Annual Address will be delivered Commencement evening by Rev. T. C. Easton, of Belvidere, Ill.

Farm and Garden.

Value of Poultry on the Farm.

Mr. Mechi, an eminent English agriculturist, speaks as follows with regard to poultry on the farm: No one item on the farm pays so well as a good stock of poultry, properly managed. With them everything is turned to account. Not a kernel, wild seed, or insect escapes their scrutinizing eyes. Their industrious claws are ever at work uncovering, ready for appropriation, every hidden but consumable substance. Fowls must have access to chalk or lime for the shells of their eggs, and grit or gravel to grind their food in their gizzards. They luxuriate on grass or clover, which is a necessity for them. In winter they like mangolds or swedes. They must have access to plenty of pure water. The quality of the eggs depends upon the quality of food. They, like ourselves, like shade in summer, and warm, sheltered corners in winter. They must have some access to shelter in wet weather. Fowls will not be long healthy on the same grounds or yards. The earth gets tainted. Therefore, to prevent disease, lime and salt your yards and their usual pasture once a year—say in autumn, when the rains will wash it well in and sweeten the surface. Broods of chickens never do better with us than on the grassy brows and patches abutting upon the growing crops, either of corn or pulse, into which they run either for insects or for shelter. The roof of the coop should be watertight, and the coop should often be removed, having only the natural ground for the floor. The ground soon gets tainted unless you remove the coop. You can hardly make some people good managers of poultry if they lack observation and judgment. These are especially necessary to the breeding of poultry. Your male birds should be often changed—say at least once in two years; and they should be young and vigorous. Breeding in and in will not do, any more than it will with other animals.

The question as to which is the best breed of fowl for every country home has been asked over and over again. The poultry fanciers have discussed Brahmas, and the common farmer has stuck to his common fowls, as if he need not look for anything higher or better; but the Houdans have been so uniformly praised that we must accept them as now the most popular breed for family use.

Mr. A. B. Allen, a poultry fancier, says: "They are of great constitution, very hardy, of quiet disposition, and mature early. They grow to nearly as great size as the Brahma, Cochin, or other East India and China fowls, unless particular pains are taken to force the latter; for with ordinary farm feed and care the latter do not generally exceed six to eight pounds, and the Houdans, with the same treatment, easily attain this weight full grown. Then they are better shaped than the large Eastern fowls, having a larger body and much fuller and more meaty breast. This renders them, like the Dorking, a superior fowl for the table. Another advantage, the chickens mature two or three months earlier and are not near so long in the leg. The hens of this breed are among the greatest of layers. Not one of mine has manifested any disposition to set yet, and I am told they rarely do so till past three years old. Their eggs are of a pure white color and are a full size larger than any I ever got from Brahma, Cochins, or any other breed. I think my hens lay at least nine months out of the year on an average, and some of them still longer. In fact, as layers, I find them nearly if not fully equal to the Leghorns, which have hitherto been considered the greatest layers of all."

Home and Health Hints.

Near the close of the last century, when England and France were waging war against each other, the British Parliament passed a law, to take effect for two years, that the army at home should be supplied with bread made from unbolted wheat meal, solely for the purpose of making the wheat go as far as possible. At first the soldiers were exceedingly displeased with this kind of bread and refused to eat it, but after two or three weeks they preferred it to fine flour bread. The result of the experiment was that the health of the soldiers improved so much and so manifestly in the course of a few months that the officers and physicians of the army publicly declared that the soldiers were never before so healthy and robust, and that diseases of many kinds had almost entirely disappeared from the army. For a while the use of this bread was almost universal in public institutions and in private families, and it was pronounced by the civic physicians by far the most healthy bread that could be eaten. The testimony of sea captains and whalemen is equally in favor of wheaten bread. "The coarser my ship-bread is, the healthier is my crew," said a very intelligent sea-captain of over thirty years' experience. The inhabitants of Westphalia, who are a hardy and robust people, capable of enduring the greatest fatigues, are a living testimony to the salutary effects of this sort of bread; and it is remarkable that they are very seldom attacked by acute fevers, and those other diseases which arise from bad humors. In fact, the laboring class throughout Europe, Asia and Africa use bread made of the whole grain; happily for them they cannot afford to buy fine flour.

The most intelligent class of people in our large cities have bread made of unbolted wheat on their tables every day, and depend upon it; but in country places the idea prevails that it is cheap and coarse, and that to feed a guest on Graham bread would be inhospitable. Nothing can be further from the truth. Our first-class hotels have regularly on their bills of fare, "cracked wheat," "hominy," "oatmeal mush;" and some advanced teachers of hygiene are beginning to hope that the reign of fine flour is passing away. Of oatmeal as a diet, one of our writers on health says: "Americans are gradually waking up to the fact that oatmeal is by no means an unimportant article of diet. As a food, the merits of which have stood the tests of centuries, and which is designed to promote the sanitary condition of the nation by laying the foundation for more ready and vigorous framers for the coming generation, let us regard its general adoption as an article of diet as nothing short of a national good. Its phosphorus gives a healthful impulse to the brain, and on no other food can one endure so great or so prolonged mental labor as on oatmeal porridge."

What Every Wife Ought to Know.

Every action and every motion depletes the physical system. Milk, the first food absorbed by men and animals, is the only natural mixture, containing all the elements of blood save the coloring. Water constitutes three-fourths of the body. To work well, either physically or mentally, the worker must eat mixed food. Food properly administered stimulates the system as wine does, only more naturally. The long night hours empty the stomach, deplete the system and chill the body. On arising the physical condition is low and should be recruited. If we lose time at early morning in bringing the body up to its natural heat and strength, we cannot regain it during the day. A healthy man requires about one pound of nutriment a day to keep him in a good condition. While a working man would need per day five pounds of solid mixed food, two and a half would be enough for persons who lounge and sleep much.

Life can be sustained two or three weeks on two ounces a day. A change of diet should follow a change of seasons—in Winter, fats and sweets; in Summer, fruits, fish, and lighter meats. Milk and eggs, are blood food; steak, flesh food; potatoes and wheat, which being heating material, are fuel; and coffee, a stimulant.—From a lecture by Monsieur Pallas.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows:

"Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Price. $1.35.

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actnally Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS. in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

Does Your Subscription Expire in June?

A very large number of Cynosure subscriptions expire during this present month. Is yours one of them? Please look at the figures on the label of your paper. Is your time out this month? If so, have you renewed your subscription? We hope none of those whose time is out will fail to write to us whether they wish the paper continued or not; but we hope all will wish to have it continued. This is the last copy we send to those whose time expires in June who do not renew or order their paper continued.

PLEASE WRITE, and send new subscribers if possible.

IS YOUR TIME OUT IN JULY? Please renew promptly if so. Can you send us one or more new subscriptions with your renewal? There is nothing like trying.

"If at first you don't succeed, try again." New subscriptions will be very refreshing during the coming hot weather.

Our Quarterly "Cynosure" Report.

This report of our subscription list is especially designed for our working friends to enable them to work more intelligently and, we trust, with more zeal for the increased circulation of the Cynosure. We expect to issue it next week. Please do as much for the paper as possible before the first of July so that this report may be as encouraging as possible. Every little helps. If all help what they can much will be done.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

C&N-W LINES

This great corporation now owns and operates over two thousand miles of road. With one branch it reaches Racine, Kenosha, Milwaukee, and the country north thereof; with another line it pushes through Janesville, Watertown, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Escanaba, to Negaunee and Marquette; with another line it passes through Madison, Elroy, and for St. Paul and Minneapolis; branching westward from Elroy, it runs to and through Winona, Owatonna, St. Peter, Mankato, New Ulm, and stops not until Lake Kampeska, Dakota, is reached; another line starts from Chicago, and runs through Elgin and Rockford, to Freeport, and, via the Illinois Central, reaches Warren, Galena and Dubuque, and the country beyond. Still another line runs almost due westward from Chicago, and passes through Dixon, Sterling, Fulton, Clinton (Iowa), Cedar Rapids, Marshaltown, Grand Junction, Missouri Valley Junction, to Council Bluffs and Omaha. This last-named is the "GREAT TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE," and the pioneer overland line for NEBRASKA, COLORADO, UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA.

CALIFORNIA and the PACIFIC COAST.

It runs through the Garden of Illinois and Iowa, and is the best, safest, shortest and quickest route for OMAHA, LINCOLN, and other points in NEBRASKA; and for CHEYENNE, DENVER, SALT LAKE CITY, VIRGINIA CITY, CARSON, SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, and all other points west of the Missouri River.

If you want to go to Milwaukee, Manitowoe, Sheboygan, De Pere, Ripon, Baraboo, Eau Claire, Hudson, Stillwater, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Breckenridge, Morehead, Fort Garry, Winona, Plattville, Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Sioux City, Yankton, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, or a hundred other northren, north-western or western points, this line is the one you should take. The track is of the best steel rail, and all the appointments are first-class in every respect. The trains are made up of elegant new Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Coaches, luxurious Day Coaches, and pleasant lounging and smoking-cars. The cars are all equipped with the celebrated Miller Safety Platform, and patent Buffers and Couplings, Westinghouse Safety Air Brakes, and every other appliance that has been devised for the safety of passenger trains. All trains are run by telegraph. In a word, this GREAT LINE has the best and smoothest track, and the most elegant and comfortable equipment of any road in the West, and has no competitor in the country. It is eminently the favorite route with Chicagoans traveling west, north, or northwest, and is acknowledged by the traveling public to be the popular line for all points in Northren Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Dakota, Western Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California and the Pacific Slope.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway leave Chicago as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California,

Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, Four through trains daily, Pullman cars on night trains.

For Winona and points in Minnesota, One through train daily.

For Dubuque, via Freeport, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Dubuque and La Crosse, via Clinton, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Sioux City and Yankton, Two trains daily. Pullman Cars to Missouri Valley Junction.

For Lake Geneva, Four trains daily.

For Rockford, Sterling, Kenosha, Janesville, and other points, you can have from two to ten trains daily.

Topics of the Time.

President MacMahon of France, recently reviewed on the Sabbath day a body of thirty thousand troops near Paris, and three hundred thousand people from the dissolute city added their presence to the desecration of the Lord's day. No wonder France has no Sabbath and no homes and that the hand of the sans culotte is at the throat of society in the capital. Much as we may deplore these things in the chief of a foreign nation, however, President Grant eas but little, and, but for popular sentiment, would have no more regard for the sacred institutions of this country. He apparently makes no conscience of traveling on the Sabbath.

With vast tracts of their State devasted a second time in twelve months by the grasshoppers and a prospect of butlittle if any more than half a crop, the managers of the Kansas Pacific Railway lately sent to the newspapers of Kansas a confidential circular requesting their influence to suppress the discouraging news of the scourge, to send in reports of any remarkable crops and to fill their papers with descriptions of the prosperity of their neighborhoods. The railroad managers would take care that these flattering reports should have wide circulation and thus the lost credit of the region west of the Missiouri river could be soon restored. Many of the Kansas journals, holding their their honor at a low ,rate fell into the trap, but two or three exposed the maneuver to the public. Of course they are half buried with abuse, but that is not so bad as the pest that has devoured their crops. The locust swarm has now however passed northward from Kansas and there is some hope for late crops.

To ignore the advances of Romanism against American principles, especially the public school system may have an appearance of independent smartness, but is more the result of shallowness in morals. Willing slaves are the most degraded; and whatever Rome accomglishes, it is by the support of lukewarm patriots and religionists who, like the Pharisees of Christ's day, being blinded, profess they see clearly. Let such study the tactics of the priest. In Macon, Georgia, is an instance. Says a correspondent of the St. Louis Advocate: "Scarcely had the excitement of the Civil Rights Bill subsided, when the Board was called upon to tackle a more formidable foe in the shape of the Catholic question. Thoughtlessly they suffered themselves to be taken captive at the very onset. The Catholics demanded of the Board that they should employ two of the "Sisters" in the public schools. To this they yielded. One season passed. They demanded control of that particular school in which they taught. This was granted. Then the decree was issued to the faithful to withdraw all the children of Catholic parentage from the various public schools in the city and send them to the one presided over by the "Sisters," thus interfering with the prerogative of the Superintendent in assigning pupils where in his judgment they ought to be placed. Now the thing is accomplished, and the city of Macon has a Catholic school in all of its appoinments, supported by public taxation." In Rochester, N. Y., the home of Bishop McQuaid, the Romish prelate who headed the attack on the public schools of Ohio last winter, the Board of Education has lately ordered the discontinuance of religious exercises in the public schools, in response to the demands of infidels and papists.

The changed front of the State elections last fall was made by political jugglery to shine benignly on the Democratic party, although the moral element of the voting classes was little enough influenced by the direct arguments of that party before election. Flushed with that success its leaders now look to a hopeful union of all discontented spirits under their banner, and are using the grange for this purpose. The independent movement of last fall was a general protest of the people against corruption, and by no means the endorsement of a party so steeped in iniquity as the history of the Democratic party shows it to be. That protest was largely sustained by the farmers' movement, not limited to the grange which had no leaders to speak of but the low spirits lurking in its pagan ceremonies, but the comprehensive State and National bodies which were untrammeled by false worships, grips, and petty secrets. The Democratic leaders think, however, to bring it into their net by such flattery as this put forth in the St. Louis Times:

"Grangerism and Democracy are natural allies. Affected by the same usurpation, robbed by the same rings, preyed upon by the same monopolies, having in common the same feeling of self preservation, if they do not unite and fight the same fight together, it will not be because Democracy is in the wrong or unwilling to do its share of the very hard work ahead of all."

We believe they are mistaking the situation, and their hope to secure the independent voters by pocketing the grange is a false one; they will find the two things are not tied in the same bundle. The sensible Western farmers are repudiating the mummery of the grange, which a slight acquantance proves a deception, and the party which draws them by that bond will find that towing a full freighted ship with a rotten rope is not a auccess.

One of the Grave Inconsistencies.

BY REV. J. K. ALWOOD.

One of the grave and discouraging inconsistencies of the present age is the union of anti-secret Christians with secretist churches.

It is undeniable that there is now no neutral ground for any organization with respect to secretism. The votaries of the secret empire have become so impudent, and so determined on universal sway, that no organization and scarcely an individual can escape their efforts to control both church and state. The only alternative for all men and all organizations in this country is to resist or be ruled; and generally secretism rules in some sense and to some extent even where men resist like true heroic Christians. Every church in this so-called free and happy land is either run by secretism or is resisting vigorously its nefarious intrusions and wily devices.

The churches are divided in this regard. It is folly to deny it. They who ought to be one—of one heart, one mind and one voice—are as a matter of fact divided on a question of the utmost importance to all men, viz.: Shall secretism and Satan ascend the throne of the world and the kingdom of Christ lie bleeding in the dust? or Shall Jesus Christ be crowned Lord of all? This is the all-absorbing issue of the present age. Here the hosts are marshalled; here the lines are drawn.

He who knows it not is too ignorant to serve his day and generation. Some of the churches are submissively carried along by the popular worldly tide. A few of the churches—eight in number in this country—and a few individuals outside of the churches are manfully resisting—against fearful odds, if we leave God out of the reckoning—the sleepless, tireless efforts of the nocternal demon to rule and ruin this fair and once happy land of Columbia, this land made sacred by the blood and graves of our fathers.

Now the fact that is peculiarly painful in connection with the fearful struggle between the kingdom of Christ and the powers of darkness is the support which secretist churches and secretist preachers are receiving from true-hearted anti-secret Christians. To see these good hearts that are yearning for the peace, purity and prosperity of Zion, and weeping almost day and night over the tide of corruption which is streaming forth from countless secret cesspools and rolling like a mighty avalanche over our land and carrying with it so much of the beauty, grace, talent and strength of the rising generation, tamely giving their assent, their influence, their means, their prayers and, worst of all, their children to a church whose power is all enlisted in the interest of secretism, is heart-sickening. The worst feature of the present age is the success of Satan in his efforts to capture the churches in the slimy net of secretism. He has blindfolded them and led them away. But how pitifully incongruous the position of those who are not blind, but with eyes staring wildly on the terrible scene, and with hearts throbbing with anguish, yet, for lack of moral courage,—nothing else—give their means and influence to assist in the general destruction. Why do they not put on a little courage and come out from Babylon? Why do they not pray for courage? How can they pray, "Thy kingdom come" while they are giving their strength to the kingdom of darkness? They pray rightly, and then take a course of action that hinders their own prayers and also the prayers of others whose hearts are bleeding over the evils of the present time. O that they would read and well consider the awful category in which the word of God shows them to be standing: "But the fearful and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, . . . and sorcerers, and idolators and all liars, shall have their portion in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone!" (Rev. 21: 8.) Notice, the "fearful" stand at the head of this ruin-bound company. This is a day when courage is as really prerequisite of a consistent Christian life as it was in the days of the bloody Nero. It requires courage to stand with the humble few against the corruptions of the popular many.

While it is true that there is not a religious newspaper in the land that has had the temerity to come out and proclaim definitely in favor and defense of secretism, it is nevertheless true that there are churches which are run by lodge men. A very large percentage of their ministers are lodge men. And a large percentage of the rest are virtually hoodwinked and cable-towed, so that they can be used to greater advantage for the corrupt church and secretism than even sworn lodge men; because they can more effectually hold in loyalty those charges where anti-secrecy sentiment so extensively prevails, that under the administration of oath-bound lodge men, the people would break the reins. I am surely acquainted with instances of this kind of craftiness of the crafty craft. Among the sons of men there are few more despisable than the jacks who are led by this cable-tow. The small remainder consists of young men who are under a course of training which will make Masons or jacks of them. They will soon learn that they must fight for secretism or leave the ranks and look elsewhere for bread.

Satan well understands the bread-and-butter logic, and the logic of numbers and popularity. And by means of this kind of logic he effectually persuades and rules men whose learning and position enable them to maintain the appearance of looking with disdain on these very sordid motives which are actuating them.

Can it be the duty of any living Christian to lend support to such men? They who do it join hands with the wicked, and aid in their mischief, and share in their guilt. And they will at last be punished with anguish at the sight of failure (comparative) in the good cause, and the triumph of wrong. They will not share in the final shout of victory, when the right triumphs.

Metz, Ind.

An Ignorance not to be Justified.

BY SAMUEL. D. GREENE

To belong to an institution and to be ignorant of its origin, its intentions, and its principles, is criminal. For all rational, intelligent men have an influence on society. That influence should be favorable to the laws of God and man. Now Freemasonry is opposed to both; and with truth it may be asserted and without contradiction that no honest, upright, Christian man, who has been induced by or through any influence to become a Freemason that if he will investigate the subject, search for proof as to the truth of Masonic assertions and Masonic books but will find upon such manifestation that he was as ignorant and blind to the true principles of Freemasonry as the Spaniards were in general to the horrors of the Inquisition, before public opinion and the Reformation caused them to investigate its former barbarities. Or those who bow to the Roman pontiff are ignorant of the true principles of holy religion, who are seldom suffered to read the true translations of the Bible, or enjoy the true teachings of the Gospel.

But under the Masonic salvo and the Entered Apprentice oath they wrap themselves up in their security, and either for fear or false notions, continue under deception. This increases and continues the excitement; which will never stop in this free country until Freemasons cease to be controlled by Masonic oaths to the detriment to their fellow citizens, either willingly or for the neglect of information. Men are beguiled and drawn into the Masonic institution with the reputation of something good. Then sworn to hail, or speak well of Freemasonry and never review or expose its principles. They may withdraw in silence if they will give it a good name, and leave their characters in favor of the institution. But should they suspect its fraud and investigate the principles and expose its wickedness and folly, then the penalty of its obligation is a hindrance to this infraction. Thus they are forbidden and they never will examine it so long as they abide there, though society and even the church should be rent asunder.

Such an institution freemen, under the blessed influence of religion and liberty will never cease to oppose so long as they hate the curse of slavery. The expression, Let it alone and it will die of itself, is too trite, while we have such obstacles in the way. True, it may let alone run its career of destruction, and so may the conflagration that destroys your dwelling, but will you therefore use no means to extinguish it? The safety of our country and her free institutions depends solely upon vigilance and activity by enciting the public mind against anything wrong. The simple acts af murdering Morgan, or the kidnapping of Miller, or the attempt to burn the printing offices are of themselves slight in comparison to the great universe of wrongs; but they were acts against the rights of a citizen, against our laws and constitution, and this, if left unnoticed, is the commencement of revolution, and the result is a loss of our free government. The existence of Freemasonry is not only the cause of the present excitement, but it is a base imposture, false in its pretenses. It is exposed, can be read, and the myrmadons of the order have executed its laws upon a free citizen, thereby proving it to be selfish, anti-Christian and anti-republican. Yet it holds in ignorance of its true principles some of our best citizens in its ranks, who when known cannot make a reasonable apology or excuse for being there. Women are basely insulted by Masonic companions, robbed of their society and confidence, to which they are justly entitled, the consequence of which is discord, jealousies and the ruin of families.

I shall appeal to the women for redress They are the ornament of the domestic circle, the pride of man, the nurses as well as the instructors of our earliest existence. Possessing an excellency of character, distinguished by a generous share of intellectual powers of mind by ardent attachment, and by their constitutional temperament more tender and delicate, they are entitled to be treated with respect, and are emphatically the companion of man in every proper and important station of his life. They were earliest at the tomb of their Saviour, and objects of his special solicitude at the time of his crucifixion. And as members of his visible church were co-workers with the Apostles in their ardent labors in the early spread of the Gospel. And who can rightly appreciate the vast importance and extent of female influence in the culture of the young minds, as well as the advancement of every moral and benevolent plan. No moral or religious institution founded on the true evangelical doctrines of the Bible have ever excluded the women from a participation. But when the Masonic eulogist James W. Thompson declares that he rests the claim of Freemasonry to public tolerance and favor mainly on the argument that it is a moral and religious institution, and then hear him in the Master's degree swear that he will not make an old man in dotage, a young man in nonage, an atheist, deist, an irreligious libertine, a woman or a fool a Mason, we cannot but lament at the hypocrisy of the man and be surprised at the insult of Masonic comparison.

Speaker Blaine on Colleges.

Speaker Blaine gave his views on colleges in a little speech at the commencement of Colby (Me.) University, last year. He said that colleges are pretty much given to boobies and rich men's sons. At Harvard or Yale a student's annual expenses are $1,000 or $1,200. At the college in Pennsylvania, where the speaker graduated, he paid less than $800 for his four years' course. Henry Winter Davis, the most accomplished parliamentary orator of the century, paid less than $83 per year during his course in a Western college. Mr. Blaine believed in fitting schools as most valuable to the college from the gregarious tendency of classes. He wanted to send his boys here, but they had got into fitting schools whose classes went elsewhere, and he felt constrained to yield to their intense feeling on the subject of going with their classmates. He was glad to see that the students were not dawdling away a large part of their time in solving the problem whether they should row more or less than thirty-eight strokes to the minute.

The grand mistake that young men make, during the first ten years of their business or professional life, is in idly waiting for their channel. They seem to forget, or they do not know, that during those ten years they enjoy the only leisure they will ever have. After this there will be no time for reading, culture and study. If they do not become thoroughly grounded in the principles and practical details of their profession during those years, if they do not store their minds with useful knowledge, if they do not pursue habits of reading and observation and social intercourse which result in culture, the question whether they will ever rise to occupy a place where there is room enough for them will be decided in the negative. The young physicians and young lawyers who sit idly in their offices and smoke and lounge away the time, 'waiting for something to turn up,' are by that course fastening themselves for life to the lower stratum, where their struggle for a bare livelihood is to be perpetual. The first ten years are golden years, that should be filled with systematic reading and observation. Every thing that tends to professional and personal excellence should be an object of daily pursuit. To such men the doors of success open of themselves at last.

MR. WALKER'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

LETTER OF THE COMMITTEE.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., June 9, 1875.

Hon. J. B. Walker, Wheaton, Ill.

DEAR SIR:—It has been made our duty to inform you that the political Convention met here to-day have unanimously selected you as their candidate for President of the United States at the election of 1876. The members of the Convention would be gratified by a letter from you stating your views respecting this action.

Respectfully yours,

B. T. ROBERTS, Chairman.

C. A. BLANCHARD, Secretary.

MR. WALKER'S REPLY.

To Messrs. Roberts and Blanchard:

GENTLEMEN:—If I had been a member of the Convention at Pittsburgh, I am sure some more worthy name than my own would have been placed at the head of our ticket. As it is, my respect for the character and judgment of the gentlemen who composed the convention induces me, with gratitude for the confidence which the nomination implies, to accept the position which you have assigned me.

In doing this I accept the responsibility which it involves, to aid as I have means and opportunity in disseminating the views which we all hope will disclose to the people the un-American, immoral and anti-Christian character of the Masonic institution. I speak of the institution—not of all the men who have been betrayed into its criminal secrets. Managing Masons make it an object, in order to maintain the standing of their institution before the public, to get men of means and good character into the lodges; and when bound by their culpable obligations, many such men, although conscious of their error, are restrained from disclosing to others the deception.

A large proportion of the people have not examined the character of Masonry, and do not know what the ablest and best men of the country have thought on the subject. Washington was led into the lodge when a young man, but withdrew from association with it when he had learned its character. And near the close of his active life, he wrote to a friend, who was an Anti-mason, "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice for thirty years. (Letter in Spark's Life of Washington.) From this early testimony of the first name in our history down to Charles Sumner, recently deceased, our best and most patriotic men have denounced Masonry, and warned the country against its influence. Adams, Madison, Monroe, Wirt, Rush, Chief Justice Marshal, Daniel Webster, Edward Everett, Charles Sumner, William H. Seward, Judge Marcy, and leading Christian men such as Moses Stuart, Charles G. Finney, Bishop Hamline and Nathaniel Colver (the latter three having been initiated into the rites of the lodges) have denounced the institution as undemocratic, anti-social and unchristian. These testimonies of representative men who knew the character of Masonry have not been heard by the masses of the people, and Masons will not permit them to be heard if they can prevent it.

Allow me, gentlemen, to add a word or two in regard to some aspects of this combination of oath-bound men which will influence my mind to do what I can for its suppression.

I believe the oaths taken by Masons are not only contrary to Christ's teaching, which commands that men shall "swear not at all," but they likewise pervert in every case the conscience of the recipients, and through them damage the social and civil interests of the country. This was so apparent to the statesmen and jurist Daniel Webster that he published his opinion that such oaths were subversive of the public good, and should be prohibited by law (see letter to Harmer Denny). Such likewise was the decision of the legislatures of Vermont and Rhode Island, which had the Masonic obligations disclosed under oath of those who had taken the obligations.

We are told by some of the Masons that the phraseology of these oaths have been varied in some cases, and by others that they are not considered obligatory, but imprecatory. If this be true, in the one case they are blasphemous and in the other criminal. To take the name of the Almighty in vain is blasphemy; to swear in his name to perform or conceal criminal acts is a crime. In either case the solemnity of the oath, and the sense of obligation is impaired, and the conscience of the man is corrupted, and this corrupting influence is filling the country with peculators and criminals who perjure themselves and embezzle the funds of corporations and the State and National treasuries. It will be found that a large proportion of the late frauds upon the State and National treasuries, committed during the past and present administrations for thirty years, have been committed by Masons. They learned in the lodges to disregard the righteousness of an oath, or to put a Masonic or reserved construction upon it, and hence they go into public life with perverted minds in regard to rectitude in business; and by perjury and fraud fill the land with political and financial corruption. With the men connected with the recent whisky frauds we have no personal acquaintance; but others, well informed, state what will, no doubt, on examination be found to be true, that they are men whose consciences had been corrupted by secret oaths of one sort or another, or by association with men who had taken such oaths. These oaths have been altered by changing unimportant words that Masons may be able to equivocate by saying—that is not the oath which I took; but still they are such that Moses Stuart said, "recent attention to this institution has filled me with astonishment, and, as to some things contained in it with horror. The trifling with oaths, and with the awful name of the ever blessed God is a feature which I cannot contemplate without the deepest distress."

The influence of these oath-bound men upon the administration of justice from the president to the town officer is constantly operative. Not that the administrators of justice are always Masons, but not aware of the secret machinations of the lodge-men to grant each other assistance, they receive petitions and statements gotten up by Masons, not knowing them to be such, and are in like manner approached by emissaries of the lodge who intercede for Masonic criminals or supplicate for the appointment of Masonic associates.

President Grant has been censured for frequent pardons of criminals tried and convicted on decisive evidence. Some of these have been so distinctly a perversion of justice, that they have surprised his best friends. The explanation of all this, many men know, is to be found in the craft of the lodge. The facts in a recent case explain the others and are somewhat startling. Rev. B. T. Roberts of Rochester, New York, publishes the following statements in regard to the influence of the lodges in rescuing criminals from the penalties of the law, and placing them in positions from which they ought to be excluded. He says in the Pittsburgh Commercial 10th of June:

"None but a civil magistrate should have power to administer oaths, but when those men in a private capacity usurp this authority, it is a serious interference with the administrstion of justice. I will relate an instance: Not long since I discovered that I was losing letters and money from the post-office. I informed the Post-office Department at Washington of the facts of the case and they sent on a detective to work up the affair. He soon detected the thief, in fact caught him in the very act of stealing. The man was tried, convicted and sentenced, not to the penitentiary or to the jail, but to one year in the county workhouse. After several months imprisonment he was pardoned by the President. He now fills a position in the Detroit Custom House; and I understand that before he was convicted of stealing from me he had been found guilty two or three times of petty larceny. He was a Mason and it was through their influence that he was liberated."

A like case, only of a worse character, occurred not long ago in Belvidere in this State, where a man who had betrayed and then aided in causing the death of an orphan girl, was shielded by Masons in county offices, and members of the court and jury; and although the crime was acknowledged, the culprit, by Masonic aid went "unwhipped of justice."

So in Michigan, Vanderpool, whom a jury had unanimously convicted of murder in the first degree was by the influence of Masons operating through the lodges in different parts of the State, freed from the penalty of murder. The principal actor in this case was a Royal Arch Mason, living in a distant county. In his degree murder is not excepted from the list of crimes in which Masons are by oath bound to aid each other. I am aware that in some cases the full form of the oaths are not always administered in some lodges; but Masons are sworn to obey not only what is made known to them when they are initiated, but also what is reserved and may be communicated thereafter.

Some adhering Masons of character and candor when appealed to will not deny this detrimental influence of the institution upon the administration of justice. Mayor Colden of New York, an advanced Mason, in answer to a joint letter from some of his friends, who asked him whether the institution of Masonry corrupted the courts of law, said "Many of the fraternity feel themselves obliged in whatever situation they may be placed to suffer an appeal from a brother Mason to have influence. Offenders have pursuaded themselves that they could claim exemption from punishment as Masons. And even at a bar of a court of justice, a criminal has thought he secured immunity by revealing to the judge, who was about to pronounce his sentence, their Masonic relationship." Mayor Colden had experience in the matter. He had filled the highest offices in the State and in the city. No Masonic denial can avail against his testimony. Yet if he is true, Masons generally are false on this subject.

Now when bad men who desire to defraud the public and escape the penalty, learn of the strength of the lodges, and of their oaths to keep the secrets of criminals, they will, of course, crowd into the lodges in order to gain their influence. And when unprincipled office seekers understand the principles of the lodges, they will, of course, take the obligations. Thus it happens that the lodges are composed in large measure of self-seeking men, while the good men among them demit, or hold merely a nominal relation.

Born of Masonic influence, a horde of secret associations now cover the face of the whole land. Originating with the Masons in Washington City, a portion of the farmers in some of the States are separating from their neighbors and forming secret combinations, the leaders of which will use their subordinates and defraud them of their money. The red communists, the miners, the laborers in factories have now organized into secret combinations; and opposed to these capitalists and employers have organized antagonistic lodges; and the land is thus filled with strife and violence, which recently, in some of our States, could be suppressed only by military power. Men who ought to be friends and co-operate for each other's good, are by secret oaths and combinations, organized as enemies. The cause of the laborer is the one that should secure the sympathy and assistance of good men, and monopolies of capital or by combination should be discouraged. But the secret association can claim no aid from those outside of its organization. And Masonry the mother of secrecy, after engendering these secret combinations, forsakes the victims to their fate. No laboring man can enter the higher lodges of the Masons. Like the pews in the churches of the world, the taxes are so heavy that men of moderate means cannot pay the dues. These upper lodges are the ruling powers which swear to conceal their secrets from the lower lodges, and these lower and poorer men are all subjected to the absolute control of the Grand Lodge.

Another aspect of Masonry which exhibits its injurious effects upon members, and through them upon the country, is seen in the fact that the origin and development of the system from beginning to end is dark with falsehood. There never has been an institution fellowshipped by respectable men that like Masonry lived and moved and had its being in lies. All well-informed Masons know and concede that their institution had its origin in a London tavern, in the reign of Queen Anne, and yet before the public, and the novices that they lead into the Master's lodge, they attribute its origin to the time of Solomon; and publicly by their symbols, and privately by their lodge work they perpetuate what they know to be a falsehood.

They go through the sham of the death, burial and resurrection of Hiram Abiff, in which no respectable man would ever participate if not bound to the false presentment by the degradation of his oath.

They walk in the streets on St. John's day, decorated in paste jewelry, and assuming, preposterous titles, of which an Indian might be ashamed. They do this knowing that their assumption is a libel upon the simplicity of the Gospel. That John the Baptist was beheaded by a man, who, like the Masons, had taken an oath not knowing what would be the consequence, and that the Evangelist repeats the injunction of Jesus that men shall "swear not at all."

They profess to be a charitable society while they are the most completely selfish institution of our time. Money is gathered from members of the lodges in the rural districts to buy childish trinkets and to build temples for the higher Masons in the principal cities, some of these edifices costing millions of dollars. They take just the opposite position required by the benevolence of the Gospel. They exclude all women, all poor and disabled persons, "the lame, the halt, and the blind," and admit none but able-bodied men; who can pay their dues to the lodges. Their claim to be a benevolent institution is a deception and a fraud.

They claim to be a moral society and yet swear their members without exception to conceal from every one, even from their own wives, the secrets, of the lodge; and to keep the secrets of their brother Masons in their own breasts, no matter how wicked they may be, murder and treason only excepted. They swear their members to respect the virtue of a brother Mason's wife and daughter, excluding by their oath those women who are not connected with Masons. They filled their lodges during the war with young men by the falsehood that if taken prisoner by the enemy, brother Masons of the South would show them favor; yet Jefferson Davis and the Southern officials, who were almost without exception Masons, starved Masons and Anti-masons together at Richmond and Andersonville without mercy.

When they accept a member they tell him that nothing in the lodge will interfere with his religion or his politics; and then when a professed Christian is initiated he is required by their rules never to pray in the name of Christ; and the professed Christian who kneels with them must not only deny his Lord, but in reading the Bible, in the lessons prescribed by the lodges, every passage in which the name of Christ occurs is omitted, or the Saviour's name dropped out. Thus after promising that they will not interfere with the religion of the candidate, they not only cast out the name of Christ, but mutilate the Bible in order to do so. If there be an anti-Christ in existence the Masonic lodge is one.

But it may be asked have not Masons liberty of conscience to reject Christ personally and in their lodges if they choose to do so? No one denies the liberty te reject or receive Christ, but "to betray the Son of Man with a kiss," to promise no interference with the Christian religion, and then beguile the men that they have blind-folded and sworn to obedience, to keep the Bible in their lodge and carry it in their processions, and then mutilate it in order to cast out the name of Christ, is a species of deception in regard to sacred things that cannot be contemplated by any upright man without asense of condemnation and horror. And yet these anti-Christian assemblages meet in all our villages, ann men meet with them who profess to believe Him who said, "He that denies me on earth him will I deny before my Father and the holy angels."

The frauds in all departments of the government and in all forms of business, are becoming more prevalent and more alarming. That these are attributable, in a large measure, to the fact that the public officers and places of trust and profit are in the hands of forsworn men, we can no more doubt than we can doubt the connection of cause and effect. Men who debase their conscience by practicing falsehoods, and by illegal oaths have fitted themselves to do, and to aid others in doing fraudulent things. The well meant efforts of the government to punish the criminals who have disregarded their oaths and obligations will be unavailing. The same depravity of conscience will show itself under every administration, and in all parties, so long as the sources which corrupt men's consciences, and lead them to keep criminal secrets and connive at criminal practices, are found in almost every village throughout the land. The axe must be laid at the root of the upas—not on the branches. That Masons desire to conspire against the country we do not believe. They are not always aware even of the effect that their institution has upon themselves. As those who manufacture, sell, or use intoxicants, apparently do so without realizing the effect upon themselves and the community, so Masons, sustaining each other in illegal swearing to do immoral things, thereby unwittingly, in some cases, deprave their own conscience, and so far as their influence goes, corrupt public morals. The injury wrought by alcohol and slavery continued many years, almost without notice, before good and patriotic men were aroused to resist the destruction they were working in society and in the state. So it has been with Masonry, and so it is in a measure to the present time.

Now the principles upon which our institutions are founded, and which we must maintain, unless we are recreant to our trust, are Intelligence, Virtue and Independence. The independent voters who have sufficient courage and principle to declare themselves free from the influence of fettered party newspapers, and political demagogues, are the hope of the land. Such men have saved us in the past, and upon such our future prosperity depends. When such men get the balance of power—as in the anti-slavery struggle—self-seeking men will crowd in to carry their banner and adopt right principles from selfish motives.

The present is a period when upright and independent men are called by the providence of God, and their responsibilities to the country, to act promptly and unitedly against every thing that assails republican principles, or corrupts public morals. There are two great secret combinations which threaten the foundation interests of a free state: the sworn secrets of the Jesuits and the confessional, which hold in the bondage of a gross superstition the Catholic voter, and the sworn secrets of the lodges, which fill public offices and commercial places with men who have lost all sense of the righteousness and sacredness of an oath. The one, which like the lodge withholds or perverts the Bible, aims to destroy our common schools, which are the sources of intelligence among the people. The other corrupts the conscience in regard to the sacredness and binding obligation of an oath, which is the seal of integrity among public men. There are unprincipled men in both the old parties who will court any influence that will help their party interests or aid them to power or preferment. This is an impending danger at the present time. Can not we all, who seek to preserve public schools, public morals and public prosperity, unite to oppose unchristian, oath-bound institutions; and whether favoring nominations at this time or not, at least withhold our ballot, at both local and national elections, from every man who is actively associated with Masonry.

The present is a time when men can afford to be independent. No man can lose anything by acting as an independent voter. Neither of the old parties offer any issue that a man of character and conscience is bound to respect. The reform party, composed of temperance men, Anti-masons and conscientious voters of every class, presents an issue which, if carried, or even if so successful as to gain the balance of power, will save the country from the blight of superstition, and the rule of corrupt and corrupting politicians.

This is, with our cause, the day of first things, but the true men are at the beginning and not at the end of a needed reform. We can look with hope to the future. No question introduced by prayer and the Providence of God, is ever settled until it is settled right. One, with God, is a majority.

Something has already been done. Many petitions have been sent to State legislatures, asking that when a Mason is a party to a suit, foresworn fellow Masons shall be stricken from the jury. We hear that some towns in Massachusetts have already dropped the names of Masons from the jury list. Some inquiry has been made, and it has been ascertained, that while there are five men to one in business and upon our farms, as well qualified as Masons, to discharge the duties of county and town offices, yet in some cases five Masons to one hold such offices.

It is evident that active measures for reform are urgently needed. Once before in the history of the country, Anti-masons have united with other conscientious voters and thus succeeded in suppressing the lodges throughout the free States. William Wirt, of revered memory, led the movement on the national ticket. We can do no better than close by commending to the attention of every one a passage from his address of acceptance. He says:—"there is the most demonstrative proof that the persons who had entered into these unhallowed oaths, considered their allegiance to the lodges as of higher obligation than their allegiance to their country. If this be Masonry as according to this uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, as treason against society, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man which ought to be put down."

I am, gentlemen, very respectfully, your fellow-citizen,

JAMES B. WALKER.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Rev. Dr. D. D. Lore, Editor of the Northern Christian Advocate, published at Syracuse, New York, died on Sunday morning, June 20, at his country residence in Owasco, about one mile from Auburn. He was attacked with apoplexy on Thursday, having suffered from over-work for some months.

—Since the 1st of February the Free Methodist church of Summerfield, Ohio, has received over one hundred members, making a total of one hundred and forty. In connection with the church are five classes and four preaching-places, four local preachers, four exhorters, and three Sabbath-schools.

—The London City Mission recently held its fourteenth annual meeting. The report stated that the missionaries of the Society now numbered 437, an increase over the year previous of 19. During the year past 2,607,809 visits had been paid, and 38,647 in-door meeting and Bible classes had been held, at which the aggregate attendance had been 1,926,764 persons. The out-door services had been 5,163 in number, with an attendance of 316,181; 1,625 drunkards have been reclaimed, 4,685 children sent to schools, and 1,689 new communicants had been received. The receipts of the Society amounted to 46,606*l.*

—The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Evangelical Continental Society of England was held in London May 14. During the entire period of its existence the Society has contributed 50,000*l* toward the evangelization of Europe. The expenses for the year were 3,878*l.* The labors of the society were unusually successful during the past year. Its agents distributed a large number of Bibles and books.

—During the recent yearly meeting of the English Society of Friends in London, one of the most striking usages of the Society was abolished, namely, the compulsory support of the poorer members by the society. Practically, the rule has been found to prevent the increase of membership. Mr. John Bright, M. P., took an active part in procuring the change. The statistics of the society in London are as follows: Regular membership, 14,199, against 14,080 last year; attendants on worship, not members, 1,767, an increase of 517.

—The Episcopal Bishop of Nebraska and Dekota has directed prayer to be made in all the churches of his diocese, morning and evening until harvest, for deliverance from the grasshopper plague.

—The gospel meetings held in Memphis, by Messrs. Whittle and Bliss, closed June 13. Mr. Whittle preached his closing discourse to an audience of 5,000 persons. Great good has been accomplished by the meetings. Mr. Whittle left for Little Rock, June 14.

—The interest in the convention that is now being held in Brighton, under the auspices of Mr. and Mrs. Pearsall Smith, is constantly increasing. Mr. Smith is assisted by the Rev. Theodore Monod of Paris; the Rev. E. H. Hopkins of Richmond; Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Mr. Henry Varley, while Mrs. Pearsall Smith always holds two Bible meetings as well as one exclusively reserved for ladies. It is computed that about 7,000 visitors have come to Brighton to attend the convention, including 200 pastors and their wives from the Continent.

—The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church held last month at Coulterville was presided over by Rev. James Kennedy of New York city, Rev. J. R. Thompson of Newburgh, of N. Y., was chosen clerk; Rev. J. W. Sproull of Allegheny, Pa., assistant clerk. The statistical reports showed: 100 ordained ministers, of which 76 have pastoral charge; 3 foreign missionaries; 4 home missionaries; 4 disabled; 2 professors in Theological Seminary; 2 professors in College; remainder without charge; 11 licentiates; 1 minister died during the year; 105 congregations; 9,900 communicants—an increase for the year of 170; 6,856 Sabbath-school scholars—an increase of 1,500; 692 Sabbath-school teachers;—increase, 91; contributions, $219,000—increase $19,000. The Domestic Mission stations occupied are at the West; the Southern mission is located at Selma, Ala., a congregation of 24 members being organized with a pastor; the foreign missions are at Latakia and Suideah in Syria, with three ministers and their families and 3 ladies, missionaries, besides native helpers,—about 70 communicants.

Notices.

—An adjourned meeting of the National Christian Association (incorporate body) will be held in the Cynosure office, Chicago on Wednesday the 7th of July next, at 9; 30 A. M.; for the completion of business left from the annual meeting. The following new members are requested to be present and take part in the proceedings: Rev. A. M. Milligan, of Allegheny City, Rev. W. Bain of Chicago, Rev. J. A. Bingham of Mallet Creek, O., Rev. B. T. Roberts of Rochester, N. Y., Rev. Wm. Leuty of Ligonier, Ind., Isaac Preston of Lockport, Rev. A. D. Freeman of Downers Grove, and I. R. B. Arnold of Sycamore, Ill. H. L. KELLOGG, Sec'y.

—The next quarterly meeting of the North-east Pennsylvania Association will be held on the 18th and 19th of August next in the Presbyterian church, Ararat, Susquehanna Co., Pa. and will commence at 2 o'clock P. M., the 18th. Lectures by able speakers on the evenings of the 18th and 19th at Ararat and on other evenings at points near this place where convenient houses can be found. A young man of promising talents, just entering the field of conflict with the "Mystery of iniquity" is pledged for the occasion. Come and hear him.

Reform News.

—A letter from G. W. Parks of Bucyrus, O., says that Bro. Hinman, Illinois State agent, spoke on the 12th of June at Oceola, Ohio, and on the Monday following at Steven's Schoolhouse in Crawford county.

Pennsylvania News.—The Meeting at Waverly.

On the 17th inst. at 2 P. M. commenced our quarterly meeting in Fell Hall, Waverly, instead of Dalton, the place first agreed on for said meeting; the place being, for reasons deemed to be sufficient, changed. The sessions excepting the last, on Friday evening were thinly attended. On Thursday evening it commenced raining before the meeting, and rained heavily for some hours, for which we all were thankful to Him who sendeth rain in its season. Seldom does the land thirst more for rain than then. Beside this there were prayer-meetings in all of the churches intown, which together with the storm made the congregation small. While we believe the majority of that community are with us, on the main question, human motives, called prudential, kept many away. Moral cowardice is as strong a barrier to the needed reforms as any the foe can summon to his aid. Well did the great Teacher say, "fear not them that kill the body, &c." O how much the church needs fearless men and women in this tremendous conflict with the powers of darkness! Men in whom "perfect love casteth out fear" O God, send us a whole division of such to meet the emergency!

In the providential absence of our President, Elder S. E. Miller, the body unanimously chose to preside in his place, Elder Charles Parker of Abington. A season of prayer and free conference followed, which was marked with a good spirit. The evening was occupied by a short and sound lecture, bearing mainly on Odd-fellowship, by Rev. James W. Raynor. He had not the inspiration arising from a large audience, as we have seen, but did well notwithstanding.

Met Friday morning, June 18th, at 9. 30 A. M., for prayer—commenced business at 10. As we have not the minutes of the proceedings we cannot give the items in their order. We squared ourselves as a body for political action next fall, and appointed a committee to correspond with representative men of our views through our State, regarding the electoral ticket and our State officers; and also to consult with our leading anti-secret men of this State about the time and place of our State annual meeting the coming fall. After some other business done we adjourned to 2 P. M., at which time we met and heard our esteemed brother McDougal "preach salvation," in which he gave lodge salvation several happy hits. He remarked that he did not expect that his "little speech" would get into the papers, but had we the ability to transcribe its power and spirit we would disappoint him, if we could get it printed. We felt to thank God for the good effect on us all. A spirited conference followed in which many men and women joined. God owned the meeting.

Met again at 8 in the evening to find a full house, good order and attention. Your correspondent in this meeting took up and answered some of the most prominent objections of Masons and their tools to our work. So ended this quarterly meeting.

NATHAN CALLENDER.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—At our recent meeting of N. E. Pa. Association, the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That we request Rev. A. L. Post to prepare an account of the character and doings of the National Meeting at Pittsburgh for local publication.

Resolved, That we appoint a committee of correspondence to confer with the friends of Anti-secret reform throughout the State with reference to preparing an electoral ticket, and to selecting candidates for Governor, State, Treasurer, &c., and that this same committee make inquiry by correspondence as to the best time and place for the next meeting of the State Association.

The following are the Committee, Rev. N. Callender, Green Grove, Luzerne Co., Pa., Rev. M. D. McDougall, Wilkesbarre, Luzerne Co., Pa., Rev. A. L. Post, Montrose, Luzerne Co., Pa., Rev. J. W. Raynor, Union Dale, Luzerne Co., Pa.

And now brethren of Pennsylvania, co-workers for truth and liberty, please send without delay your responses and suggestions to either of the above committee by letter or through the Cynosure. Let us get at once to work, mass our forces, and move on the works of darkness with all the earnestness and power we can use as Christian citizens and seek to overthrow lodge domination, and with spiritual weapons give a pure Gospel and Christian equality and justice to all in our commonwealth. Our work is vastly important. The time is auspicious. Let unfurl the banner of right and sustain our cause and its candidates. J. W. RAYNOR.

From the Indiana Agent—Homeward Bound from Pittsburgh.

On board the "Lizzie Cassel," near Zanesville, Ohio, June 16, '75.

Leaving Pittsburgh on the morning of the 11th inst., I arrived at Salineville, Jefferson Co., Ohio, at noon, where I found a team in readiness to convey me to Mooresville some nine miles west. I stopped for supper with Robert George, at the latter place, who accompanied me to the residence of his pastor, Rev. H. Y. Lieper, (U. P.) where I remained till seven o'clock, when we repaired to the U. P. chapel, and I spoke to a very fair audience, the larger part of which appeared to appreciate my remarks. At the close of the discourse Mr. Lieper announced further arrangements, and I accompanied him to his home. On the next evening I spoke to rather a small audience in the Methodist Episcopal church at Circle Green, some three miles west of Mooresville, and rode home with Bro. Lieper at the close.

The hills of this region are worthy of celebration in song. Such a promiscuous tumbling together of semi-mountains, with only here and there a small valley interwinding itself among them, everywhere attracts the eye, hat the lover of natural scenery is lost in admiration. Many of the views I had here, are indelibly impressed upon my mind, and are as near a realization of my mind's picture of "the hill country of Judea" as I ever expect to see. In many places the roads wind around and along the sides of these tall hills, gradually descending to the valleys, till in passing from the summit of a hill to its base you are frequently obliged to drive a full mile. In many places the roads are so narrow that two teams cannot pass each other, and on one hand is the abruptly rising hill, and on the other an abrupt, and dangerous looking descent to the creek below. Over such roads Bro. Lieper drove with as much confidence and speed as I would on a "Hoosier" level.

On Sabbath morning I accompanied the good brother to an appointment some eight miles northeast, where at eleven I preached to an attentive audience, of (mainly) Scotch United Presbyterians, and notwithstanding the degree of heterodoxy attributed to Methodists for their Armienianism, I was by a leading brother and elder pronounced "orthodox." Returning in the evening I preached in the Methodist church at Mooresville, to a large audience, went home with Robert George, and in the morning he took me in his buggy to the railroad.

Brother George is an old man, one of the "Old Abolitionists," and a lifelong opposer of Masonry. As an instance of his loyalty to his country and his opposition to the lodge, I was told the following: Soon after the close of "the war for the Union," a large monument was erected by the people of the county, in honor to their fallen heroes, but its "corner stone," must necessarily be laid by the Masons. Many of the people were disgusted by this sectarian interference of an "order," in a matter so peculiarly belonging to the people, and the whole people. No one felt the insult more sensibly than Robert George, and to give expression to his offended sense of justice, he erected, in the most beautiful situation, at his own expense, a splendid monument, sacred to the memory of the patriots of his own township whose lives were given to their country in its hour of peril. This monument bears the name of each soldier thus sacrificed, with his regiment, company, and the cause and place of his death. Thus in his regard for true American principles he has, in the hearts of the people, erected to himself a monument more enduring than marble.

He remembers accurately many features of the Morgan tragedy, and its results. I trust that in his devotion to the cause of Christ and American liberty, he will be among the large hearted contributors to our "National Publishing House fund,"—which is to stand while the sycles of time are passing, not alone as a monument to truth and that righteousness which exalteth a nation, but as a mighty engine to batter down the walls of sin.

Taking the train at 12 o'clock on Monday, after two changes I arrived at Ellis's Station on Tuesday at 4 P. M., where I was met by Rev. A. McFarland and Mr. J. Beattie, both of the Reformed Presbyterian church, (Covenanters). I spoke twice in this neighborhood; once in the Presbyterian church, and once in a school-house. There is manifestly great apathy, and religious deadness here; Brother Beattie being the only genuine reformer I found in the place. From here I went home with Brother McFarland who lives on a fine farm six miles west of Zanesville, the county seat of Muskingum county.

After speaking one evening in Uniontown, and one in Newtonville Brother M——. brought me to Zanesville where I took this boat for Belpre on the Ohio river, where I speak next.

Sincerely, JOHN T. KIGGINS.

—The Wesleyans of England have had the unusual increase of over 6,000 persons in membership during the past year.

Bro. Hinman at Elida, Ohio.

Editor of the Cynosure:

You are already informed that Bro. H. H. Hinman stopped and lectured for us on his way to Pittsburgh. The first lecture was on the evils of secretism and the religion of Freemasonry. In the second he showed us how a man is made a Mason, and made some remarks on the grange.

The house was well filled the first evening, and would have been filled on the second, but for a storm of wind and rain. The lectures were well received by a large majority of our people and highly appreciated. The Christian Masons (pardon the word) tried to deny the truth of the lectures. But when they were referred to the fact, that the lecturer did not read from Anti-masonic books to prove that Masonry was a religion—"a religion in which all men agree," which is not the Christian religion, therefore a false one,—but from their own standard works, and were invited to repudiate their own authors, or admit the truth of the lecture, they immediately seized their jewel and became woefully silent.

But the grangers, they are the worst children that Freemasonry and Oddfellowship ever brought forth in this part of the country. One "Isaiah," a grange lecturer, has been in great agony for the past few weeks. He has, at last, with or without help, brought forth an article that must be the production of a depraved heart and mind. He says that Bro. Hinman contradctied himself, and resorted to the low calling of telling things that were as false as Satan himself, and closes up his abuse by calling the lecturer a traveling humbug.

Now, Mr. Editor, why did not Mr. Isaiah Imler reply to Bro. Hinman at the close of the lectures? He was present, and an opportunity was given for him or any one to speak. Only one answer can be given to this question: He is a coward! He could not face the lecturer and call him a liar and a traveling humbug; but he can thrust his dirty stuff through the dirtiest paper in all this land at the lecturer when he is gone. This is granger-like.

There were only fifteen personal pronouns first person singular number, in his article of a little over a half a column of the Democrat; but this number is sufficient to show the self-conceit, egotism and vanity of the writer. Let us substitute the noun Isaiah for the pronoun I as it stands in his article, and give you a few of his closing lines: He said, "Some may deny what Isaiah has said, but Isaiah wants it distinctly understood that Isaiah can prove all the statements that Isaiah has made, and am willing to do so if necessary. Fearing that Isaiah may be too presumptuous Isaiah will close." ISAIAH. Here we see Isaiah in all his vanity. But Bro. Hinman and the cause he represents have nothing to fear from the attacks of such vain persons. The Lord is with him, and the larger and better portion of the members of this community sympathize with him, and pray that he and others may succeed in this great work of reform.

Isaiah said that I "plead poverty;" therefore Bro. Cook will find the money to send him the Cynosure that he may have light on dark questions.

Respectfully, H. S. Thomas.

From Ohio—Preparing for the State Convention.

Dayton, O., June 22, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I have been lecturing some in Shelby, Darke and Montgomery counties, Ohio, and will go soon, God willing, to Adams county. The work is going forward encouragingly. The grangers are the poorest hands to endure lectures of any of the crafts. They do not know how to keep silent under fire, and tell us when anything is incorrectly stated, leaving the impression that all besides is true. The book revealing the grange is a valuable aquisition. There is one matter however incorrectly stated on page 65; it says that the annual pass-word for 1875 is "Farming," it elsewhere states correctly that this was the word for 1874. The annual pass-word for 1875 is "Forgive." I suppose they sinned so much last year that it becomes them to forgive this year. You will see, too, that this word has the same number of letters as the one of the previous year.

We are preparing for a good convention in Ohio in August. It will be held at Xenia, sixteen miles east of Dayton. Dr. Davis of Union Biblical Seminary has consented to deliver an address, and lawyer Brown of Hamilton has given some hope that he will address the convention. A company has been formed in Dayton to publish or rather republish John Quincy Adam's letters on Masonry with an introduction by Charles Francis Adams. It is to be sterectyped and will be on the market by the 15th of August. So the work is prospering and may the Lord continue to prosper it. Wm. Dillon.

From the Wisconsin Work.

Oskosh, Wis., June 21, '75.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

After the lectures at Waupun, arrangements were made immediately for work about seven miles from there in the Ladoga M. E. church, the brethren kindly giving their consent. Two lectures were given to large audiences, and two more failed in consequence of the rain, and it was thought best not to try again at that time. Then started for Oskosh, and north to Vineland and made arrangements for work in the M. E. church in Clemensville, all the trustees consenting with apparent cheerfulness, and the pastor, Rev. Mr. Aplin, favorable. This was on Saturday and notice was to be given out on Sunday.

I was on hand Monday evening, but learned to my surprise that they had basely reconsidered, and refused to let the house be used for that purpose, but gave me no notice of the change. I drove three or four miles to an old friend of twenty-six or seven years ago, and put up for the night, and the next day, June 15th, made arrangements for and lectured in the Vosburg schoolhouse three evenings to fair congregations, and henceforth there will be found some earnest workers there. In thta section I come across Elder Mitchell, a Free-will Baptist minister, and found him to be an excellent apologist for secret societies, he having been only a Good Templar. Another evidence of the demoralizing power of this miserable institution.

I went north into the township of Clayton, and gave two lectures in the Roblee school-house on the evenings of 19th and 20th with good effect, and and had a pleasant home with Wm. A. Austin; though he was a little fearful about the undertaking, his fears all forsook him. An old gentleman by the name of Kellogg said he supposed the things could be proved to be true that had been given in the lecture, and that he knew of a case within the past five years where a woman was in a barn looking for eggs, and two men came in, but did not see her, and she kept quiet. They were Masons, and they were planning to put another Mason to death, but he of course was notified and made his escape. I learned afterwards from Mr. Austin, that the woman who heard them, was Mr. Kellogg's daughter, and that it was her husband's brother that was to suffer Masonic vengeance.

The grangers seem to be getting badly demoralized in this section. I learn of some that have gone to pieces, and others that are about at their last days. For the war, P. Elzea.

From Wisconsin—Appeal for the Agent.

Menasha, Wis., June 22, 1875.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

I would in this way express my sincere thanks for the benefits afforded me by a very unexpected visit of Philo Elzea, State Lecturer of Wis., and his daughter. It was by some providential means they found me, and glad I was indeed to see some of God's people. He requested me to go with him to the lecture. Accordingly I arranged my affairs and went. I have read a great deal in the Cynosure, but I had never heard a lecture on that subject.

We stopped at Mr. Austin's who very kindly provided for our necessities. The good Lord helped in the opening exercises, and at the time the lecture began a crowded house full was gathered, some even standing outside listening through the window.

Bro. Elzea brought forth arguments which cannot be intelligently confuted. They listened very attentively for three hours or over. A collection of $3.27 was taken up, after which many books were sold in a few minutes.

Blessed be the name of the Lord for sending Bro. Elzea this way. "His right hand hath gotten him the victory." A strong impression, no doubt for good, is left in that neighborhood. It has greatly strengthened me. Bro. Elzea has no doubt counted the cost and is prepared to meet the stern realities of life. He is engaged in a noble cause, but he needs assistance. Oh, if the people of Wisconsin were but aroused to their duty and would willingly extend the helping hand, how much more these men might do! If Bro. Elzea had more means, he wonld not be under the necessity of leaving so quickly, and we should see results more glorious. But may God bless them as they humbly bow at the mercy seat, and may he who has said, "I am with you, "protect them through the perilous voyage of life, is my earnest prayer.

Yours for truth, Fred W. Arndt.

A Masonic Lecture.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

I noticed in a recent copy of the Cynosure an account of a lecture in favor of Masonry by Rev. Edgar F. Clark, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, of Princeton, Massachusetts.

In this lecture I observed the following statements, viz., that it is probable that Masonry became a secret institution about the year 906, and that the title of "Freemasonry" was given to a handicraft about the eighth century.

If Mr. Clark should see this article, I would respectfully request of him his authorities for these statements. I would be greatly obliged to him for the name of any respectable historian, or writer of any kind, who has ever mentioned the name of Freemasonry, with its modern significance or any other significance, prior to the establishment of the organization now known as Freemasonry, in a London grogshop in 1717.

Mr. Clark says in his lecture that Masonry "fosters a special regard and kindness towards members of the order, just as church members covenant to protect and aid each other." I would ask Mr. Clark that if church members do show a special regard for each other, would it warrant any other organization, a band of robbers or pirates, for instance, in doing the same thing? The language of the Scriptures is, "do good to all men, and especially to those who are of the household of faith." But the household of faith is not Masonry, filibusterism, Mormonism, Mohammedanism, or any other moral organization outside of the church. According to Masonic writers pirates may be Masons; and would the Rev. Mr. Clark "foster a special regard and kindness" towards pirates rather than towards Christians? I think he does when he argues in favor of Masonry.

I have one more question to ask Mr. Clark. I had supposed that Methodism, the religion which he professes to teach, was founded by a man of ardent piety who found that even the forms and ceremonies of the Episcopal church were clogs and hindrances in the way of religious services, zeal, and devotion; and he, Mr. Wesley, therefore set them aside for a more earnest, direct, inartificial mode of expression of religious emotion and fervor. This religion was peculiarly one of faith, not of good works and ceremonies, and in its establishment he resolved, as a covenant with himself, that he would "use absolute openness and unreserve towards all men whom he should converse with."

Now is Mr. Clark a consistent follower of Mr. Wesley who was never a Mason, by lauding Masonry which, far inferior to the Episcopal church, is nothing but an unopen, secret, and reserved system of empty forms and ceremonies, based on absolute imposition and falsehood? Mr. Clark himself points out some of these impositions and falsehoods; but why has he remained a silent supporter and abettor of them until Anti-masonry has first pointed them out? Perhaps, like many others, he wished to have the credit of being a good man—a very good man, while upholding a very bad institution, one that "fosters a special regard" for pirates.

In conclusion, I may state, that now that Mr. Clark has begun to inquire into the character of the institution, into which he has doubtless been led by the loose, unthinking fashion of the times, he will find I think, with a learned writer, that "all education which inculcates Christian opinions with pagan tastes, awakens conscience but to tamper with it," and that, as a consistent man, he must abandon either his position as Methodist preacher, or his membership in the lodge, for the two must be utterly irreconcilable in the minds of all true, sincere, intelligent Christians. ANTI-MASON.

A Reformed Community.

A correspondent of the Free Methodist tells of the purifying work of divine grace in Summerfield, Ohio, which as our readers know, is a strong center in the anti-lodge reform:

Our greatest enemy does not consist in secrecy. The craft has received a wound that will take some time to heal. The time was when Masonic ministers and members of the church said to the Anti's, "You don't know anything about Masonry; your books and papers are a mess of lies," and could clap their hands and rejoice, but "their laughter is turned to mourning" and rage, since honest sinners have left the lodge and testified against them, and Charles Blanchard, John Levington, and D. P. Rathbun have lectured in these parts; since they have gone through the heathen mummery of send ing professed infidels to heaven, with these Anti's gazing at them; and last, but not least, while they have Dr. Taylor to taunt, ridicule and expose the ridiculous among them. They have need of defensive armor, and have very little time to use the sword, only to keep cowans off. Neither is the M. E. church our greatest obstacle. Thanks be to God that he has given grace to men of other days to preach Methodist doctrine through this region of country; men that feared God more than starvation circuits. These are Methodist grounds. There are fathers and mothers among these hills that have not forgotten the old sound, and like Napoleon's war-horses wheel into line when they hear the old familiar strains. Neither is dress the ruling passion here. Of course there are some foolish ones among us who reach the pinnacle of their ambition when some hair-brained creature says, "How pretty you look!" But tobacco—the enemy of righteousness—they chew it; they smoke it; they snuff it! Oh, the filthy stuff! We don't mean they snuff it up their noses,—would that it were no worse; but the women ("tell it not in Gath,") the women chew the detestable, dirty, nasty, filthy, obnoxious stuff—that refuse of tobacco called snuff. Yes, the women chew it, and look like ghosts; and the men raise tobacco and chew it, and the little boys chew it; and the men smoke it, and the women smoke it, and the children smoke it,—and they must have tobacco whether they have anything else or not. The commissioners not long since called on a destitute family to give alms; they found them with hardly rags enough to cover their nakedness, shivering around the fire, with holes in the walls large enough for the cat to crawl through, and nothing to eat. They asked their chief want, and they immediately answered, "Tobacco!"

But the Lord is on our side. The wind blew down Bro. Round's tobacco warehouse, the frost killed the most of the plants, and many are getting grace and determination, (professors and non professors,) to quit the filthy stuff; and if Free Methodism had done no other good than what she has done in that line, we think she would receive the plaudit, "well done."

OUR MAIL.

E. D. Olmstead, Manchester, Iowa, writes:

"We have a new order here, new to me at least, called, A. O. U. W. I want you or some one to give some light on the subject, what they started from and what is their object. They promise great things and have taken members from three churches."

This is the "Ancient Order of United Workmen." Their statement of principles we have never seen.

Allan Simpson, Lapier, Mich., writes:

"There is a blue lodge here and a chapter, the grangers also have a lodge, and the churches are all in harmony with them. I like your paper very much. Your weapons are not carnal but are mighty through God to the pulling down of the stronghold of the wicked."

Daniel B. Stump, Rising Sun, Ohio writes:

"I have persuaded a good many not to join the grangers. I am working against grangers and all secresy, so much so that I am threatened for so doing. I only wish I could prevent every man now outside of these lodges, from joining them, and they would soon go down."

Joel Williams, Majority Point, Ill., writes:

I have always been in hearty sympathy with the Cynosure, from the time I saw the first number. I believe it is the best paper published. I am resolved to be a life-subscriber. I believe the present anti secresy movement is of God, and must and will prosper, though men and devils oppose. May the Lord give strength and courage and wisdom to every friend of the good cause."

John Shuh, Larwill, Ind., writes; Brother Hinman lectured in South Whitley, on the 16th and 17th inst., and has given good satisfaction to all that are governed by the spirit of Christ. It is a great consolation to me that Jesus has said, "Blessed are the poor in spirit for their's is the kingdom of Heaven." It seems to me that the wise of this world are more deceived than those that are humble. Solomon was the wisest man in his age of the world. He knew the will of the Lord, and yet he was overcome by the spirit of idolatry, deceived by heathen women after he had built the great temple of God, and I cannot find that he ever repented of it, and the curse of God caused the separation of his kingdom. My impression is, it is better to be humble, to know Jesus and how to love him because he first loved us; to seek counsel of him; to be made free indeed in Christ, and continue so while time lasts with us. To be soldiers of the cross we need no costly array, or arms of the carnal nature; the Bible is the best and cheapest weapon for our defense; with it we do not commit murder but rather convert men when dead in trespasses and sin to a spiritual life in Christ.

Isaac Stearns, Mansfield, Mass., writes:

"I think that Massachusetts is the most hardened State in the Union in regard to secret societies. The Masons in this town seem to have done all they can to prevent the reading of anything published giving light upon their lying and unholy institution."

Aaron Stedman, Toberg, N. Y., writes:

"There are a great many around here that will talk against Masonry but as to acting against it, that's another thing. I was confined to the house all winter, just able to walk about, but keep the papers, etc. going, and shall fight it out on this line."

A. Musselman, Sacramento, Cal., writes:

"This is a hard place to work in. The power and influence of darkness is great, and the people are afraid to read the books opposed to it. There is a committee chosen to call an Anti-masonic convention. We have subscription papers in circulation to raise money to pay a lecturer. I will head mine with twenty dollars. Pray for us in California.

An African King.

Some missionaries who were taken prisoners in Ashantee land in Africa and were taken to the capital Comassie, thus describes the appearance of the King Kari-Kari:

After a procession of dwarfs, buffoons, executioners, etc., the music became wilder and louder, the ivory horns sounded shriller, the screaming and howling surpassed all description. Led by an attendant under a magnificent sunshade of black velvet, edged with gold and kept in constant motion, the royal potentate appeared. Boys with sabers, fans and elephants' tails danced around him like imps of darkness, screaming with all the power of their lungs: "He is coming, he is coming. His Majesty, lord of all earth approaches." The boys then retired that the King might be able to look well at us and enjoy the intensity of his happiness. Golden sandles adorned his feet; a richly ornamented turban was on his head; his dress was of yellow silk damask; his hands and feet glittered with gold bracelets and spangles. Half a dozen pages held him by the arms, back and legs, like a little child crying continually: "Look before thee, O Lion! Take care—the ground is not even here."

The Sabbath School.

Lesson xxviii.—July 11, 1875.—Following the Lamb.

SCRIPTURE.—John : 35-46.

35 Again the next dya after, John stood, and two of his disciples;

36 And looking upon Jesus as he walked, he saith, Behold the Lamb of God!

37 And the two disciples heard him speak, and they followed Jesus.

38 Then Jesus turned, and saw them following, and said unto them, What seek ye? They said unto him, Rabbi, (which is to say, being interpreted, Master,) where dwellest thou?

39 He said unto them, Come and see. They came and saw where he dwelt, and abode with him that day; for it was about the tenth hour.

40 One of the two which heard John speak, and followed him, was Andrew, Simon Peter's brother.

41 He first findeth his own brother Simon, and saith unto him, We have found the Messias, which is, being interpreted, the Christ.

42 And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him, he said, Thou art Simon, the son of Jona: thou shalt be called Cephas, which is by interpretation, A stone.

43 The day following Jesus would go forth unto Galilee, and findeth Philip and saith unto him, Follow me.

44 Now Philp was of Bethsaida, the city of Andrew and Peter.

45 Philip findeth Nathaniel, and saith unto him, We have found him, of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph.

46 And Nathaniel said unto him, Can there any good thing come of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." Rev. xiv. 4.

TOPIC.—"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near."—Is. lv. 6.

Points for Arrows.

1.—How much meaning there is to us in the phrase "the Lamb of God." When on account of our sins we might have looked for a lion, God sends a Lamb. He came not to destroy us for our sins, but to "take those sins away." Luke ix. 56; John iii. 17; viii. 11; xii. 47; 1 John iii. 5; Rev. v. 6, 9; vii. 9; x. 14.

2.—How quickly the two disciples followed Christ when he was pointed out. "To-day if ye will hear his voice harden not your hearts." Prov. i. 24–28; Is. lv. 6; Luke xiii. 24,25; xix. 42; John xii. 35; Heb. iii. 7,8.

3.—To all honest doubters the invitation is: Come and see. God will be found of those who earnestly seek him. Prov. viii. 17; Is. i. 18; xlii. 26; Matt. vii. 7,8; Jas. i. 5,6.

4.—It is the instinct of every new convert to tell to all his friends "what great things the Lord hath done" for him. It is the way that the Gospel is to be spread. Alas, if we lose the new convert's zeal! Ps. lxvi. 6; Mark v. 19; Acts x. 24; xvi. 31–33; 1 John iv. 21; Matt. xxiv. 12.

5.—To those who put their faith in God there is ample heart-evidence that Christ is divine, for he "hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts crying Abba, Father." Rom. viii. 9, xiv–17; 2 Cor. i. 22; iv. 6; Gal. iv. 3-6; 1 John iv. 13; v. 10.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

CITIZEN'S MOVEMENT AGAINST THE LODGE AT WHEATON.

At a consultation where three of the Wheaton churches were represented, a committee has been appointed to prepare and cause to be circulated two petitions; one requesting the proprietors of Central Block, now going up, not to "finish, furnish or rent" rooms in that building for the purposes of Freemasonry. Another, addressed to the members of the Wheaton Lodge itself, to discontinue and abandon it.

The sooner these issues are made everywhere the better. If the lodges are religions, and yet not Christian religions, as is now generally understood and conceded by those not drawn into and deceived by them; if they are, in short, pagan institutions, the Scriptures assign them the nature and designation of spiritual brothels, leading, as all heathen institutions do, to literal brothels. This tendency is not only seen in the oath of a Master Mason to respect only the chastity of the female relatives of Masons; but in their exclusion of Christ, who is the only author of marriage, and, consequently, the only authority against fornication and adultery. Of course the Wheaton people are but protecting their own firesides and homes in seeking the exclusion of the lodge.

Less than fifty years ago, three States, to wit, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Vermont, passed prohibitory laws against these brothels of the mind; and the free States generally would have done so had not the lodge feigned dead. In our own State of Illinois the Grand Lodge was suspended thirteen years. They have now snaked their way back to popular favor without answering an objection or an argument; but have set themselves up, as brothels always do, silently and by night. Let this Wheaton movement be sustained by the prayers and benedictions of God's people everywhere, for "we wrestle not with flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers," "the rulers of the darkness of this world."

SPECULATIVE FREEMASONRY A MODERN ANTI-CHRIST, by J. L. Barlow, Lecturer for the New York State Christian Association.

This is a lecture delivered by Mr. Barlow at De Ruyter, Madison county, N. Y., and published by request of the hearers by the Wesleyan Methodist Publishing House, Syracuse. It is a clear strong argument, sustained by quotations from Masonic authorities, and sustains the charge fully that the dark lodge is one of the "many anti-Christs" now already in the world. It is a good tract for circulation, and is rendered attractive to common readers by the author's poetry on the covers, which blend humor with instruction. Price ten cents per copy or six dollars per hundred. Send orders to Wesleyan Publishing House, Syracuse, N. Y.

FREEMASONRY AS A RELIGION.—Rev. J. Day Brownlee delivered the above discourse in reply to an oration lauding the lodge by Rev. Dr. Mayer, at the dedication of the new Masonic hall, Wellsville, Ohio. Rev. Mr. Brownlee's discourse is original and keen as a Damascus blade. It was given us by Rev. Mr. Collins of Pittsburgh, United Presbyterian Publishing House, and, though sorely tormented by the smoke and cinders and sharp dust which filled my eyes in the cars from Pittsburgh to Columbus, I read the whole pamphlet through, as every one will do who begins it. There is no advertisement on the fly-leaf, but if any reader of the Cynosure happens in Pittsburgh let him by all means procure the above discourse at the U. P. Bookstore there.

NOTES.

—In the present number will be found a full report of the political mass-meeting at Pittsburgh, a gathering that for unity of sentiment and wise counsels for the future of the nation has been seldom equalled. The greater part of Rev. Woodruff Post's excellent address is also given; the remainder will appear next week with the addresses of Dr. Milligan, Rev. A. Cogswell and others. We hope to conclude the report of the anniversary in next number.

—Considerable interest is drawn out toward the first public expression of a candidate for the highest office in the gift of the American people. That interest will not be disappointed in the able letter of acceptance by Hon. J. B. Walker, published in this number. Its candid, exhaustive review of lodge principles and measures, will every where commend the reform and the nominations to thinking men and patriots.

—Eld. N. Wardner of the Seventh Day Baptist church sailed with his wife for Scotland on June 12th, to engage in missionary labor in the interest of the Seventh-day Sabbath in that and adjacent countries. Bro. Wardner will take to Scotland a warm sympathy for, and considerable information of the anti-lodge reform with which he has been in active sympathy.

—Mr. Ronayne, retired Master of Masons in Keystone Lodge in this city is a subject of much comment in the different Masonic bodies. Corinthian Chapter has discussed his case at length as to what could, should and WOULD be done to stop his exposition of their so-called secrets. The Times, which is managed by a 32-degree Mason, published a spiteful attack upon him lately. Mr. Ronayne expects to spend several weeks at Stevens Point, Wis., this summer, and communities wishing a thorough and entertaining exposition of lodge ceremony will do well to correspond with him.

—The Catholic papers at Rome denounce, in unmeasured terms, the Prince of Wales for accepting the office of Grand Master of the Freemasons of England. The Unita Cattolica says: "English Protestantism and Freemasonry must stand or fall together." This prophecy might prove true if English Protestantism was a part of the dark system for the subjugation of man to the powers of hell. As it is not, the contrary is true and Freemasonry must go down before its truth and power, and the "mother of harlots and abominations" spiritual must fall with it.

—It is currently reported that all the sons of Queen Victoria have followed their elder brother into the lodge, except the Duke of Edinburg, who, with his father-in-law, the Czar of Russia, strongly oppose it. This is too broad a statement for belief without some honest proof, and may be placed alongside the statement, that in taking the chair, the Prince of Wales is following such predecessors as Henry VII., Cardinal Wolsey, and others of like rank. The Interior, which sports this for history should not need to be reminded that when Henry VII. and Wolsey flourished, Freemasonry was unthought of, but by the father of it and of lies.

—The Yale faculty have aimed another blow at the vicious college secret society system by ordering the sophomore societies to cease their operations upon new members until further notice. These fraternities, it will be remembered, are the most extensive and active of the whole brood, and to suppress them shows that college authority is sufficient to crush them entirely if enforced.

Literary and Collegiate.

THE NATIONAL S. S. TEACHER for July is a larger number than usual, and is full of valuable matter for teacher, officer and scholar. The exposition of the lessons is the special feature. Adams, Blackmer and Lyon Pub. Co., Chicago.

THE GALAXY celebrates its twentieth anniversary in a fine, new and attractive dress. It's most interesting and valuable paper at this time is a critical history of the battle of Bunker Hill written by a general in our late war. Other papers are Alexandre Dumas, Can the Voyage to Europe be Shortened, The Napoleonic Legend, closing with a timely review of our hasty and confused American pronunciation. Scribner & Co., New York.

THE SANITARIAN opens with a valuable contribution on the methods of improving the homes of the laboring classes of New York; other papers are on Comparative Longevity, Nutrition of Children, and Biometry. A. N. Bell, New York.

OTTERBEIM UNIVERSITY, Westville, Ohio, Rev. H. A. Thompson, Pres., presents a summary of 201 students of both sexes, 72 in the classical, scientific and ladies' departments. The annual commencement took place May 29—June 3; fall term opens August 11th. An effort is being made to complete a "Centennial" professorship next year.

WESTFIELD COLLEGE, Westfield, Rev. S. B. Allen, Pres. Commencement occurred June 16th. The Board of Trust has elected Miss Eugenia Guitner principal of the Ladies' Department and Prof. Elliot Whipple to the chair of Natural Sciences. The number of students has been 206, with 62 in the regular classical and scientific classes. Fall term opens Aug. 25.

MONMOUTH COLLEGE.—The commencement of exercises of this old and popular Western institution occurred two weeks since and were attended and addressed by Gov. Beveridge and ex-Sen. Colfax. The graduating class numbered 34: whole number of students, 447; fall term begins Sep. 7th.

WHEATON COLLEGE, located twenty-five miles west of Chicago, held its fifteenth commencement this week, beginning with the Baccalaureute sermon on Sabbath last by Pres. Blanchard and an able address before the Society of Inquiry in the evening by Rev. Geo. Huntingdon of Oak Park, Ill. The faculty of instruction number fifteen and 245 students have been in attendance the past year, 40 in the college department alone.

The Late National Convention.

AS VIEWED BY A CO-REFORMER.

Rev. T. P. Stevenson of the Christian Statesman was present at the Pittsburgh convention and thus gives his view of its members and spirit:

The "National Christian Association," opposed to secret societies, held its eighth annual Convention in Pittsburgh, on the 8th, 9th, and 10th inst. It was our privilege to be present during a part of the proceedings, and to observe closely the character and spirit of the men who are engaged in forming and organizing a public sentiment against the many secret associations which have of late gained so rapidly in numbers and influence in our country. The impression which must have been made on the mind of every unbiased observer was, that the men there assembled were devoted servants of Christ and deeply in earnest in this cause. The conference held in the afternoon preceding the organization of the Convention, and the prayer-meeting each morning, were admirable devotional meetings. No flippant underrating of the magnitude of the evil with which they contend, no boastful rehearsal of past labors or anticipation of future victories, no spirit of personal ill-will towards the members of secret orders, were at any time apparent. Confident expectations of the ultimate triumph of this and every right cause were, indeed, freely expressed, but in humble dependence on the blessing of God. The same faith and hope which characterized the early anti-slavery men, and which have sustained reformers in every age, was apparent in the words and the bearing of the men who are engaged in this work, but it was tempered with a just sense of the magnitude of the task assigned, and of the bitterness of the hostility they may be expected to arouse. One thing is very manifest: this discussion must go on, and the American people will be compelled to listen to it. The convictions on this subject which have been wrought in the mind of an immense number of Christian people, are too deep and strong to be either soothed or frightened into silence. Any attempt in this direction will only add to their intensity. The numbers, ability, and earnestness of the public opponents of the lodge, have at last commanded the attention of the public. The Pittsburgh papers, in marked contrast with their treatment of the movement at its inception in that city seven years ago, presented full and impartial reports of the addresses and other proceedings. Their example will be followed by the press in other places. Many timid men in the pulpit and elsewhere will take courage to utter their opinion. An increasing number will follow their example of those who have publicly renounced their allegiance to the lodge, and frankly declared its so-called secrets. The discussion will go on. Masonry and its affiliated societies must submit to a patient and thorough examination of their claims. If they have anything to impart to those who enter their fellowship, they must vindicate their existence by establishing its reality and value. Their claim to be benevolent institutions, the character and tendency of their religious ceremonies, the nature and force of their oaths and penalties, must all be judged by the Christian conscience in the light of the word of God. To attempt to hide from this investigation under the veil of secrecy will be to confess judgment, and to secure general and deserved condemnation.

SOME LOCAL EFFECTS.

The United Presbyterian of last week, Rev. Dr. Kerr, President of the National Convention, editor, reviews a Masonic article on the Convention in the following clear and candid manner:

The recent convention in this city of the National Christian Association has, at least, the effect of causing considerable exitement among the adherents of secret orders. Under the surface of silence which it is their rule to observe, there has been no little commotion. One, less prudent than his fellows, ventured to appear in one o our city papers in a long article in review of the proceedings of the convention. It must have been interesting reading to all Christian men connected with the Masonic fraternity.

Among other things, he claims that this order is "an exemplification of the golden rule, do unto others as you would have others do unto you." Just how an order that simply takes care of its own members exemplifies that rule he does not make appear. But his representation of the origin of the rule, and the reason of opposition to the order, is something for Christians to ponder. He says:

This (the golden rule) being the doctrine promulgated by a "pagan" five hundred years before Christianity stole pagan thunder by adopting it as a tenet, is probably the reason why Masonry is charged with promulgating paganism. And these Christians don't seem to be aware that the Bible foundation of their system in only a reflex from paganism older than the Bible itself, which is their tetotum. Masonry teaches an enlarged human brotherhood, love, peace and fraternity among all God's creation as illuminated in the above "pagan" axiom.

Is that the common sentiment of the fraternity? If so, are not all Christians and lovers of the Bible out of place in it? If not, if only some of the fraternity hold such sentiments, still, can Christian men be bound to such in the intimate and confidential relations of the order without jeopardy to their souls? If association begets assimilation, is it safe for any Christian man to remain in any such association for a day?

Again, this reviewer, in his comments on a well-made point by Dr. Milligan against the authority of such associations to administer the oath, gives his idea of the church. Dr. M. said in regard to such administration that it "was the same as if a lot of boys would administer the Lord's Supper or the right of baptism." To this the reviewer replies:

And, verily, what authority can the Rev. Mr. M. and his co-laborers show for administering ordinations, sacraments, suppers or baptism, more than the boys would have, except the authority of a lodge in disguise—a sort of close corporation called a church, self-instituted, where the test of admission is not down on the hard pan of a good moral character, good works, an upright life and honor among men, as required to enter the Masonic lodge? . . . I repeat, what evidence or authority have these self-righteous champions of anti-secret societies got to show that they are followers of the humble Nazarene, or emulators of the Sts. John, who were warm patrons of Masonry?

There is assumption, impiety and blasphemy all at once, and enough to make any Christian man shudder. But his worst retort, and the worst because it appears to have some truth in it, is in these words:

It is the law of force and not the Masonic law of love and brotherhood, that these over-zealous Christians want enforced. But before they demand "legal enactments" to suppress secret orders, why don't they enforce the power now in their own hands—the ecclesiastical power—to keep their own brethren out of secret orders? Ah! there comes the pinch—they dare not do it. Let them say "leave the orders or the church," and they would find which is actually held in the highest esteem by Christian Masons, as an agent of good to mankind. They prefer to flourish their hypocrisy to the world and fellowship with Masonry, which they denounce as a fostering cesspool of immorality, infidelity and atheism so long as Masons will pay toll into their hopper. It would be a God-send to Masonry and other orders as a purifying process, if the churches would only make the test and strictly enforce it. They dare not.

Is that true? Is that the kind of Christians made by connection with the order? Is that the reason why so many of the denominations are silent on the subject? Do Christian Masons really hold their order in higher esteem than the church? Is the demoralization of the church so complete, under the influence of prevailing secret orders, that it dare not enforce its authority against their manifest immoralities?

The above extracts from the writings of a Mason really make a worse showing of his order than anything said in the convention which he reviews, and we lay them before our readers for serious reflection.

News of the Week.

City.

The corner-stone of the new Presbyterian Theological Seminary was recently laid, Col. R. B. Mason, ex-Mayor of the city, performing the ceremony. ——The Common Council have passed an ordinance abolishing the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners, and placing the departments each under a single leader.——Gen. J. D. Webster has been appointed Collecter of the Internal Revenue vice Phillip Wadsworth whose resignation was requested from Washington.

Foreign.

Details are being received of the damage caused by the inundations of the River Garonne last week. The destruction to life and property has been very large. At Toulouse alone the the bodies of one hundred persons who were drowned were found in the houses which were flooded, but left standing. Many other people perished, and their bodies were carried off in houses that were swept away. At Toulouse nearly all the houses in the St. Cyprian quarter have been destroyed. At Verdun, in the department of Arriege, over fifty houses have fallen, and many persons were drowned. All crops on the banks of the Tarn and Garonne are ruined. The Garonne in some places is four miles wide. Travel on the railways is interrupted in all directions throughout the inundated district. Crops and other property has been destroyed to the estimated value of fifty to seventy million of dollars, and it is believed that 2,000 persons have perished.——Fearful inundations have also occurred in Bohemia, Moravia, Corinthia and Tyrol with some loss of life and great destruction of property.——The news is received that Lady Jane, the wife of the celebrated Sir John Franklin, is dying. She has bid farewell to the commander of the Pandora, dispatched to seek for relics of her husband, for whose rescue and the discovery of whose fate she had labored so devotedly. Lady Jane was the daughter of John Griffin, and was born in 1805. Besides expending vast sums of money in searching for her husband, she was always engaged in schemes of benevolence. About three years ago she bought the Franklin House, in Lincolnshire, England, in which she intended to collect all that could be recovered from the Arctic expeditions in which Sir John had been engaged.——The case of Count Von Arnim was decided by the Kammergericht in Berlin last Friday. He was convicted of abstracting with intent, State papers of the character of public deeds, which had been intrusted to him, and sentenced to nine month's imprisonment, includ the one month that has already expired. The Court declares that there is no ground for the charge of embezzlement or offenses against public order and has appealed.

Volcano and Earthquake.

The earthquakes which recently took place in Asia Minor, were more fatal than was at first reported. In one village nearly all the houses were destroyed, 31 persons killed, and 17 injured. In another viliage 285 houses were destroyed out of 300, 130 persons killed, and 170 wounded. Other villages are also said to have suffered in the same proportion. The Columbian earthquake of May 18th destroyed the towns of San Jose de Cucuta, population 18,000; San Cayetano, 4,000; Santiago, 2,000; Granalote, 3,000; Arboleda, 6,000; Cucutilia, 5,000; and San Cristopal, 16,000; and portions of several other sections. The section devastated embraces the region where Colombia and Venzuela join—the Colombia portion ewbracing the State of Santander. The destruction was greatest in the Valley of Cucuta, on the Venezuelan frontier. It is reported that 16,000 lives were destroyed by the calamity. Santander is in some respects the most productive part of this republic, its coffee being famous. A volcano is reported to have broken out near Santiago.——In the far north, following closely upon the celebration of the thousandth anniversary of the settlement of Iceland, comes the announcement of the greatest calamity the island has ever known. A few weeks ago the northern coast of Norway was covered to the depth of several inches by a shower of cinders. The phenomenon led to the belief that some terrible eruption had occurred in Iceland. A steamer was despatched, the captain of which, on his arrival out, learned of a series of the most terrible disasters that have ever visited the region. Live volcanoes have spouted fire, and those that had been inactive for ages, broke out and belched their igneous contents over the surrounding country. In one section alone—that around the village of Myvatu—the entire country for fifty miles around has been made desolate. Hundreds of lives have been lost, and thousands of people are left without homes or food.

General.

A tornado passed over a portion of the city of Detroit last Sabbath evening destroying some 18 or 20 houses and killing several people; about 100 others were more or less injured.——Three murderers, Gordon and Wagner, at Thomaston, Me., and Costley at Dedham, Mass., were hung last Friday. ——The War Department has at present under consideration two subjects of more than ordinary importance in the use of the small army that is left at its disposal. The first is the prospect of trouble with the Sioux Indians, and the second and most important, the Texas border outrage investigation. It is a recognized fact that the recent outrages on the Rio Grande are no new defiance of the authority of this Government, and for this very reason the authorities have made up their minds that a stop must be put to them. For upwards of fourteen years these outrages have been continued at reguler intervals, until neither the life nor property of American citizens upon the Rio Grande have been safe.

The Home Circle.

Two Sides of Life.

There is a shady side of life,
And a sunny side as well,
And 'tis for every one to say
On which he'd choose to dwell;
For every one unto himself
Commits a grievous sin
Who bars the blessed sunshine out
And shuts the shadows in.

The clouds may wear their saddest robes,
The sun refuse to smile,
And sorrow, with her troops of ills,
May threaten us the while;
But still the cheerful heart has power
A sunbeam to provide,
And only those whose souls are dark
Dwell on life's shady side.

Isaac Watts.

It has been well said by Prof. March, of Lafayette College, in his noble address before the Philological Society, that Grecian poetry and Roman poetry did not rise to their height in those men whose names are identified with the so-called Greek and Latin classics. There was nothing in all that literature which rose above human experience, till Christianity came, and taught men the doctrines of the cross, true nobleness and self-sacrifice, and lifted them up to Christ. And then it was that a new literature arose; then it was that men, quickened by a loftier spirit than the world had known, began to sing in strains grander than Virgil and Horace had ever penned. Then were born those great Christian hymns which are the sublimest of all, the most majestic of all the words in our hymnals. It were idle to compare the best words of Watts and Cowper and Wesley, with the Te Deum Laudamus, or the Gloria in Excelsia. And I think it can be shown both from the nature of things, and from the poetry itself, that no poetry has ever been written, more commanding, more resounding, more profound than that which was the gift of the early Christian church to the ages. And that because by its very conditions sacred poetry is the highest of all poetry, just as sacred art is the highest of all art. And so, when we come down to our time, we can truly say that he who writes an enduring hymn reaches the height of human achievement. Dr. Bushnell once said to me, "I believe I would rather write one good hymn that would live, than all I have ever written." And the men who write one great hymn are not likely to be forgotten.

But perhaps of all Watt's hymns the most solemn was the one which he wrote when refused by Mrs. Elizabeth Singer, afterwards Mrs. Rowe. It was a solemn occasion, and no wonder he wrote a solemn hymn. She said that she admired the jewel, but not the casket, and so rejected him. Watts sat down and wrote the hymn beginning,

How vain are all things here below!
How false and yet how fair!
Each pleasure hath its poison too,
And every sweet a snare.

Dr. Watts never married. So far as is known he never thought of marriage again, but gave himself, heart and soul, to the duties of his office, and the relief of song.

Besides his hymns, Watts wrote his treatise on Logic, which was long a standard, and his excellent little book, which some of my readers once studied, called "Watts on the Improvement of the Mind," or as it was abreviated, "Watts on the Mind." The book is still printed, and may be found in use in some of our schools; and no one who reads it will ever be the worse for it. Besides he wrote a volume of general poetry, which may be found in all complete collections, but far inferior to the sweep of his sacred lyrics. His Divine Songs for Children, have, however, been the most popular of all his works, and have been sung down to my own childhood, although the present generation knows them only to smile at them. When I was a child those words,

How doth the little busy bee,

and

Let dogs delight to bark and bite,

never provoked mirth; now they hardly fail to; and whether better or poorer verses are now served to our children, at least they are different from good old Dr. Watt's. But there are those among us who go back to their childhood, and recall his Divine Songs, and think that never was there writing so simple and so beautiful. And they were good. They touched the heart of childhood, for they flowed from a childlike soul. Such writings can never grow really old. The fashion of speech may change, and the words may seem quaint, as the thin tones of a harpsichord do now, but they cannot die, for there is the eternal music in them, the music of nature and of truth.

Watts was buried in Bunhill Fields, near the great Baptist, John Bunyan. No dissenter, Congregationalist or Baptist, ought to go to London without visiting that churchyard, which has well been called the Campo Santo of Protestantism. But the English nation have not been content with letting that old burying ground hold his bones; they have carried a memorial of him into more memorable precincts still. And I shall not soon forget a twilight stroll among the arches of Westminster Abbey, while the shadows fell along the aisles, and I paused at the monuments of the great men of England. Leaving the Poets' Corner, and all its brilliant memories, and wandering along the side of the church proper, I encountered two slabs not far apart, which went to my heart as an American and a Christian. One of them was over the place where lies the dust of Major Andre, the pure and chivalrous young man, who, though he died the death of a spy, is far dearer to us than our own kinsman, Arnold. And near this, and resting on on the floor, quite obscurely, and I only wonder how noticed by me, I saw a pale yellowish marble, sacred to the memory of Isaac Watts. His ashes are not there, but his monument stands with the great men of England, humbler in form and place, but no less honored than they. And there is many a king of Britain, whose dust lies in the Abbey, yet whose name does not stir the heart like that of Dr. Isaac Watts.

How much he is to us may be seen the fact that of the 974 hymns in the collection used in my own church, 178, or one-fifth of them are by Dr. Watts. And when you think that he wrote but 700 hymns in all, and that our whole collection is less than a thousand, you may well wonder, that more than one out of every four which he wrote should be considered indispensable to Christian worship. And when you think of the rival poets, of the Wesleys, of Newton and Cowper, and Doddridge, and Mrs. Steele, and Mrs. Waring, and Lyte, and Keble, and Charlotte Elliott, and Milman, and Toplady, and Faber, and Henry Kirke White, and Montgomery, and many, many others, we may only wonder the more. Charles Wesley left 7,000 hymns, and some of them, for freedom of movement and fervor of aspiration, are quite unexcelled, yet how few remain classic, compared with Watt's. And so you see that we speak of a great man, a king of men, a man whom the kings of the earth delight to honor. He was an English Congregationalist all his days. But where is the Episcopal hymn book which will impoverish itself by excluding his hymns. I suppose it is contrary to their theory to admit them there, but it would be a worse error to shut them out. It would not be too much to hope that they may yet be translated into Latin, and sung in Roman Catholic churches, so true to God and to Jesus Christ are they. When a man can say as Watts did,

Christ and his cross are all my theme, there is no communion which can remain Christian and rule his verses out. Wherefore the churches join hands this year of grace 1875, in celebrating that great and fruitful life, and in thanking God for his bounty in giving him to the church two hundred years ago.—Advance.

Visit to Shaw's Garden.

BY M. J. WHIPPLE.

Our botany class after having analyzed the flowers of the gardens and prairies around us, sighed for new worlds to conquer, so about twenty-five of us gathered at the station Saturday morning, June 5th, to take the early train for St. Louis, thirty-six miles away.

After the slight bustle of seating and settling our students and satchels among the roused and gaping passengers, the train moved majestically on to the city without any perilous adventure. Arrived at the bridge a little consultation followed as to the manner in which we should cross the Father of waters, but we soon decided to use the ferry as of yore in order to take a good look at that wonderful bond of union between States which God had separated by such a mighty barrier. The boat carried us close under its proud arches that we might the better examine its magnitude and strength. With its broad arms ever extending from bank to bank, it seems to say "God divided these people that man through me might unite them in one common brotherhood."

We had little more than touched upon the farther shore, than we found that our company was composed of so many active, inquisitive members, several of whom were in St. Louis for the first time, and so much inclined to rely upon native wit to guide them round the city that it took close attention to keep track of them. But Providence kindly spread over this Southern sun a hazy covering, and sent a refreshing breeze through the streets to fan our flushing faces and keep us on the alert until we could pilot our little band safely to the Garden where we could bid them enter and go where they pleased. Before reaching the Garden we left the horse cars and walked across Lafayette Park. Everything there looked fresh and beautiful, the birds carolled happy notes, the swans glided gaily over the pond, the large, white pelican contentedly arranged his plumage with his long yellow bill on the shore, and a cool grotto invited us to tarry.

When the gate of the Garden closed behind us and we were freed from all fear of misfortune to any of our number, we were prepared to enjoy the new earth within these walls. It seems that God has provided a way for his least favored creatures to behold his works, by inspiring that man out of his abundance to collect from all parts of the world its rarest flowers and fruits, bring them within the limits of that one hundred and sixty acre enclosure, employ men to care for them, and then permit whoever will to come freely and see them. The empty handed laborer there walks beside the princely merchant who is relieved of his gold-headed cane at the entrance.

Not far from the gate a kind of tower whose shaded base offers an attractive seat, bears an inscription of welcome to the stranger, which so appeals to the heart that the roughest man can but feel that he is treading upon holy ground to touch the frailest flower. Like the winding roads of old Coos, every pathway leads us to new surprises, each more beautiful than its fellow. There the broad heavy leaves of the torrid zone shelter the wilting flowers of the North from a scorching sun, while tall tropical trees overshadow the Russian pine. Numberless aloes send out their sword-like shoots to point to tiny flowers at their feet, and ferns of every variety look out from beneath the protecting palm. Perfect June roses with all their shades of color greet us on all sides; pansies of every imaginable tint border many a bed. The fruit tree and the fir tree, the banyan and the birch tree live there in harmony together. The quinine, the camphor, the cocoa and the coffee tree there satisfy a long-existing curiosity.

Farther on an evergreen arch heralds an evergreen labyrinth which leads the puzzled wanderer to a pleasant bower. Away in the distance Mr. Shaw's fine residence with still open gate breaks upon the view. Between it and the labyrinth his monument is being erected. It already seems to be about thirty feet in height, while upon one side at a height of about fifteen feet there is this inscription:

"O Lord how manifold are thy works, in wisdom thou hast made them all."

At his death that garden becomes the property of the city. He is a single man of medium appearance, but kind and agreeable to all.

While we were passing through his yard to the left of his residence to look at his cabinet, we noticed many fowls, two or three dogs, and six peacocks contentedly enjoying their surroundings. His cabinet is not of so much importance as his garden, but he has there collected several specimens of birds, mammals, minerals, and many kinds of seeds. An observatory in the center overlooks the whole garden. The chief feature of the place is the thoughtful kindness of its owner in providing comfortable, shaded seats just where there are the finest views, and where one feels the most need of rest.

After our eyes were wearied with seeing and we had inhaled our fill of the sweet perfume, we repaired to the entrance where a hack driver, either on account of our good looks or fine behavior, volunteered to take the ladies of our company to Tower Grove Park, about half a mile further on, free of charge. There in a sheltered nook we had our basket picnic.

The next place of interest was the Orphan's Home, where kind hearts and willing hands are feeding, clothing and educating seventy-five orphan children. Everything around the building tells of comfort, order and cleanliness. What a noble work to the take little waifs of the streets and train them up to usefulness and sobriety! The grounds were alive with their sports when we entered, and I guess they like to have company, for when we returned we found the gate very ingeniously tied together with a string. Doubtless some little rogue was furnished with amusement in watching us untie it. I can now see before me that row of little white beds into which those busy, tired bodies are tucked with care every night, although mamma has gone away.

We next took a look at the Public School Library and reading room, where 36,500 volumes, beside nearly all the newspapers and periodicals in the land, invite all the children of St. Louis Public Schools to come and read.

The Court-house with its dome next attracted us, and although the hour for opening it to strangers was past, the attendant unlocked the door and waited for us to survey it. I did not climb to the top of the winding stairs, for as they became narrower and the way grew darker, I bethought me of the fly "who ne'er came down again." Some of the company went bravely on and were amply repaid (as all those are who persevere despite dismal surroundings,) by seeing spread out beneath them the great, well-built city with its multitudes hurrying to and fro in the business or life.

After visiting a taxidermist's rooms and admiring his handiwork, we began to think of home and the bridge which we meant to walk over at our leisure. Five cents takes the traveler over, gives him a glass of ice-water and a seat to enjoy the fine view of the city and river as long as he chooses.

And this is the manner in which we as a school filled, from daybreak ti nightfall, the length of a June day with pleasant, and we think, profitable sight-seeing.

Cost of Armies in Europe.

It is not without interest to see what is the cost of trying to maintain the peace of Europe by means of immense armies. A French officer, who has devoted much time to collect the facts, has just published the leading ascertained results. For military purposes only, apart from naval requirements, the total present expenditure of the six great European powers amount to $600,000,000 annually, although Europe is at peace. France occupies the first place in all general war expenditure, with Russia second, Germany third, England fourth, Austria fifth, and Italy sixth. But for military purposes only, without including any naval charges, Russia leads with a budget of $158,000,000; France following with $145,000,000; Germany with $98,000,000; England with $76,000,000; Austria with $51,000,000, and Italy with $42,000,000.

The cost of the whole army amounts to 36 per cent. in Russia, to 31 per cent. in England and France, to 26 per cent. in Germany, to 20 per cent. in Austria, and to 17 per cent in Italy. The cost per military unit (for single soldier) is greatest in England, where it is $520 per annum, against $250 in France, $240 in Russia; $233 in Germany, $187 in Italy, and $180 in Austria. It is to be explained that the real cost of each English soldier is not so much higher than that of his class elsewhere. England is the only nation among the six here named which recruits its army by voluntary enlistment. If the loss caused by compelling men to leave their occupations in order to take up a military life were added to the monetary outlay on the Continental armies it would probably be found that the English system is the cheapest in the long run. Putting aside the question of comparative costliness, the fact remains that the six great European powers, in a period of profound peace, maintain a standing army numbering 2,218,000 effectives. In the event of war this force could, and would, be doubled; Germany alone can have a war-army of 3,250,000, armed and provisioned for a campaign, within twenty days after the proclamation of war. It is fearful to think of the amount of labor and capital wasted, during a time of peace, in maintaing such a vast number of soldiers.

See that all is Right.

It is always bad to start on a journey without having looked to the harness and to the horse's shoes; and it often happens that the time saved by omitting examination turns out to be a dead loss when a traveler has advanced a little on his journey. Not one minute but a hundred minutes may be lost by the want of a little attention at first. Set the morning watch with care, if you would be safe through the day; begin well if you would end well. Take care that the helm of the day is put right, look well to the point you want to sail to, then whether you make much progress or little, it will be so far in the right direction. The morning hour is generally the index of the day.—Spurgeon.

Thought means life, since those who do not think do not live in any high or real sense. Thinking makes the man.

Children's Corner.

Shelling Peas.

Passing by the kitchen,
Through an open door,
I espy three children
Sitting on the floor.
Through the open window
Comes the morning breeze
Fanning them so gently
While they shell the peas.

Little eyes are busy,
Little fingers, too,
Picking all the peas out
Soon as brought to view.
They are free and happy
As birds upon the trees,
Laughing, talking, singing,
While they shell the peas.

Baby's dish has in it
Naught but pods, 'tis true,
But she's just as busy,
And as happy too.
They must learn to labor,
Little ones like these
Should have some employment;
Let them shell the peas.

Up at early morning,
By the break of day,
All their work done early,
They'll have time to play.
Children are so happy,
When they try to please:
They do much to help us,
While they shell the peas.

Courage and Cowardice.

George came into the house one day all dripping wet. His mother, as she saw him, exclaimed:

"Why, George, my son, how came you so wet?"

"Why, mother, one of the boys said I 'darn't jump into the creek,' and I tell you I am not to be dared."

Now was it courage that led George to do that? Some boys would say it was and that he was a brave and courageous boy. But no, George was a coward; and that was a very cowardly act. He well knew that it was wrong for him to jump into the creek with his clothes on, but he was afraid the other boys would laugh at him, if he should stand and be dared.

Edward came strutting up to James, and putting his fist in his face, said: "Strike that if you dare!" just to see if he couldn't get him into a quarrel. Now which would show the most real courage, for James to give him a hit and have a brutal fight, and both get wounded, or to say, as he did:—"Edward, if you want a quarrel, you have come to the wrong boy. I never fight, because it is wrong. You may call me a coward, if you will, but I will show you that I have courage enough not to be tempted, by your ridicule, to do what I know is wrong." That was brave and courageous.

A good definition of courage is "not to be afraid to do what is right, and to be afraid to do what is wrong." The stories of Daniel and his three friends, and of Joseph, give us fine examples of those who possessed true courage; who were not afraid to do what is right, and who were not afraid to do what is wrong.—Congregationalist.

The House You are Building.

"Every boy and girl is making a house called character, which they will live in when they grow up to be men and women. The habits they form are the foundation, and they must use a great deal of care here, especially with the corner-stone."

Frank listened eagerly while Miss Farnsworth went into further details, and when she proposed that during the coming week he should put a little stone called Obedience into his house, the idea pleased him amazingly. So the gas was lighted, and a small blank book found, on the first page of which Auntie Eunice printed in large clear letters—

FOUNDATION STONES.

Then Frank took his pencil and made a somewhat remarkable O underneath, against which his aunt wrote the word obedience, thus:

O. OBEDIENCE.

"Now," she said, after explaining how hard he must try to obey his mother, asking his Heavenly Father to help him, "we must have these stones cemented together with a little mortar, or else they will fall apart. The mortar must be God's word, and we will begin to learn the first chapter of John, having one verse every week." Accordingly the words were written, and the books put away till the next Sabbath evening, having first agreed to keep the matter a secret between themselves.

There was a difference in Frank's behaviour in this one particular during the week, and Aunt Eunice resolved to follow out the suggestion which the Lord had surely given her. The boy's faults were silently noticed, and made the subject for private conference, instead of open reprimand; and at the end of a year a decided improvement was visible. Every month there was a review, and when failures occurred, the same "stone" received another trial. Manners, as well as morals, were included in the building, and whenever Frank forgot himself, as he did oftentimes, the sound of the letter from his aunt's lips always recalled him to some little politeness or trivial duty. The following page from Frank's "stone book" is given:

P. PATIENCE.
O. ORDER.
S. D. SELF-DENIAL.
K. KINDNESS.
P. PRAYER.
P. L. PERFECT LESSONS.
W. F. J. WORK FOR JESUS.
P. POLITE.

Between each one of these the verse in John was written, and on the last page, when the book was filled, stood these words:

"Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY

THE POLITICAL MASS CONVENTION.

HELD IN LIBRARY HALL, PITTSBURGH, JUNE 9th, 1875.

At two o'clock P. M. , as had been arranged by vote of the annual Convention of the National Christian Association, a mass meeting of citizens, chiefly delegates to that convention, assembled in Library Hall, Pittsburgh, to discuss the political duties of citizens of the United States in respect to the secret orders.

J. L. Barlow of New York nominated Rev. B. T. Roberts of Rochester, N. Y., for chairman, who was unanimously elected. Mr. Roberts on taking the chair remarked that we should most appropriately open the deliberations and actions of the convention with a petition for the blessing of God upon them, and called on Rev. J. T. Kiggins of Indiana to lead in prayer. Prof. C. A. Blanchard of Illinois was then elected Secretary, and the proceedings of the political mass meeting held in Shakespere Hall, Syracuse, June 4th, 1874, were read, also the names of the political committee appointed at that time, viz: J. Blanchard of Illinois; C. W. Greene of Indiana; H. Wilcox of Michigan; F. D. Parish of Ohio; G. W. Needels of Missouri; Aaron Floyd of Pennsylvania; Francis Gillette of Connecticut; J. W. Phelps of Vermont; J. L. Barlow of New York.

Pres. J. Blanchard announced that members of the committee present had met and consulted on a platform which would be presented soon; and while waiting he desired that Prof. Geo. W. Clark of New York, the celebrated "Liberty Singer" of anti-slavery days, be requested to sing. Prof. Clark appropriately responded with "The Good Time Coming," which was enthusiastically received.

The report of the committee on platform was then read, which as finally adopted reads as follows:

PLATFORM.

We hold: 1. That ours is a Christian and not a heathen nation, and that the God of the Christian Scriptures is the author of civil government.

2. That God requires and man needs a Sabbath.

3. That the prohibition of the importation, manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks as a beverage, is the true policy on the temperance question.

4. The charters of all secret lodges granted by our Federal and State Legislatures should be withdrawn, and their oaths prohibited by law.

5. That the civil equality secured to all American citizens by articles 13th, 14th and 15th of our amended Constitution should be preserved inviolate.

6. That arbitration of differences with nations is the most direct and sure method of securing and perpetuating a permanent peace.

7. That to cultivate the intellect without improving the morals of men, is to make mere adepts and experts; therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions.

8. That land and other monopolies should be discountenanced.

9. That the Government should furnish the people with an amply and sound currency, and a return to specie payment as soon as practicable.

10. That maintenance of the public credit, protection to all loyal citizens, and justice to Indians are essential to the honor and safety of our nation.

11. And finally, we demand for the American people the abolition of Electoral Colleges, and a direct vote for President and Vice President of the United States.

The report was accepted and Rev. Dr. Geo K. Ormond of Pennsylvania moved to consider and adopt article by article; which was agreed to.

On the first article; Dr. Ormond and President Blanchard made earnest and able remarks. The latter said this first article contains the matter of this whole movement. I do not regard myself as only an anti-secret man, opposed to secret orders, but also as a Christian man, set against every system or institution that exalts itself against the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. Our fathers hated Freemasonry and all the clap-trap and stock-in-trade of the secret orders. They held with Bradshaw that all rites and ceremonies of a religious nature not warranted by Scripture were neither to be recognized nor allowed. All ceremonies such as are practiced by Cardinal McClosky are an insult to God. They are made of his pretended worship, but are contrary to the spirit and letter of his word. Our Father in heaven, he only knows how his offending children may be reconciled and acceptably worship him, and if he has not told us we surely have no warrant for conjuring up a religious system.

Dr. Ormond moved to amend by using the word Bible instead of "Christian Scriptures" in the first article." Some objected to the motion because the lodge ranks the sacred writings of false religions equally with the Word of God and calls them the Bible of those systems, thus confusing the term as used in the Christian sense. Others favored for the very reason of this infamous attempt of the lodge to dethrone the Bible and claimed that we should in terms as well as in fact hold to its supremacy. The amendment was lost, however, and the first section as adopted as presented.

The following articles were adopted in order and without further discussion until the seventh was reached, in which Mr. J. Levington moved to insert the words "in evil" So as to read "expects in evil." He thought the sense incomplete and advocated the amendment in order to show in what men were experts in. Discussion on the motion was participated in by Messrs Kiggins, Ormond, Hinman, Collins, Clark and others. Several alterations in the article were suggested and one by the chairman, to read "That morality no less than intelligence is essential to the well-being of a republic, therefore the Bible should be associated with books of science and literature in all our educational institutions." But the original draft was finally agreed upon as most satisfactory. Articles eighth and ninth were adopted without discussion, and the one originally numbered tenth came up. It read thus:

10. That the tariff be so adjusted that it will as near as possible give equal protection to all classes of industry in the Government.

This introduced a tariff and free trade discussion which was spirited without severity. Mr. Geo. W. Needels of Missouri made a strong speech with excellent points in advocacy of protection. C. A. Blandhard of Illinois said that he favored free trade but moved to strike out the article from the platform. He said that it was an utter impossibility to so harmonize the tariff as to afford equal protection to all branches of industry, and that if a whole delegation of lawyers should work at the question from now to the day of judgment they would fail to produce satisfaction. Both the great political parties are divided among themselves on this question, and from the opinions expressed on this floor it will be impossible to harmonize this convention on it, and it is therefore best to leave out all reference to it. Geo. W. Clark of New York agreed with Mr. Blanchard, remarking that by the time we get into power we shall be wise enough to adjust the tariff question. The article was stricken out by unanimous vote.

The platform was then adopted as a whole.

The platform having been adopted with so general satisfaction and unanimity of feeling, Pres. J. Blanchard addressed the meeting at some length, earnestly setting forth the duty of American citizens to co-operate with the pulpit and the religious press through the ballot, in overthrowing the despotisms invented by Satan, and encircling the land with iron fetters. He was thoroughly in favor of putting in nomination candidates for the national offices to be voted for in 1876. It is a duty owed to the constituency of this Convention which they expect us to fulfill, to nominate suitable men for the national offices. He spoke of the union with the other and older parties as futile in accomplishing anything for the redemption of our public offices from the grip of the lodge. He then moved the nomination of HON. JAMES B. WALKER, of Illinois, for next President of the United States and of DONALD KIRKPATRICK, ESQ., of New York for Vice President.

J. L. Barlow of New York seconded the nominations.

Pres. Blanchard enlarged upon the excellences and private and public virtues of the gentleman named and thought better standard bearers for our reform could not be named. We must have men who are with us, who will stand by our principles and be voted for upon them. These remarks were supplemented by others of similar strain.

Geo. W. Needels of Missouri moved the nomination of Jonathan Blanchard of Illinois for President, and H. A. Thompson of Ohio for Vice-president. Mr. Needels believed this would be the best nomination from the position of the gentlemen in the reform and as educators, one being President of Wheaton College, Illinois, the other of Otterbeim University of Westerville, Ohio.

Joseph Travis of Iowa, said he understood that Charles Francis Adams of Massachusetts would accept the nomination and had written a letter to that effect. He wished to know if he was misinformed. Pres. Blanchard said he had visited Mr. Adams, who while opposed to the lodge, as was his father before him, and like him publicly and fearlessly pointing out its dark and hostile form to his fellow citizens, yet he had given no intimationof accepting a nomination on the distinctive principles represented by this Convention.

J. T. Kiggins of Indiana said the people of that State would nominate a man for themselves and vote for him if it was not done by the national representation; and their vote would be recorded in heaven. No vote ever cast for truth and right was ever lost, no matter how much in the minority.

Dr. Collins of Pennsylvania, said he objected to the idea that this would be a mere party of testimony. It comprises those principles which we believe will ultimately prevail. And stranger things have happened in the good providence of God than that we should elect our candidates in 1876.

J. H. Lieper of Ohio spoke in an earnest and impassioned manner of the disappointment felt when the Oberlin Convention adjourned at not seeing any nominations made. He spoke of the failure of the Republican party in upholding reforms. That party has prudential reasons to drop temperance, the national reform, Anti-masonry, etc. To nominate now is not premature for this body. These three reforms can unite their candidates and rally to them with a strong vote. He had no apology for enthusiasm. In these days a man was no American who was not enthusiastic over genuine American principles.

G. W. Needels also spoke in favor of nominating now. The action would not be premature or hasty, but would meet the wishes of the true reformers throughout the country.

J. Levington said it should be kept in view that we are opposed not only to a secret power but a secret government also.

On motion of C. A. Blanchard it was decided to make nominations. At the special request of Pres. Blanchard, Mr. Needels withdrew his motion to nominate, and the vote was taken unanimously in favor of the first names proposed, Hon. J. B. Walker of Illinois, and Donald Kirkpatrick, Esq., of New York, and they were declared nominated for next President and Vice-president of the United States.

Pres. J. Blanchard introduced the following resolution which was unanimously voted:

Resolved, That this mass meeting learn with great satisfaction of the successful establishment of the "American Freeman" by G. W. Needels, Esq., of Albany, Mo., and commend it to the friends of political action, as a faithful and true exponent of the principles of the American Party, and we express the hope that it will be extensively patronized by the friends of the reform.

The President and secretary were then appointed a committee to notify the candidates of their nomination, with instructions to publish their letters of acceptance in the Christian Cynosure. And after singing the doxology probably the most harmonious national political convention ever held in the history of the country adjourned sine die.

ADDRESS OF REV. WOODRUFF POST.

The Genius of Freemasonry Hostile to our Government and Anti-Christian.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen:—With deep and commingled emotion duty is entered upon this hour. To a kind Providence gratitude responds for the opportunity of casting some small dust in the balance on the genius of Freemasonry in its attitude toward the commonwealth in this land of freedom.

As citizens of this great Republic, whatever our supposed privileges, we are not at liberty to institute any scheme, or create any party that will conflict with the interests of the body politic. Under civil government all are bound each to the other equally. Whatever interrupts such harmony is discord and treason.

Notice what Washington said, "All combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control or counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and actions of the constituted authorities are of fatal tendency. Let me warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of party." (Farewell address, p. 58.)

Jefferson says, referring to a society known as "Cincinnati," created at the close of the war by Washington's officers:—"The uneasiness excited by this institution had early caught the notice of Gen. Washington. He became sensible that it might produce political evils; that it was becoming necessary to annihilate it absolutely. He went to the first annual meeting at Philadelphia, determined to exert all his influence for its suppression. He proposed it to his officers and urged it with all his powers. It met an opposition which was observed to cloud his face with an anxiety that the most distressing scenes of the war had scarcely ever produced." (Jeff. p. 416 and 418.)

"In this," says John Q. Adams, "we have a pledge of what his conduct would have been, were he called to consider the Masonic order in the light in which it must now be viewed, far more authoritative than the fact of his once having been a Mason can be in favor of the brotherhood."

Yet Washington is made to play a prominent part as figure-head of the craft. He is made ubiquitous in regalia, seen in every avenue and resort, feathered and jeweled. Masonry will not let the nation's dead father rest.

Freemasonry consists of a select body of men with unblemished bodies, right limbs, and free from moral taint as possible. The great mass of humanity is left out in the cold. Not even permitted to pick up the crumbs which fall from Masters' tables.

But if this was all, nobody would care; nor would this convention have been held. There is a wheel within the wheel. Freemasonry is a secret clan, a government within the government, and as such, necessarily opposed to our open and free Republic.

Freemasonry invades the rights of a free people by swearing American subjects by extra-judicial oaths to keep the secrets of the craft, never to reveal any of its mysteries under any circumstances whatever. This, in the Master's degree, involves the violation of our laws concerning any crime this side of murder and treason. And in the Royal Arch degree these also included. It is worse than folly for Masons to deny this, and they are becoming wise enough to know it. Any respectable law-office containing Wendell's Works, Vol. 13, p. 9, will convince, from the sworn lips of true and trusty Masons, any who need convincing on this point.

Again, Masonry violates our laws by imposing death penalties for violation of Masonic law. A fragment of an old lecture produced by Past Master Steinbrenner, reads thus: "I hear and conceal under the penalty of having my throat cut across, or my tongue pulled out of my head." (Stein. p. 143.)

Mackey, in speaking of the covenant, quoting Goodaere, says, "He thus fully explains the whole ceremony of making the covenant" as follows: 'After an animal had been selected, his throat was cut across with one single blow, so as to divide the windpipe, arteries and veins, without touching any bone. The next ceremony was to tear the breast open and pluck out the heart. . . . The animal was then divided into two parts and placed north and south . . . and the carcass was then left a prey to voracious animals.' " "This allusion (continues Mackey) will not escape the attentive Mason." (Lex. p. 343.) Every Master Mason in Pittsburgh understands it too.

Is it not well known that a peaceful citizen of the Republic was kidnapped by Masons in 1826 and murdered? and for what? Not for crime. He had done violence to no man. Had invaded no man's rights. Yet they wrested him from his home, and cast him into prison, and from prison to judgment and Morgan was seen no more! The vagrancy of Freemasonry DID NOT, could not do this, and Seward says, "The ministers of the law were partakers of the crime." A secret triad, chosen, true to cursed vows. They did the deed. They met their Master's stern behest and plunged beneath Niagara's rolling flood a good man and a true; true to truth and true to man! There Morgan met his fate, and sealed the truth with his own blood. So swore Vallance, one of that death-triad. He says: "My comrades took the oars and the boat was rapidly forced out into the river. The night was pitch dark, adapted to our hellish purpose. I bade the unhappy man stand up. I approached him and gave him a strong push with both my hands. He fell and the waters closed over the mass."

But alas for Masonry, the waters revealed the perfidy, and exposed Masonic guilt, and now Morgan, like a spectre, haunts its halls and wails amid its corridors. Not him alone! Pres. C. Finney refers in his book to no less than six others murdered under Masonic law, and states that other cases are constantly coming to light in which persons have been murdered for disclosing Masonic secrets. (Finney, p. 121.)

Rev. J. R. Baird of Pennsylvania, in a published tract says: "I do hereby certify that the laws of Masonry require the taking of human life. It has penalties which must be inflicted within itself without the knowledge of civil law." He mentions a case. He says: "On closing the lodge in forming hands, Brother Forgie was on my left hand. I never saw him again. I asked Smith (who was both a church member and a justice of the peace) what had become of Bro. Forgie. He said he had stepped out. I said, 'What do you mean?' Said he, 'Masonically speaking, he was sent to us to be disposed of.' "

SECRET DESPOTISM.

Again, this institution is a secret despotism; its few ruling men must "be obeyed by all the brethren with all humility, reverence and alacrity," "right or wrong," as the case may be. "The power of a Master in his lodge," says Mackey, "is absolute. . . . His commands must be implicitly obeyed." (Lex. 298, 299.) "His authority in the lodge is despotic as the sun in the firmament." (Lex. 298, 299 and 333.) Also, "To the decrees of a Grand Lodge unlimited obedience must be paid by every lodge and every Mason situated within its control. . . . Its edicts must be respected and obeyed without examination by its subordinate lodges. And the Master of every lodge must pay homage to the Grand Master and strictly conform to every edict of the Grand Lodge." (Ibid., p. 185 and 186.)

Chase in his Digest of Masonic law, says, "No appeal from the decision of the Master of a lodge lies in any case whatever. Right or wrong, . . . it is final, reversible only by himself, or by the Grand Lodge." (Digest, p. 384.)

This is the power seeking to grasp the reins of our government. Locate this power in the midst of a people living in a harmony which "comes from a just respect by each for the rights of all, and by all for the rights of each," as a statesman has said, and who can conceive a greater calamity to such a people.

One of America's truest sons enquires, "Will the people of the United States have the foolhardiness to ignore the crime and danger of this conspiracy against their liberty?" (Finney p. 99.)

Do we want illustrations? Witness then the carnage of the Ku-Klux-Klan and White League, factions whose disguises, says Howard, Freemasonry concealed in our Southern States only a little past.

"Without the presence of troops," said Mayor Merrill, in his testimony before the Congressional Committee, "there is no telling what would happen. . . . The control was in the hands of a few men, leaders of the conservative White League party which would like to overthrow the State Government. There is an antagonism to equal rights and an important election could not have been held in that country." (Cynosure, Jan. 14, 1875.)

Think also of Vineland and Ithaca and Youngsville mobs and yet more recent demonstrations of these secret clans. Think of these things in this Christian land of the 19th century.

Strange yet true—multitudes called to the holy ministry are in league with the dark order; have taken its oaths; the skull has pressed their lips; have bound themselves under a terrible curse, yet solemnly declare they can see no evil in it, though they are staggering under the weight of its fearful obligations, to protect the brotherhood, and keep its secrets, right or wrong, murder and treason not excepted, the laws of God and humanity to the contrary notwithstanding.

One thing seems logical beyond the shadow of an exception, that the thousands of gospel ministers who are in affinity with Masonry, participating in its mysteries and performances prove its wonderful obligations and penalties to be approved of God and harmless; or that they, as intelligent men, who can render a reason, are traitors to God and man and blasphemers too painful to contemplate.

OPINIONS OF LEADING MEN.

Let us turn our attention to the opinions of a few of many leading men who have ventilated the question.

Wendell Phillips said, "Secret societies are a great evil; entirely out of place in a Republic . . . and should not be allowed to exist."

Hon. Wm. Wirt declared, "Freemasonry is a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man that ought to be put down."

Hon. Wm. H. Seward said, "Swear, sir! I, a man! an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment and my conscience to their keeping. . . . I know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible parties to make myself a willing slave."

Daniel Webster affirms, "All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another and are bound by secret oaths . . . are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. . . . It is my opinion that the future administration of all such oaths, and the formation of all such obligations should be prohibited by law."

John Quincy Adams said, "Secrets written in blood should be revealed. A tree that bears such fruit should be hewn down."

Rev. Nathaniel Colver, once Mason, says, "I regard it (Masonry) as Satan's masterpiece. . . . It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice."

Hon. Chas. Sumner wrote to S. D. Greene, "You must importune Jehovah to enlighten the minds of the people of this nation to remove another imported scourge, and curse, FREEMASONRY, which is stealthily usurping the reins of government and must (with slavery) be destroyed in our country if it is to be the home of the free."—Cynosure, March. 25, 1875.

Disraeli, British Premier, said, "Secret societies are hurrying the civil governments of the world . . . to the brink of a precipice over which law and order will ultimately fall and perish together."

More might be added, all sustained by the ponderous declaration of the thousands who denounced the institution when Morgan was murdered and walked no more within its precincts.

But Freemasonry now lurks in disguise as a divine and charitable institution until the favorable time shall come when some grand ecumenical counsel of Masons shall be called and the dogma of Masonic infallibility decreed; then shall flaunt in the face of Americans, amid the stars and stripes of our own proud banner, the symbols of the fraternity, together with the inscription—"Freemasonry, the alpha and omega, the beginning and the end."

This day of desolation will surely come unless God interpose and help to convince a yet slumbering people and incite them to duty.

But farther, that Freemasonry answers to the dangerous character argued is also evident from its desperate resort to defamation. None escape who criticise the institution, especially seceders who are denounced by the fraternity as traitors and perjurers worthy of death. This is strategetical but it betrays both the genius and infirmity of the craft, tending only to confirm multitudes in the belief that those seceders are honest men who "dare to do right, to be true." Personal considerations might have controlled them, but they counted all things but dross for the excellency of the knowledge and welfare of the people. They have yielded obedience to the divine command, "If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil or to do good, whatever it may be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him, when he knoweth it, then he shall be guilty in one of these. And it shall be when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing."

Here we have the justification of seceders; and the law of God outruling Masonic laws. The poor captive Mason (when Masonry begins to make its imperative demand) discovers he has sworn to do what was hid from him and what his conscience and God forbids. Now he stands in jeopardy and suspense! On the one hand the immutable word commands, repent and confess. On the other, If you do, then remember the penalty due to your violated covenant. Unhappy mortal! He has now no alternative but to hate the one and love the other; hold to the one and despise the other.

But the great hue and cry of perjury amounts to little. Whoever violated a more sacred obligation than the man whom Masons delight to honor? He had sworn allegiance to the throne. Yet Washington unsheathed the sword of justice and cut the gordian knot of an usurper's power and hurled it headlong down! Many noble men on whose necks secret despotism bound its galling yoke have done the same. Let heavens benediction rest on them for they are worthy.

Concluding on this point let me say, Could Washington, the father of our country, look in upon us at this juncture of the nation's history and witness our vast subjectiveness to secret clans, his great heart would beat in anguish, his eyes become a fountain of tears.

Our second point is that Freemasonry is anti-Christian.

That Freemasonry does not appear to oppose or rail at Christianity, we must admit. That this is due to any sympathy for, or with Christianity, is yet to be learned. Indeed Satan, it is said, appears sometimes, "transformed into an angel of light." 2 Cor. xi. 14. "Profession is not principle," and yet we are not authorized to count profession vain, unless it lacks practical sustainment. Odd-fellowship, a well-known kin to Masonry, professes modestly to be a hand-maid to religion. Whether to run by its side on an equality, or before, to lend a helping hand to bring Christianity up to a higher plane; or behind to push it forward, we are not told; but Freemasonry elevates its votaries to the topmost round of the mystic ladder, far above the cloudy sky to some grand unknown lodge above.

That Masonry is a religion to accomplish this appears from its priesthood, altars, prayers, rituals, hymns, covenants, doctrines, burials, temples, etc. Then it professes to be divine and inspired of Jehovah.

"Hail Masonry divine,
Glory of ages shine,
Thou art divine."

So its ritual chants, together with: "Thy wisdom inspired the great institution." (Sickels Mon. p. 144, and 2d part, p. 34.)

Again, Sickels informs us that "Truth is the foundation of all Masonic virtues." And Grand High Priest, Perfect Prince Albert G. Mackey, caps the climax, assuring us that "Masonry is a religion" and "that all the ceremonies of their order are prefaced and terminated in prayer." (Mack. Lex. p. 371.)

This religious organization proposes to save its faithful disciples in heaven forever. An echo of 32 degrees, Rev. Dr. Lattimer, is heard: "Be true Masons and you will be true servants of God; then it matters not when nor where you die, you will drop away from earth, but heaven will have gained a new voice to swell the chorus of the redeemed." There may be a lingering doubt concerning the echo. Listen then to the voice itself from the four winds of Masonry, speaking authoritatively through Past Master, Past High Priest, Knight Templar, Past Junior Grand Warden, Grand High Priest, Past General Grand High Priest and Secretary General of the Supreme Council and so on, as follows: "Every good Mason is of necessity truly and emphatically a Christian," and "is assured of his election and final salvation." (Town quoted by Finney, p. 203–4, "If we, with suitable true devotion maintain our Masonic profession, our faith will become a beam of light and bring us to those mansions where we shall be eternally happy with God." (Sickels p. 79.)

What can be more plain than this? What institution can accomplish more? If it effected on a truly scriptural basis it is sublime! But let us enquire—

What is Masonic saving faith? Past General Grand High Priest Mackey says, "The only religious qualification required of a candidate is a belief in a God, and in his superintending providence," and that, "beyond this it does not venture." (Lex. p. 404.) Past High Priest Siekels says, "The foundation on which Masonry rests, is the belief and acknowledgment of a Supreme Being." (Ahin. Rez. p. 51.) At the installation of officers, the Grand Master reviews and confirms the worthy disciple: G.M.: "You agree to be a good man and true and strictly to obey the moral law?" Ans.: "I do!"

G. M.: "You agree to promote the knowledge of the mystic art?—I do?"

Herein is the whole of Masonic faith and moral fitness required or expected of a true and perfect Mason, and "beyond this," says Mackey, "it does not venture." All of which is summed up by him in a word, with authority as follows: "The religion of Masonry then is pure theism; on which its different members engraft their own peculiar opinions, but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge, or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry." (Lex. p. 464.)

This does not smack of Anti-masonic fanaticism! No, Mr. President, it is the "strong meat" of the divine institution! the true doctrine of the ancient craft. Theologically or doctrinally, Freemasonry is a religious brotherhood of theists, unentrammeled by any of the "petty and changing creeds extant. And "which can and will," says and which can and will, says the noted German historian, Steinbrenner, "educate the pious man far above" them all. (Stein. p. 13.)

Let us notice now the grand and precious results of the Masonic faith. Let Sickels, the Grand High Priest, speak first. "The lessons which the entered apprentice receive are intended to cleanse the heart." (p. 161.) "The rite of induction signifies the . . . death of vice and all bad passions, and the introduction to a new life of purity and virtue." (Sickels p. 54.) The "three degrees form a perfect and harmonious whole, nor can we conceive that anything can be suggested more which the soul of man requires." (Ibid. p. 189.) Grand High Priest Mackey says, "A Mason, who by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity is free from sin." Signified by Acacian. (Mac. Lex. p. 16.) Such is Freemasonry as a religious society.

The careful observer has noticed one particular feature of the Masonic faith that it carefully omits one tenet which is the foundation, the "chief corner-stone" of Christianity. The honest design of this is that offense may not be given to disturb the harmony of the brotherhood consisting of men of diverse opinions. The Mason is taught by Masonic Monitors, "to build up a spiritual house, and holy priesthood, to offer up sacrifices acceptable to God." But how? The words, "through Jesus Christ," are omitted by their Monitor, in quoting the above passage. But there can be no holy priesthood nor acceptable sacrifices, nor spiritual house built up, only through Christ. The apostle declares, "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." (Acts. vi. 12.)

From Genesis to Revelation, Christ is the "Alpha and Omega." This is "the rock" on which Freemasonry "splits." The introduction of Jesus into Masonry, would be to it what Samson's firebranded foxes were to the Philistines and their standing corn. "Masons (says Masonic authority) may entertain their own private opinions, these are left to God and himself. (Guide p. 15); but there must be no intrusion of them into the lodge." That is to say as

Home and Health Hints.

To polish tins: First rub your tins with a damp cloth; then take dry flour and rub it on with your hands, and afterward take an old newspaper and rub the flour off, and the tins will shine as well as if half an hour had been spent in rubbing them with brick-dust or powder, which spoils the hands.

It has been estimated that of 12,000,000 women in America, 11,000,000 wear calico dresses more or less; that the spirit of economy has, during the past year, induced them to forego one dress apiece from their outlay; that the average calico dress contains eleven yards, and that, consequently, there has been a loss to the trade by this retrenchment of 121,000,000 yards. This is nearly the entire product of all the mills of Massachusetts for a year.

Knives and forks may be fastened in their handles by the following: One pound colophony (obtained at druggists), eight ounces sulphur; melt, and when cool, powder. Mix one part of the powder with half a part fine sand or brick-dust, fill the handle cavity, heat the stem of the knife or fork and insert.

Kerosene oil is good for removing rust from cutlery. Saturate sponges with water and stand them on plates around and among window-plants. The object is to apply moisture to neutralize the effects of any furnace or grate heat.

In hanging paper, first pumice stone the wall and wash with size made of one ounce of glue to a gallon of water. See that the paste has no lumps and that the back of the paper is covered with it fully ten minutes before hanging.

On Cooking "Greens."—Every housewife thinks she can cook "Greens." It is the simplest of all dishes; and yet, in most cases, they are not well served, for much depends upon the manner in which they ars boiled. The water should be soft, and a tablespoonful of salt added to a large-sized pot of it, which should be boiling hot when the greens are thrown in; and then it should be kept on the boiling gallop, but uncovered until they are done, which can be told by their sinking to the bottom of the pot, and they should be skimmed out as quickly as possible into a colander, so that all the water will run out. Press them with a small plate, then turn upon a platter, add a large piece of butter, and cut up fine. Serve while smaking hot.—The (London) Garden.

No person should enter a sick room while in a state of perspiration, because in cooling off the pores absorb freely, nor should a person sit between the sick and the fire. Do not approach contagious diseases with an empty stomach.

Miss Sedgwick has asserted that the more intelligent a woman becomes, the other things being equal, the more judiciously she will manage her domestic concerns." And we add that the more knowledge a woman possesses of the great principles of morals, philosophy, and human happiness, the more importance she will attach to her station and to the name of a "good housekeeper." It is only those who have been superficially educated, or instructed only in showy accomplishments, who despise the ordinary duties of life as beneath their notice. Such persons have not sufficient clearness of reason to see that "domestic economy" includes everything which is calculatsd to make people love home and be happy there.

The Cream of Milk.

Few persons are aware, probably, of the extent to which the percentage of cream is influenced by the condition of the cow. At a Barre meeting of the Massachusets State Board Mr. Lewis, an old, experienced dairyman, said: I have taken a great deal of pains to test the value of milk that I have worked into cheese. I have graduated glasses for the purpose, and I have found a cow whose uniform percentage of cream was eighteen per cent reduced to six in twelve hours—not from any change of food, but from a little excitement.

"You gentlemen who make butter, be careful to adopt my advice and always treat your cow kindly and gently; never get her excited, because every ounce of excitement will take from the milk one per cent of cream. I have known a cow to be abused by a furious, brutal milker, and the percentage of her cream went down one half. It is astonishing what an effect excitement has on the percentage of cream in the milk a cow produces. You will be astonished if you will make the test and make it carefully. I have known a cow excited from natural causes to drop from fourteen to six per cent in twelve hours. So I would again repeat, whoever abuses his cow knocks out of his milk a large percentage of cream."

Salt should be furnished to all animals regularly. A cow, or an ox or a horse needs two to four ounces daily. Salt increases the butter in milk, helps the digestive and nutritive processes, and gives a good appetite. The people of interior Europe have a saying that a pound of salt makes ten pounds of flesh. Of course, salt only assists in assimilating the food, it does make not flesh nor muscle.

Sure Remedy for the Bots.—The department of agriculture publishes the following experiments which a gentleman from Georgia tried and found effective in dispelling that serious trouble in horses. About thirty years ago a friend lost by bots a very fine horse. He took from the stomach of the dead horse about a gill of bots, and brought them to my office to experiment upon. He made preparations of every remedy he had heard of, and put some of them into each. Most had no effect, some effected them slightly, but sage tea more than anything else; that killed them in fourteen hours. He concluded he would kill them by putting them in nitric acid; but it had no more effect upon them than water; the third day they were as lively as when put in. A bunch of tansy was growing by my office. He took a handful of that, added a little water, squeezed out the juice, and put some in; they were dead in one minute. Since then I have had it given to every horse I have seen affected with the bots, and have never known it to fail of giving entire relief. My friend had another horse affected with bots several years later. He gave him the tansy in the morning and a dose of salts in the evening; the next morning he took up from the excretions three half pints of bots.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows: "Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Price $1.35.

Quarterly Report of Cynosure Mail List.

The whole number of subscribers June 28th is 3,976. Exchanges 63. Total 4,039. Illinois has the first place on the list; Ohio the second; Indiana the third; Iowa the fourth; New York the fifth; Pennsylvania the sixth; Michigan the seventh; Wisconsin the eighth; Missouri the ninth; Kansas the tenth; Massachusetts the eleventh; Vermont the twelfth; Minnesota the thirteenth; Oregon the fourteenth; Connecticut the fifteenth; California the sixteenth; Ontario, (Canada) the seventeenth; Washington Territory the eighteenth; Maine the nineteenth, New Jersey the twentieth; Nevada the twenty-first; Virginia the twenty-second; Colorado the twenty-third; Georgia the twenty-fourth; Tennessee and Dacotah the twenty-fifth place. This report is not so good as we desired to give, but we hope it will incite our friends everywhere to renew their exertions for the increased circulation of the paper, and if they do we will be able to offer a more encouraging statement at the close of the new quarter upon which we have just entered.

Does your subscription expire in July? Three hundred of our subscribers can answer, "It does." Please renew it as early in the month as possible. Ask your neighbors and friends to subscribe with you.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

C & N-W LINES

This great corporation now owns and operates over two thousand miles of road. With one branch it reaches Racine, Kenosha, Milwaukee, and the country north thereof; with another line it pushes through Janesville, Watertown, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Escanaba, to Negaunee and Marquette; with another line it passes through Madison, Elroy, and for St. Paul and Minneapolis; branching westward from Elroy, it runs to and through Winona, Owatonna, St. Peter, Mankato, New Ulm, and stops not until Lake Kampeska, Dakota, is reached; another line starts from Chicago, and runs through Elgin and Rockford, to Freeport, and, via the Illinois Central, reaches Warren, Galena and Dubuque, and the country beyond. Still another line runs almost due westward from Chicago, and passes through Dixon, Sterling, Fulton, Clinton (Iowa), Cedar Rapids, Marshaltown, Grand Junction, Missouri Valley Junction, to Council Bluffs and Omaha. This last-named is the "GREAT TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE," and the pioneer overland line for NEBRASKA, COLORADO, UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA.

CALIFORNIA and the PACIFIC COAST.

It runs through the Garden of Illinois and Iowa, and is the best, safest, shortest and quickest route for OMAHA, LINCOLN, and other points in NEBRASKA; and for CHEYENNE, DENVER, SALT LAKE CITY, VIRGINIA CITY, CARSON, SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, and all other points west of the Missouri River.

If you want to go to Milwaukee, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, De Pere, Ripon, Baraboo, Eau Claire, Hudson, Stillwater, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Breckenridge, Morehead, Fort Garry, Winona, Plattville, Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Sioux City, Yankton, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, or a hundred other northren, north-western or western points, this line is the one you should take. The track is of the best steel rail, and all the appointments are first-class in every respect. The trains are made up of elegant new Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Coaches, luxurious Day Coaches, and pleasant lounging and smoking-cars. The cars are all equipped with the celebrated Miller Safety Platform, and patent Buffers and Couplings, Westinghouse Safety Air Brakes, and every other appliance that has been devised for the safety of passenger trains. All trains are run by telegraph. In a word, this GREAT LINE has the best and smoothest track, and the most elegant and comfortable equipment of any road in the West, and has no competitor in the country. It is eminently the favorite route with Chicagoans traveling west, north, or northwest, and is acknowledged by the traveling public to be the popular line for all points in Northren Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Dakota, Western Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California and the Pacific Slope.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway leave Chicago as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, Four through trains daily, Pullman cars on night trains.

For Winona and points in Minnesota, One through train daily.

For Dubuque, via Freeport, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Dubuque and La Crosse, via Clinton, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Sioux City and Yankton, Two trains daily. Pullman Cars to Missouri Valley Junction.

For Lake Geneva, Four trains daily.

For Rockford, Sterling, Kenosha, Janesville, and other points, you can have from two to ten trains daily.

Topics of the Time.

Negrophobists may have an opportunity to estimate the value of their opinions from the standpoint of a personal experience something after the following fashion. Last week suit was entered against a colored man in Washington city for ejecting a white man from his lodging house. The suit is brought under the Fifteenth Amendment and the whole question is a plain one of color, only white and black have changed sides in the scale. The ridiculous position of the opponents of the Civil Rights bill is too clearly seen in this case to need comment.

The Tilton-Beecher trial has at length ended in a disagreement of the jury, the inconclusive result which has generally been expected, and to outward appearances this six months vomit of scandal and sensation and perjury will be of use only to blacken the morals of community by familiarity through the press. The evidence has been so conflicting on the main points at issue that probably no twelve men who read the current news would fairly agree on a verdict. Whether there could be any profit to community at large to prosecute a dozen or so of witnesses for perjury is another question. The responsibility of enforcing the solemn legal oath and maintaining its honor rests with the authorities, who it is to be feared "care for none of these things." As for the case itself, if it could perish from the minds of men it would be a blessing. At the same time, some facts brought out aside from it are important to be remembered. The testimony may be said to fairly settle the characters of the principals in the suit. Both have compromised their Christian character, and have been guilty of acts that should exclude them from every church of Jesus Christ in the world until repentance. Contrition seems to be forgotten. Mr. Beecher publicly speaks his determination to go on preaching, editing, writing lives of Jesus Christ, whatever may be the tenor of public opinion or the decision of juries. In view of his confessions on the witness stand another spirit would better fit him for usefulness as a Christian man.

Columns in the daily press have been filled during the week past with the exploits of half a dozen American riflemen in Ireland, and the popular effect of their visit and victory on the future comity and peace of the nations magnified into vast importance. Not so much by far has been said in this respect of the labors of Moody and Pearsall Smith, of Varley and Morehouse, messengers of the Prince of Peace, under whose benign rule alone can we hope for any approach to international harmony. And on what do these great professions of peace depend? Why, that a few men selected from two nations, in firing at a mark, find it an agreeable pastime and the thousands who attend their game spend a half day of exciting idleness. The encouragement given to useless and cruel sport in all the rural districts of both lands, involving vast loss of life and expense of time and money by this notoriety, will hardly be compensated by the good felling begotten at a rifle match or in the revelry that follows.

When a Catholic priest reveals to the world the secrets of the Jesuit camp, he is eagerly believed by the enemies of Rome. But why should he be? He is a traitor, a "perjurer" according to the view of those whom he has deserted. Just now a Catholic priest is creating a sensation by publishing a pamphlet, in Bonn on the Rhine, in which he reveals the intrigues of the order of Jesuits. The Christian Advocate believes heartily in the book, and says: "The camp of the Jesuits is not often laid open to profane eyes, unless it be through the opportunity of some one whom they have disgusted with their deception and tyranny, and who turns against them in self-defense, and as a measure of justice to the cause of truth and liberty." It is certainly more natural than silly to believe the revelations of those who turn away from abominable or even doubtful systems. Yet we are continually told that the revelations of Freemasonry made by men like President Finney and others are unworthy of credence. Thus we might expect the fraternity to say. But the repetition of the shameful assertion ought not to be made by intelligent men outside the order.—Telescope.

Banditti.

Let it be supposed that portion of the people of the United States enter into a secret oath-bound collusion, binding themselves to do whatever their leaders order them to do, and especially if it be to oppose the laws and authority of the United States. It is immaterial what these men call themselves, or what their religious and "honorable" pretensions may be. A secret collusion is illegal, irreligious, and dishonorable, under whatever name it may be called. Names and pretensions are nothing, it is the thing that tells.

Now there are two ways of dealing with these collusionists; one is to let them have their own way, to murder and intimidate as they please; and the other is to declare martial law, and set up military courts to take the place of civil tribunals, which are useless.

Our constitution makes no provision for such a state of things; but let us suppose that military courts are established, as they were during the civil war for the trial of some of the lowest actors in the rebellion, and that a collusionist, guilty of a dozen murders of negroes and "low whites," or other republicans, is brought up before one to be tried. The court may consist of any number of members from five to thirteen, and two thirds of them in any case are necessary to pass a sentence of death.

Now if there should happen to be five Masons on the larger court, or two on the smaller one, and the accused is a Mason, how can a sentence of death be passed against him? And even if a sentence of death should be voted by two thirds of the members, the commanding General who is to approve of the proceedings might be, and as he would doubtless be a politician, probably would be a Mason; and the president, aiming at power, might be interested to increase disorder and give crime impunity in order to render his power more necessary. The chances are that the culprit would escape, with honor and sympathy.

But on the other hand, let us suppose that the president and the commanding General are true men, not members of any oath-bonnd collusion, and they make honest efforts to suppress the conspiracy; still their labors might be made to prove abortive by subordinates who are members of some lodge.

Let us suppose that the best general in the world discovers on the eve of battle, upon which the fortune of the government and of himself may depend, that some of his men and officers are exchanging Masonic winks, nods, and other signs with the men and officers of the opposing army, what would be the effect upon his own mind? Would he not be in doubt as to which commanded these, himself or the lodge? and the chance of war would indeed be chances, and nothing else but chance? The result would be confusion, and that kind of confusion that ends in anarchy; ard we all know the end of anarchy, if an end is possible under Masonic influence; it is absolutism, imperialism, military government.

We conclude that military power is not a remedy, but rather an aggravation of oath-bound conspiracies. The only possible way of getting rid of such conspiracies that we can see, is the one prescribed by our Anti-masonic society; which is as we understand it, that every voter shall enter into a covenant with himself, never, on any occasion whatever, to sustain any candidate for office with his vote, who is known to be a Mason, or a friend of Masons. The fruitful mother of all our rings and other conspiracies here in the United States, viz. Masonry, must first be got rid of if we wish to free the country from Banditti. F. H. C.

Putting Light under a Bushel.

BY REV. D. F. NEWTON.

They close their eyes, stop their ears, not one minister, deacon or class leader in a thousand opens his lips against secret oath-bound societies, that are eating out the very life of gospel purity and salvation. The question is hushed, stifled! Know it's so? that a conservative plaster is placed over this master-piece of Satan's devise ments? Let facts speak. Between three and four hundred ministers and missionaries have sat at our table during the last ten years ("A Christian boarding house," 303 West 20th street, N. Y.), and how many of this number of gospel teachers have had the honesty, the moral stamina, or holy boldness to open their lips in abjuring this cancer upon the body public?

One in fifty? No. One in a hundred? Doubtful! Wherefore this closing of eyes, the stopping of ears; this putting the light under a bushel? Has not the salt lost its savor? What sin did Christ cover? Paul, Peter, James or John? See 2d Timothy, iv. 1–8. During these ten years our center-table has been amply furnished with Anti-masonic reading, the testimonies of the greatest, wisest and holiest of men, against this leprosy of the age. Tracts, book, periodicals are placed conspicuously before the eyes of every boarder; and last, not least, is the Christian Cynosure, a two-edged sword of God's truth stabbing to the very vitals this hydra of hydras. Only a few days since a popularity seeking, time-serving minister sat at my right hand at the dinner table, the subject of secret societies was broached. I said to this son of the prophets, gently and kindly, "Why do you not expose from the pulpit and the press, this fellowshipping the unfruitful works of darkness? Why hush the question of secret oath-bound societies that are positively anti-scriptural, a sin against God." He replied, that he knew very little of these institutions, his father was a Mason and he took it for granted that Masonry was a good thing.

"A good thing," indeed, as Satan would have it! And why not look this subject in the face, examine the publications on my center-table? What! a watchman on Zion's top and know not what the devil is doing to destroy the lambs and sheep of Christ's flock?

Prosper? and cover sin, the vilest, the most devilish? Who says so? God? Not a word of it. Israel prosper and let Achan alone with his golden wedge? Prosper and not hew Agag to pieces? The very vitals of salvation are eaten out. The half told? Not a fiftieth part! Angels weep—heaven is veiled in sackcloth! The devils rejoice—hell is in jubilee!

The doctrine of worldly expediency and compromise is, of all sins, the most destructive, soul-ruinous, to both church and State. And at no sin does God thunder anathemas more terribly!

Mark what Christ says. "I spake openly, in secret have I said nothing." John xviii. 20. "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the house tops. And fear not them which kill the body but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. x. 27, 28.

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth, with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you. and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." —2 Cor. vi. 14–18.

Any relentings on the part of this elder in the ministry after listening to these quotations from the Holy Scriptures," say you, beloved editor? Not a moving muscle of penitency or openness to conviction was manifested. "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone." If the blind lead the blind, what then? "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up."

This is but a specimen of what is a cause of weeping throughout the land. Pres. C. G. Finney of Oberlin, Ohio, informs us that in one denomination of professed evangelical Christians, at least two-thirds of the ministers are connected with secret oath-bound societies, Freemasonry and Odd-fellows. If Israel could not move a step in conquest so long as one Achan remained in the camp, what now with the thousands and tens of thousands with their regalia, badges of gold, their goodly Babylonish garments?—Jos. vii. 19, 20, 21.

And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you. "If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts; I will even send a curse upon you, and will curse your blessings: yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart."—Mal. ii. 1, 2.

When Prof. C. A. Blanchard was delivering his course of lectures on the secret orders, in our city, bearding the lion in his den, severing the head of Goliah with Goliah's own sword, where meanwhile were the majority of the ministers and editors? Skulking? Yes! Hiding themselves? Yes, like moles and bats. Masonry is popular in New York. The temple of Dagon is here. "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." "Sir, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth. Not only this our craft is in danger to be set at naught, but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised . . . . whom all Asia and the world worshipeth." Acts. xix. 27.

While brother Blanchard was laying the ax at the root of this "Upas" tree, (Masonry) the cry of ministers and editors was, "Thus saying thou reproachest us also." Luke ii. 45.

Why was our brother Varley, while laboring in our city with so much zeal, interest and profit awed into silence on the question now under consideration? He was far in advance of our popular churches in rebuking popular sins. He ventured to touch on the corrupt press, popish idolatry in church building and adorning the pride of fashion; church gambling to collect money for religious purposes, or what is termed "pic-nic religion," &c. But did he put his hand into his bag like David and take thence one stone and sling it, that it might sink into the forehead of this Goliah sin, that it might fall upon its face to the earth? Did he? why not? Some of the pastors in whose churches he labored were Masons, members of the craft! What a golden opportunity offered to draw a bow at a venture, that Dagon might fall upon his face to the earth before the ark of the Lord.

And can it be possible that the Evangelists across the big waters are thus succumbing to this unclean, many horned beast from a man-fearing, time-serving policy? Sinners are converted to what is preached. Again, why are the orthodox churches of New England, and in other localities clasping semi-infidels to their bosoms; exchanging pulpits with Unitarians and Universalists, advertising and puffing their books and periodicals, fellowshipping the unfruitful works of darkness. Is not this renegade movement owing to a previous bowing to this Baal, this making a covenant with death and hell by Freemasonry?

"What concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" 2 Cor. vi. 15.

"Though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel than that which we have preached to you, let him be accursed."—Gal. i. 8.

"If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed: For him that biddeth him God speed, is partakers of his evil deeds." 2 John i. 10.

"Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord, and the cup of devils: ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and of the table of devils."—1 Cor. x. 20.

Take the case of Rev. A. H. Quint, D. D.; he was installed Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Freemasons in Massachusetts; and was Grand Chaplain at the time he called, attended, and was chosen Secretary of the National Congregational Council. He is said by the papers to be a Knight Templar, and Freemasons claim him as such. If so, he has drank wine from a human skull, and invoked double damnation on his head eternally if he violates his Templar's obligation. This same Dr, Quint, is the right hand man of H. W. Beecher, honey friends; and with Dr. L. Bacon. They declare publicly, that "they love Mr. Beecher, admire him, pronounce him innocent, superbly magnanimous," etc. And why should they not? "As in water, face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man."—Prov. xxvii. 19. "That which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."—Lu. xvi. 15. Can two walk together except they be agreed? How long these men may go on deceiving and being deceived, the Lord only knows.

"Will ye plead for Baal? Will ye save him? He that will plead for him, let him be put to death." Judges vi, 31. "There is an accursed thing in the midst of thee, O Israel: thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accursed thing from among you."—Josh. vii. 13. "To the law and the testimony if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

"'Satan's ways are movable.' Sin is gradual—it creeps in little by little—'But a coutinual dropping weareth away stones.' No man or woman leaps at once into the very arms of Beelzebub! 'Give Satan an inch, he takes an ell.'"

'Such is the way of an adulterous woman: she eateth and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness.'—'Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God.'—James iv. 4. 'And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, that they should believe a lie: That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness."—2 Thess. ii. 9, 12. Mark also: "I wrote unto you in anepistle not to keep company with fornicators. . . or covetous, or an idolater, or a railer, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such an one, no not to eat. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person. (For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: Whose end is destruction, whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.)"

Where is the Church of God that she allows in her membership such gigantic abominations? Were the thirty pieces of silver that Judas received denounced as unfit, and shall the church of God have nothing to say about this price of blood? Is sin to be excused because it is as high as heaven, or deep as hell? But the object of Satan has ever been to use the name of Christ to cover his own doctrines, so that

> 'While the heedless wretch believes,
> He makes his fetters strong.'

"The 'thieves' whose den was the Temple of God at Jerusalem asked only what those modern scribes grant, viz: to drive a worldly traffic in God's house and call it religion; to live in luxury and lust on conscience-money, and screen their vile conduct by a religious blind! But Christ evermore repeats his awful methods, and the last cleansing of his temple draws nigh. "For such are false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness; whose end shall be according to their works."—2 Cor. xi. 13,–15.

Once more and we close. Look at the editor of "The Church Union" boldly advocating Freemasonry, the conglomeration of all that is "earthly, sensual, devilish." And Oliver Johnson and H. W. Beecher, at the head of another union paper! Could Satan desire more efficient agents to further his diabolisms. Christian union so much desired by all God's true and faithful servants and for which Christ died on the cross, and earnestly prayed (John xvii. 21, 22, 23.) should be as pure as the Holy Spirit can make it.

Editors, beloved, we are fallen upon strange times. What are we coming to? That spoken of by Paul in Timothy ii. and 2 Peter ii. and Jude? "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and my people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end thereof?"—Jer. v. 30, 31. This compromising with the devil which I have but faintly depicted is worse than the game of Tetzel selling indulgences and on a much larger scale. The sin of Jeroboam, son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, become idolaters, by setting up two golden calves, one in Bethel and the other in Dan, (1 Kings xii. 28, 29,) is nothing compared to this idolatry and witchcraft in some of our churches!—Acts xvii. 30. "And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto earth, and to him was given the key of the bottomless pit.—And he opened the bottomless pit, and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace; and the sun and the air were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit."—Rev. ix. 1, 2. "The end is not by and by."

"Man of God, awake, awake!
For the foe is now abroad,
And the earth is filled with crimes;
Let it be our prayer to God,
O give us the men for the times!"

SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY.

ADDRESS OF REV. WOODRUFF POST.

The Genius of Freemasonry Hostile to our Government and Anti-Christian.

(CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.)

From Genesis to Revelation, Christ is the "Alpha and Omega." This is "the rock" on which Freemasonry "splits." The introduction of Jesus into Masonry, would be to it what Samson's firebranded foxes were to the Philistines and their standing corn. "Masons (says Masonic authority) may entertain their own private opinions, these are left to God and himself. (Guide p. 15); but there must be no intrusion of them into the lodge." That is to say as private men you may be religionists as you please; but you shall not intrude your truth or falsehood into Masonry; as good Masons you must be true theists—must reject Him who said, "I am the truth and the life; no man cometh to the Father but by me."

REPENTANCE.

Again, Masonry has nothing to say on the subject of evangelical repentance which is also essential to a saving institution. Though it did have at one time about 40,000 weeping between the porch and the altar, a repentance not to be repented of; who wiped off the dust of their feet against the craft and walked no longer with it.

To reject Jesus Christ is also to ignore all that Moses and the prophets wrote of him and to trample under foot all the offerings and sacrifices that typified his appearing as a sin-offering for the world. Does it not therefore reject the Bible? We have good reason to believe that it does, for Chase says, "To require that a candidate profess a belief in the divine authenticity of the Bible is a serious innovation in the very body of Masonry." (Chase Digest, p. 206.) The following caps the climax, cuts short all argument, and leaves no room for caviling, or doubt, namely: Blue Lodge Masonry (which is Masonry proper) has nothing to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was it would not be Masonry, it would be something else." (Digest p. 208.) This is just as we expected. The Bible is a creed book, from beginning to end. Freemasonry cannot possibly admit creed restrictions, as any one can see at a glance. "This," says Dr. Lattimer, a 32 degree Mason, quoting Dr. Might, "would destroy it as a common bond of humanity." So it would, for it would rend it into fragments. Soon would their "swords be beaten into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and each man would return under his own vine and fig-tree with no Masonic obligations nor penalties to make him afraid.

And yet so peculiar is Freemasonry it reminds me of two men disputing about the color of a reptile, as follows;

"'Tis green: I saw it with these eyes."
"I've seen it, sir, as well as you,
And must affirm again, 'tis blue:"
"'Tis green, 'tis green, sir, I assure ye,—"
"Green!" cries the other in a fury.
"Sirs," cries an umpire, "cease your pother,
It's neither one nor yet the other.
'Tis red, I caught it yesternight."
He ope'd the box, and lo, 'twas white.

One thing is plain, so plain that he may run that readeth, that Freemasonry professes a religious and saving character; vouchsafes to its true disciples, irrespective of the conditions of the Gospel, or of the Lord Jesus Christ, salvation from sin and eternal life, if its rituals and exponents have not the hardihood to broadcast the world with tissues of unparalleled falsehood. They teach on the basis of theism, "That Masonic faith with true devotion becomes a beam of light to save them in the blessed mansions above," that "the bond of Freemasonry is a threefold cord over which death even has no power and the deceased brethren yet live* * * and are yet bound to us (Masons) and we to them in the ties of eternal friendship, and after life's fitful fever they indeed sleep well." (Sickels p. 79, 94, and 384.) All this Freemasonry proposes and yet attaches no merit to Christ, not even so much as to mention his name in the fundamentals of the order.

Can this something, named Freemasonry, originating in its speculative character from lodges of practical or stone masons, and so far as we know earthly, sensual, devilish meeting in a rum tavern in England in 1717 to organize, be a divine institution and inspired of God as it declares itself to be? Combinations of good men and holy church organizations have been known to apostatize, but when have Christless or secular organizations ever arisen to the sublimity of sons of God? And yet we are presumptuously told Masonic faith becomes a beam of light to guide the devoted Mason to heaven. This "theism," deism! Yes, we would add the first vowel a, atheism; for how much is it short of this? True it confesses a God, otherwise its oaths would be valuelss. And valueless they are; rejecting the Son is equivalent to rejecting the Father. The Bible says, "Whosoever abideth not in the doctrine of Christ, hath not God." 2 Jno. 9. "Thus saith the Lord the king of Israel, and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts: I am the first and I am the last, and beside me there is no God." Is. xliv, 6. This strange infatuated organization mocks our lower religion, and says Steinbrenner, "can and will educate the pious man to that higher religion * * in which all men can agree * * * uniting on a plane of action far above the petty creeds which enter into the religious opinions of the world."

Again, its teachings are in direct opposition to the Bible. Masonry commands absolute secresy and perpetual. Jesus says, "Let your light shine before men," etc. "I spake openly to the world; in secret have I said nothing." Masonry says openly, "I command you to say nothing." The Bible says, "Whatsoever doth make manifest is light." Freemasonry, "That which conceals is light." "Swear not at all," is God's command. Masonry is all swear from first to last. Bible, "Thou shalt not kill." We have shown Freemasonry assumes the right to kill. Bible, "Seek not honor one of another" brethren, "and call no man master." "Be not ye called Rabbi." Masonry has many masters and Grand Masters, and seeks and lavishes honors without stint, title on title, up to Grand Pontiffs, All Puissants, etc. Jesus says unto such persons, "Woe unto you * * hypocrites, for ye * * indeed appear beautiful outward but within are full of all uncleanness." Matt. xxiii, 8, 10, 27. Bible denounces reveling and banqueting and such like. Gal. v. 21 and 1 Pet. iv. 3. The sacred halls of Freemasonry are uniformly occupied by the Royal craft for this purpose, grand balls, grand masquerades and revelings. Bible teaches, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame to speak of those things done of them in secret." Eph. v. 11. Freemasonry teaches to hide in darkness, and glories in the things done of them in secret. Bible teaches, "Love your enemies, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." Matt. v. 46. We are credibly informed by Finney, Bernard, Green and a thousand other seceders, and history is replete with illustrations that Masonry is a persecuting institution, that "Masons are sworn to persecute unto death any who violate Masonic obligations." (Fin. p. 102.)

Then; the benevolence of this institution cannot be universal, (confined to a limited few). Its pretentions to greatness in this respect are vain. It does what no Christian church, no humane institution would be guilty of. It excludes from its professed benefits the halt, the blind, the feeble, the diseased, the aged, the minor, and angelic, pure-minded woman.

It is a strong, steel-hearted, iron-nerved, robust, selected few of the masculinc order, reversing the whole scheme of the divine economy, and with great swelling words making merchandise of our sons and dividing our families, seeking evidently to subvert the Christian religion and destroy it that it may more effectually win to itself dominion and fleeting honors. A deistical or atheistical religion, just which you choose to call it, for it has just as much of deity, or God in it, as deism has of Christ and no more; professing superiority to all other religions and proposes to cleanse Masons from all sin and fit them for heaven: an institution, a religious order whose grand and princely halls throw open wide their massive doors to let grand banqueters and revelers, (in Sir Knight order) chase the midnight hours away till daylight dawn; that binds with bands stronger than iron each man's conscience to its stern decree; that swears its votaries by Christ-forbidden oaths its behests to obey; that swears eternal vengeance on all who lift the vail that hides the tragic scenes and mysteries from the outside world. Woe be to that man though conscience goads him to the task, there bides for him a torture worse than death! This guild, which as a Royal Arch Mason seceder has recently said, is utterly subversive of Christianity, denying the existence of Jesus Christ and the divine and sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, (Cyn. March 24, 1874) enters our sanctuaries, stands in our pulpits, controls our churches, rules the press, regulates trade, opens and shuts prison doors, creates cities of refuge for criminals, demands unqualified obedience, and, right or wrong, must be obeyed. This is the religious and political institution-crimsoned with blood, whose mandate many are obeying in their listless, inactive, bad policy, let-alone principle. This is the great Goliah which defies the armies of Israel, clad in its coat of mail riveted by oaths and penalities, terrible in appearance it demands the surrender of God's elect. How the terrible one mocks little David! Let "the stripling" lay off the king's armor and sally forth in the name of Israel's God, and with a sling in hand run to meet the giant foe—not from him—and hurl in faith the pebble from the brook. Goliah falls! A trophy and a victory's won. Let us, clad in the simple armor of truth and righteousness, endure, remembering that the race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong, and meet promptly the Goliah evil which boldly confronts and defies us. Let us courageously, in the name of our captain, King Jesus, press on. The terrible foe must fall who is out now deceiving the nations of the earth, which must eventually be given to our Lord and his Christ for ever.

ADDRESS OF REV. A. M. MILLIGAN, D. D.

Mr. President:—The subject on which I shall speak for a few minutes is

MASONIC OATHS AND OBLIGATIONS.

We often hear the remark from members of the order, "Once a Mason always a Mason," and the idea conveyed by it is, that the relation to the order is so sacred that nothing can sunder it. Something like the quotation coupled with the marriage relation, "What, therefore, God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." Still, for one cause, even the marriage relation may be sundered, but according to the maxim quoted the Masonic relation never may; its obligation is lasting as life, and, whatever other obligation inconsistent with it may be formed, must be superceded by this, which remains still binding. Furthermore, this idea is impressed upon the mind of the initiated by the terrible nature of the oaths administered. Let us then examine these oaths and obligations, to see what there is in them so binding.

A great mistake is entertained very generally in regard to an oath, that is that any person, under any circumstances and for any purpose may apply the binding obligation of an oath; as, for instance, that persons may bind themselves together for the most wicked and mischievous purposes as firmly as the husband and wife are bound by the marriage bond. That the pirate captain and his crew are as firmly bound together by it, as the members of a commonwealth and their ruler.

This is a very great and very dangerous mistake. To understand this matter properly we must remember that an oath is a divine institution or ordinance, and that it derives all its solemnity and binding force from the fact that when it is properly administered God himself becomes a party to the compact which it is intended to seal. The whole power of an oath consists in the certainty that God will punish its violation. That he can punish it, is evident. His omniscience can detect, and his omnipotence can inflict the penalty. But the question remains, will he? Will God bind every engagement which men please to make in his name by a divine penalty? Will he inflict every curse which profanity pleases to call down upon itself? Nay, verily, God has never engaged to do the dirty work of every foul-mouthed blasphemer, or to bind the impious obligations of every conspirator. That would be putting divinc perfections to a very degraded use indeed. He will punish profanity, but that is a very different thing. The threatening appended to the third commandment, "The Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain," has two applications: the one is that God will punish profane swearing or the improper taking of an oath; the other is that God will punish the violation of an oath propcrly taken. But these are very different; in the latter case God enters into covenant binding himself to punish the infraction of an agreement made in accordance with a divine ordinance, in the other God threatens to punish the profanation of a divine ordinance. The question then arises, How are we to distinguish between these two things? When is swearing the exemplification, and when is it the profanation of the divine ordinance of the oath? I answer: when it is taken in accordance with the divine institution it is the one; when otherwise, it is the other. As for instance the relation to be constituted by it is a divinely instituted relation, such as the family relation. Malachi, ii: 14, "The Lord hath been witness between thee and the wife of thy youth—the wife of thy covenant." Matt., xix: 6, "What, therefore, God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." So also in the constitution of a State, Rom., xiii. 1, "The powers that be are ordained of God," v. 3 and 4, "for the the ruler is the minister of God to thee for good." The relation of the citizen to the State, and of the officers to the State, are divinely instituted relations to which God is a party, and should be constituted by oath; v. 2, "They that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." So also in the constitution of the church, which is another divine institution; Matt., XVI: 18, 19, "On this rock will I build my church and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, and I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," etc. Here are three relations into which persons are brought, and which are essential to human happiness. God is the author of each of them, and in order that they may secure the end of their institution, and give that confidence which is essential to society God has given to them the solemn sanction, that when they are constituted in his name and in accordance to his institution, he will hold the parties forming them to their engagements under penalty of his vengeance. Can any one for a moment suppose that God could bear the same relation to conspiracy or could give to the parties forming it the right to use the solemn sanction of an oath binding God to punish the breach of the bond that holds them together. Such a thought is utterly inconsistent with the divine nature. But more, no organization that has not a divine institution and authority from God to make him a party to its formation, has any right to use his name or employ an oath as the bond of its existence. Any such use of the oath is therefore unwarranted, and consequently a prostitution and profanation, not a proper administration of it, and consequently the sin is in the making not the breaking of it.

Again, as the administration of justice is essential to the existence of the state, and as discipline is essential to the purity and perpetuity of the church, and as these can be maintained only by faithful testimony, God has given to the state and to the church authority to arraign witnesses before his omniscience and omnipotence, and expose them to his wrath if they fail to testify the whole truth in order that their motive to testify the truth may be stronger than any possible motive to withhold it; and even these divinely instituted authorities have no right to administer an oath except in matters of great importance in the maintainence of justice and purity, otherwise even their administration of the oath becomes a profanation, a "taking of God's name in vain." Blackstone, book ix. p. 137, says "the law takes no notiee of any perjury but such as is committed in some court of justice, having power to administer an oath, or before some magistrate or proper officer invested with similar authority, in some proceeding relative to a civic suit or criminal prosecution."

Dr. Jenkins on The Oath, p. 193, says: "Before any association of men should dare to tender the oath they must be able to show that God is a party to the compact under which they are associated; and that by virtue of that compact they may exercise sovereign authority. No society has a right to call upon God to be a party to the covenant of the oath until they can show that they "are ordained of God." But this no merely voluntary society can do: and we therefore conclude that all oaths administered by the authority of such are extra-judicial and an abuse of the ordinance."

If the interpretation which I have given of the oath and its proper application be true and I have shown its correctness from Scripture and from the highest authorities in law and theology, then it follows that oaths used in constituting a Masonic fraternity, or by that fraternity in the induction of its members, are extra-judicial, and consequently of no binding force whatever.

What then? are they a matter of indifference? Is it of no consequence whether a person takes them or not? By no means. It is a profanation of a most solemn ordinance, as much so as a company of boys administering the Lord's Supper. Nay more; it is a deception, an imposition on those uninformed as to the true nature of an oath. This is true no doubt both of those administering and of those taking the oath. They are made to believe that the oaths they take are of the most binding nature, and to increase this impression terrible penalties are appended to the oaths such as "to have my throat cut across and my tongue torn out by the roots—to have my left breast torn open and my heart and vitals taken from thence, etc. And to have my body severed in two in the midst and divided to the north and south, and my bowels burned to ashes. To each degree they are initiated by a renewal of these spurious oaths, and the addition of new and more horrible penalities to increase in the minds of the eandidates the sense of his obligation.

Why all this? In the criminal eourt, where the life of a prisoner is at stake in the testimony of a witness, he is sworn "So help me God." In the naturalization of a a citizen, or the inauguration of the officer in whose hands is intrusted the nation's safety, the oath is simply "As I shall answer to God," but to keep the seerets of the order or of a brother Mason, not only is the oath reduplieated in its most solemn form, but these terrible penalties are appended. Why? Evidently to impress upon the members the idea that their obligations to the order are superior to every other obligation, that they owe a higher loyalty to the lodge than to their country or to their ehurch, that they are more sternly bound to keep the seerets of a brother Mason than the witnesses' oath ean bind them to reveal his guilt. Henee it is no uncommon thing to hear Masons say that if they had to leave their chureh or the order they would leave their ehureh, and if one of them under oath reveals Masonic secrets to charge him with "perjury."

But another question arises here: Who is to execute these penalties, "Cut the throat, tear open the breast, dissever the body and burn the bowels"? Evidently not God; he never threatened or inflicted sueh penalties as these for the violation of oaths. These are only temporal penalties and such as men can inflict; God's penalties are infinite and eternal. Either these penalties are fietitious and intended only to frighten the simple-minded, or they involve the idea of power vested in the order "by the consent of the governed" to infliet the penalty, and imply the creation of a government with the power of life and death, a government within a government, a conspiracy against the government.

The well attested murder of Morgan and the mysterious disappearance of others obnoxious to the order, strongly corroborate this theory of the character and claims of the institution, that it exalts itself above all authority and power and "as God sitteth in the temple of God, proclaiming itself to be God."

Thus I have, I hope to the satisfaction of every thinking mind, shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory, that God has no part in them, that they are a profanation of his ordinancc of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God, and the ban of outraged society; a great sin to make them but no sin to break them. Are then their promises not binding? A promise is binding so far as it is consistent with duty, but the moment it conflicts with duty it is null and void; no pledge of ours can annul divine obligation, or create an obligation in conflict with it.

ADDRESS OF REV. HENRY COGSWELL.

The Religion of Royal Arch Masonry.

Mr. President and Friends of the Convention:

It is proposed that I should address myself more especially to Royal Arch Masonry. I should have been glad to have spoken on the Blue lodge work, as I have a wider field of experience in it; having held offices in that lodge for several years. If there is any choice between the blue and Royal Arch, I think the Blue is less objectionable from the fact that all of Masonry really and truly is contained in the first three degrees. All the other degrees are a compilation of mere absurdities, interwoven into systems of meaningless nonsense, studiously avoiding and ignoring the name of Christ, from whom, and through whom the fabric of religion was laid in Zion and has been reared and built up in time, and given forth to the world to enlighten its moral darkness.

This is the only religion needed to meet man's neeessities in life, and raise him to the glory prepared and secured by the work and mediation of Jesus Christ. Away then with that flippant nonsense and meaningless mummery purporting to be instituted by Masons to polish man as a spiritual stone for that temple abovc—that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. And mark you all, this is to be done without the mediation of Christ.

It was morc than an ordinary pastime, more than an ordinary experience, more than an ordinary danger to the church of Jesus Christ and to individual Christian life that brought me before this Convention. Without any special inducement on the part of the Anti-masonic movement to release myself from this thraldom I yearned in my inward feelings to throw off the shackles which had bound me for some years, and which are binding thousands to-day.

The insidious influence of Masonry I have had to lament in many respects, and the first awakening I underwent was to look around in a lodge of 300 members to find not one that I could regard as a Christian. I felt truly guilty, and that I was in my wrong place; but having some moral stamina; a great veneration for the name of God; a warm concern for, and love to the cause of Christ my Master, I steered clear of the breakers, and came out of the lodge without making shipwreck of faith.

A few years ago a company of infidels met together in a town in Wisconsin, for the purpose of celebrating the Lord's Supper in burlesque. Before the sun went down that night, it was said that not a man of them had a home standing. They were all consumed by fire. The just judgment of God came upon them quickly.

Some years ago a company of play actors undertook to perform the crucifixion of Christ; when the judgments of God came upon them and struck the perpetrators in that scene with blindness and death as they were infringing upon the longsuffering of God; hence they received their reward.

I address you as having been a Royal Arch Mason. While passing through these degrees I felt all those engaged in it were playing with sacred things in burlesque, much like the persons I have just quoted. I went through these degrees mechanieally with a kind of shudder, feeling as a Christian I was out of place, to hear ungodly men making use of Scripture in the initiation of meaningless and useless ceremonies.

In 1666 occurred the great fire of London. Of course there werea great many masons and carpenters and others employed in rebuilding the city, who framed themselves into societies ealled clubs. Four of these clubs or societies joined together, and in the year 1717 formed the first speculative lodge of Freemasons, at the Apple-tree tavern, London; from whence has arisen all the lodges in England, America, and all other parts of the world. But what is Royal Areh Masonry? It is simply four degrees compiled from the Old Testament, with many important passages of Scripture taken from the New, perverted, garbled, and used to meet the purpose for which it was intended so as to form a kind of system.

The Chapter Mason looks rather disdainfully upon the mere Blue lodge Mason; so that a Mason to be respectable must be hurried into the Chapter. He will be informed that it is in the Chapter he will have his eyes opened, and where he will see the beauties of Masonry; and when he has gone through the Arch degrees the perfection of Masonry is yet to come; it is in the Commandery or Knight Templar degrees because there are no Jews in it. Christ is studiously and intentionally kept out of sight in the Blue lodge, and the Chapter or red lodge of Royal Arch Masonry.

Arch Masonry is composed of four degrees: Mark Master, Past Master, Most Exeellent Master, and Royal Areh. There is mueh to be said on these four degrees, but we ean only give you a few leading thoughts on some of the main points in the short space allotted to us.

Royal Arch Masonry appears to have been an attachment to the three first degrees, and worked under that charter. When it was dissevered Masonic writers have been in dispute, until the venerable Oliver settled the vexed question. This Masonic writer states that it was dissevered about 1740, or about 23 years after the establishment of Masonry proper; "and hence became separate degrees." In America it was not until 1798, about eighty-one years after that a Grand Chapter was formed, according to Mackey's Book of the Chapter, page 96, 97. And yet they palm this Arch Masonry off upon the credulity of its votaries as being very ancient, and established by King Solomon, Hiram king of Tyre, and Hiram Abiff.

The more the mind becomes enlightened as to the true nature of Masonry, the more we shall see of its lying and deceiving pretensions, and how utterly it is at variance with all Scripture record and teaching. Through the murder of Hiram Abiff, (which never occurred, mark you), it is said the Master's word was lost, and another substituted, "Mah-hah-bone." Then after the establishment of the Arch degrees the true word was found, and yet Arch Masonry was not established till about 23 years after and 81 years later in America. For the information of those who are not conversant with Masonry I wish to enumerate here the penalties attached to the first seven degrees, which I have passed through, and can therefore vouch for their accuracy.

The Entered Apprentice penalty: Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my throat cut across, my tonguc torn out by the roots, and my body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low water mark—where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours.

The Fellow Craft penalty: To have my left breast torn open and my heart and vitals taken from thence and thrown over my left shoulder, and carried into the valley of Jehoshaphat, there to become a prey to the wild beasts of the field, and vultures of the air, if ever I should prove willfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath or obligation.

The Master's penalty: To have my body severed in two in the midst, and divided to the North and to the South; my bowels burned to ashes in the center, and the ashes scattered before the four winds of heaven; that there may not the least track, trace or remembrance remain among men or Masons, of so vile and perjured a wretch as I should be, should I violate this my solemn oath and obligation, etc.

Mark Master's penalty: Binding myself under no less a penalty than to have my right ear smote off, that I may forever be unable to hear the word; and my right hand chopped off as the penalty of an impostor, should I prove willfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a Mark Master.

Past Master's penalty. Binding myself under no less penalty than in addition to all my former penalties, to have my tongue split from tip to root that I might forever thereafter be unable to pronounce the word, should I ever prove willfully guilty of violating any part of this my solemn oath.

Most Excellent Master's penalty: Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my breast torn open, and my heart and vitals taken from thence and exposed to rot on the dung-hill, if ever I violate any part of this my solemn oath or obligation. And lastly,

Royal Arch penalty: Binding myself under no less penalty than to have my skull smote off and my brains exposed to the scorching rays of the meridian sun, should I knowingly or willfully violate or transgress any part of this my solemn oath or obligation of a Royal Arch Mason.

Now friends, these penalties would pretty well demolish a man if carried out to their legitimate end. I have given you in brief the exact penalties and imprecations which every man who enters these lodges takes upon himself, be he saint or sinner.

Now I wish to say to this audience that it is presumption of the worst kind to make God a party to any such imprecations. Oaths can only be binding as they effect God's moral laws and government. These oaths and penalties instituted by the lodge seek to make God the abettor of evil, the supporter and sanctioner of a system antagonistic to his own revealed law; and virtually abrogates or nullifies the whole system of human redemption as wrought out by Jesus Christ. The libertine, the pirate, the gambler, the highway robber, and murderer may all swear to each other making God a party to it.

But does God become a party to any such procedure? Not at all. Neither is he any more a party to these lodge scenes, oaths and impreeations than he was to the Wisconsin infidels, or play-actor's crucifixion seene; and I have often thought what a merey God does not visit these lodge proceedings with his justice and indignation.

In the fourth or Mark Master's degree we have several seenes enacted. The first was that of pretended key-stone affair, too long to be gone into now only to say they heave it over the shoulder among the rubbish and for a time it was lost. Second scene; the craft receive their wages by putting their hand into a window and each receives a penny; but the candidate came very near losing his hand as an impostor. Third scene is the obligation and bringing this stone, (heaved once) to light again. During the different parts of this degree there is much application of Scripture to this unmeaning ceremony. They repeat a number of passages from the book of Psalms such as this: "The stone which the builders refused is become the head of the corner;" also portions from the New Testament, as they walk four times around the lodge, each verse is repeated at the stations. But God never intended his word of prophecy to be used for any such business. After this the stone is again brought to light from the rubbish pile, and the Master applies this passage to the scene: "This is the stone which was set at naught of you builders, which is become the head of the corner." Aets xiv. 11. The Master reads again: "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth, save him that receiveth it." The candidate then receives the new name, which is the initials on this stone: H. T. W. S. S. T. K. S.

Now friends, in the books of Kings and Chronicles we have no such accounts of any key-stone being lost or found; neither of the paying of these eighty thousand workmen. But Masonry says it is. There are many other parts of Scripture applied to this degree which we cannot stay to examine.

The Past Master's degree is considered by many Masons to be of but little account. It is in this the candidate is made to pass through all the burlesque of acting as a Master, and knowing nothing about it, we therefore pass to the Most Excellent Master's degree. In the two following degrees I was made to feel especially how wicked it was for Christians to uphold such a procedure. After the brethren assemble around the altar in a circle they all kneel on the left knee and join hands. Then the Master reads the following verses from Psalms xxiv: "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof; the world and they that dwell therein. For he hath founded it upon the seas: and established it upon the flood. Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? Who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. Lift up your heads, O ye gates," [here a kneeling brother arises,] "and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the king of glory shall come in. Who is this king of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the king of glory shall come in. Who is this king of glory? The Lord of hosts, he is the king of glory."

The Most Worshipful Master advances towards the circle of kneeling brethren taking those steps when reading relating to the King of glory. These beautiful passages were uttered in prophesy by David, and relates to the ascension of Christ, after he had suffered, died, and rose again from the dead. Then he led his disciples out to the Mount of Olives and ascended up to heaven to be received, as David speaks, by the angelic hosts as the King of glory, where he now reigns as King; and will reign until the end of time; and when all things are accomplished then he shall deliver up to the Father his mediatorial office.

What this ceremony of Masonry has to do with the ascension of Christ and his mediatorial reign, I leave any man of common sense to judge; and how it can be applied with any propriety to such a scene, "judge ye."

During this ceremony, and while the members all join hands in a circle, the Master reads the first four verses of the seventh chapter of Chronicles, as follows: "Now when Solomon had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house. And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord, because the glory of the Lord filled the Lord's house. And when all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord upon the house, they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement and praised the Lord," etc. After this they all kneel and repeat six times, "For his mercy endureth forever," and bow their heads to the earth. During this ceremony away up to the cciling is a wire, and down this is sent a sponge saturated with spirits, into an incense-pot, which it sets on fire; representing the fire from heaven and filling the house with His glory.

During this ceremony I felt afraid to be there; a shudder, a fear crept over me. It seemed so presumptuous and blasphemous.

The Royal Arch degree. This degree is so lengthy between the ceremonies, obligations, and the reading of Scripture, that we cannot give more than a few extracts.

The High Priest asks the Captain if he is a Royal Arch Mason. He answers, "I am that I am." Then the principle sojourner says; "His duty is to bring the blind by a way that they know not, to lead them in paths they have not known, to make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight." "These things will I do unto them and not forsake them." [The candidates then pass under the living arch.] "Stoop low brethren; he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

In another part of the ceremony this language is used; that they are members of a society founded upon the principles of everlasting truth and universal philanthropy.

WAVERLY, Iowa, June 28, 1875.

DEAR K.—This is one of the beautiful spots of earth upon which is still to be seen many traces of Eden's beauty and the fruitfulness of an uncursed soil. My first personal acquaintance with the citizens of this village was on Friday last, and my brief stay among them has been so agreeable that I shall long cherish the memory of this visit with pleasure.

Bro. Kiggins opened the work here about a year ago with his accustomed vigor and thoroughness and left with the warmest sympathy and confidence of our friends, and as an evidence of his efficiency the "craft" have been moved to the use of their accustomed "compliments." Other lectures followed and the work is going forward.

Among the friends in this place to whom our cause is much indebted for its success I can mention only a few and they are already known to the readers of the Cynosure. P. Woodring is himself a host, and, although young in years, he has so learned of Jesus as to be a terror to the evil doers of the lodge. Bro. H. M. Woodford, like the patriot Putnam with the wolf, goes right down into the "den" and sends his hissing missiles of truth right between the glaring eyes of this creature which is now chased to his hole and there held at bay by the free discussion now prevailing. Bro. Adam Smith, a man, quaint, original, fearless and uncompromiisng, gives the craft both the Dutch and the English of it. So the work goes on and I go on to Clear lake at 1:50 P. M.

ELY HOUSE, CHARLES CITY, Iowa, June 29, 1875.

This is one of the hotels deserving the patronage of those who desire comfortable entertainment on reasonable terms. The proprietor, and experienced host, is attentive to the wants of his guests, and evidently has not adopted as his, that miserly greed so popular among hotel-keepers, that the chief end of man is to make the most money possible with the least possible outlay. If you are passing this way give him a call, and you will need no passport "of grip or mystic sign" to insure you of due attention.

The storms have been terrific through these parts of late and travel both by rail and wagon road much interrupted. Bridges and culverts have been swept away and I hear of only one path that remains unobstructed, and that is the "Path of the just which shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Indeed the King was here and passed over this highway himself during the storm and bridged its every chasm.

I was detained yesterday by twice failing to make connections and thereby compelled to remain here for twenty-four hours. I have been endeavoring to improve the time for the Master. I attended a tent meeting last evening and listened to a discourse from the words, "Let me alone," by the somewhat celebrated Mrs. Van Cott. The sister evidently felt that she not only comprehended, but commanded the situation and intended that her hearers should not long remain in ignorance of the fact. Crowds here as elsewhere are attracted to her meetings and great good undoubtedly will result from her efforts. I am not disposed to criticize, but as this erratic preacher expressed supreme contempt for public opinion, I may be warranted in saying that one who listened attentively to and prayed earnestly for the preacher would have been more edified in hearing what Christ had done and less of the achievements of the preacher, and her utter disregard of the opinions of those who were so dreadfully unfortunate as to differ with her.

I had an earnest conversation with a number of the craft on the train yesterday in which much feeling was manifest, particularly by a few, who apparently was restrained from violence only by a want of opportunity.

Before my mission was known I learned here that an Anti-masonic lecturer had been egged at Mason City quite recently and I said, Thank God! Christ is passing this way and the devils are beginning to foam and rage preparatory to their expulsion. These Gadarenes are inhabited by evil spirits, devils, and devils depart at Christ's bidding, but just before their expulsion they are often permitted to give the most convincing proofs of their malignaty.

Bro. P. Woodring of Waverly is with me and while I am writing he is distributing tracts and disposing of books on the streets. He is a choice young man whose life once given to his country but mercifully spared through four years of the rebellion is now consecrated wholly to the Master. May God bless him and his excellent wife and the four beautiful lambs gathered in their sanctuary of love at home.

Jottings From the New York Field

During the winter and early spring I had so much encumbered the columns of the Cynosure, and so steadily kept myself and doings before its readers, that modesty, at least, seemed to demand that I should keep still awhile, and give other agents a chance to be heard, and then, my work in Monroe, Livingston, Genessee, Wyoming, Tioga, and Chautauqua counties, with a little in Connecticut and Pennsylvania has kept me so constantly employed that I have had but little time or strength for writing up that which I can assure our friends has not been without incident as worthy of note as any about which I have previously written. Perhaps I may recall, and give the friends an inkling of how matters have been going on my field of late.

First, I gave two lectures in Rochester, under the auspices of that true friend of our principles and cause, Rev. Woodruff Post. The first was given in the Free Methodist church to a large, intelligent and apparently interested congregation. The second in the new City Hall, on whose corner-stone is engraved the Masonic label, or libel, as an old gentleman I sometime since heard of, seemed to think it. Riding by a building, which, like our hall, had on its corner-stone the letters A. L. 587, he stopped and in apparent surprise repeated to himself "A. L.—A. L. Humph, a lie! Get up old horse."

Here the congregation was small, but made up of a different class, among them some Masonic lawyers, one of whom tried to make some disturbance. One, a gentleman of some note, a Mason and an Odd-fellow, placed himself on the front seat where he could get a fair view of the speaker, and where the speaker could as well take note of him. This gentleman, at first, bore on his face a half amused sort of look, which seemed to say, "Here is a speaker who is going to talk about that of which he must be wholly ignorant. It will be sport to hear him!" I caught his look and read its import, and was at once en rapport, as the Spiritualists have it, with him. As I began he took out pencil and paper, and seemed to be taking notes. But as I developed the subject, referring to the Masonic oaths, as actually sworn to before a Rhode Island Legislative Committee by members of the Grand Lodge of the State, as well as before the courts of this State, by high adhering Masons, it amused me to witness the change which gradually came over the features of my friend. That first look, partly sportive, somewhat supercilious, just shading off into a sneer, gave place to one made up of different ingredients, i. e., surprise, conviction, indignation, etc., on the advent of which he gave up writing and gave me his undivided attention till the close of my remarks. I hope he was profited. I was by such a listener. I often have them, and sometimes get the confession, "I have learned more of Masonry to-night than I ever obtained in the lodge room."

I found an open door in Batavia, Morgan's last earthly home, through the efforts of that true and fearless Anti-mason Norris Gay; and with him also found a home. I gave three lectures here which were well attended, with no noticeable attempts at disorder. The craft was well represented and were kindly invited to reply; but they evidently thought it would not pay, and so by silence gave assent to what I said. One member of a lodge, who only heard one lecture, said to friend Gay, "The lodge will never have another dollar of my money;" and some who had been thinking of joining the lodge, after hearing me through, said, "We have had enough of Masonry—we'll never join them now."

Among other names given me to call on as Anti-masons was that of an old Presbyterian deacon. Upon interviewing him I found him to be an adhering Mason. He said, however, that he remembered Morgan well; said he brought him into the place from Canandaigua, when he first came to B. Among other remarks he made was one to the effect that both parties, Mason and Anti-mason, were to blame in that affair—Morgan's murder. By this it became apparent to me that I was on a strange scent, in other words was "barking up the wrong tree," so I soon bowed myself out; the good old brother, though evidently interested, not even asking me to stay all night. Would I have stopped had he asked me?—Ahem! hem.

Masonry is very strong here; but has evidently had enough of defending the institution by rowdyism and murder. There is a more effective way to reach their ends, and vastly safer. I mean to speak of this at some future time. I sold many books here, Greene's Broken Seal among them. These will bring fruit in due time.

But it is painful to witness the fear of the institution which fairly freezes the blood of business men, of professional men, and ministers and trustees of churches, and this is almost daily growing in intensity, and shameful as the fact is, I am glad of it. Go on Messrs. Masons, and with your shameless allies, the jacks, male and female—who "don't know anything about Masonry, and don't want to," and who yet will fight for it to the bitter end—go on, and bind these cowards with your cords till the tension causes them to break, as break they will; but then look out for the thunder and the lightening too, with which the gathering clouds of a long-suffering people's is surcharged. "Oppression will make a wise man mad." Sons of freemen will not long be slaves. The God of freedom lives, and hates oppression as of old, and though Red seas may still cross the pathways to each promised land He knows how to lead the oppressed ones safely through and drown their tyrant in the waves. More anon,

The Meeting at Waverly, Iowa.

June 28, 1875.

DEAR BRO. K.:—Although only a little more than two weeks have elapsed since we held our county convention at this place, and several good lectures given, you will perhaps think we are determined not to let the "iron cool," as we have just closed a series of three lectures. Bro. Stoddard, the General Agent, very agreeably surprised us on Friday last in the afternoon by dropping off here on his way to the State meeting. We immediately set to work publishing a lecture for the evening and had it pretty well advertised, but a heavy rain and thunder storm coming at the very hour of the lecture prevented a full attendance; but those who did come were edified and well repaid for coming.

On Saturday, bills were sent all over the city announcing a lecture for that evening, and, though a storm was raging fiercely, a better audience was present, and a very excellent lecture delivered on the relation of secret societies to our civil government. This lecture was well spoken of by those who heard it, but it was only a "drop before a more copious shower." On Sabbath afternoon quite a good congregation assembled at Lashbrook's Hall to hear an address on the following resolution: "Resolved, that no man can be a true Christian and carry out the principles of Freemasonry." A lecture like this is heard once in a lifetime. For me to attempt to describe it would be futile, but I am assured that much good was done. Among the audience were four or five lawyers, one of whom was also a Baptist minister, and all belonging to the "Old hand-maid." Many more were Odd-fellows, Masons, grangers, etc. Good order prevailed, and the meeting closed without any disorder or ill feeling noticeable. Only the craft were so discomfited it was almost pitiful to behold. After the speaker closed his remarks he gave opportunity of asking questions, making remarks, confessing or denying his statements, but no one opened their mouths and so we closed.

People are thinking and the seed that has been scattered here is beginning to bring fruit and a great harvest is awaiting. Let us pray for the speedy success of our efforts. To-day we start for the State convention.

Yours in the truth, P. WOODRING.

Masonic Mob Argument in Iowa.

MASON CITY, Iowa, June 28, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Permit me to inform you how the Masons are meeting our arguments in this city. I have been quietly publishing an appointment for ten days, to lecture against Masonry. On last Saturday in my own town, where I have belonged to them, we could not get our own M. E. church, although we paid our portion towards building it; but we procured a large hall, and one of the proprietors of that being a Mason tried hard to prevent that, yet through the influence of the other and the money we went in, and I held the large audience for an hour and a half, though but few of the craft were present. Just at the conclusion of the meeting a Bro. Riley of Minnesota, a three degree Mason who has lately seceded and who is also a Methodist minister, came into the hall, and we immediately arranged for him to speak on the street at night. In the mean time the craft were excited, and soon after the exercises commenced one of the fraternity, a doctor, distributed a few dozen eggs among the boys and some of the jacks, and two or three times quite a number of them were thrown at us in the buggy where we stood and sat; thus demonstrating the fact that mob and death (if they dare it) are still the defenses the craft proposes to make. But the whole thing was a grand success for us, and the people see it as never before and our State convention to be held to-morrow and next day at Clear Lake in this county, will be better attended because of the demonstrations here. Some of the craft say that the disturbance hurt them more than all we could say, so mote it be. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. J. HANKINS.

ST. JOHN'S DAY, June 24th, 1875.

The "Lizzie Cassell," on board of which I wrote you last, arrived at Parkersburg, West Virginia, at "low twelve," on Saturday last. Having retired to my berth, I remained there until Sabbath morning. After breakfasting I took the ferry boat and crossed the Ohio river to Belpre. I found the Methodist Episcopal pulpit occupied by Rev. E. H. Dixon, the Presiding Elder, this being their Quarterly-meeting day. After listening to his discourse (which, by the way, was very good), I found brother S. C. H. Smith, of the Congregational church, who, after dinner, took me to the residence of Justus Alderman, a member of the M. E. church, and the leading merchant of the place, where arrangements had been made for me to stay while in Belpre; and I found it to be all that any one could desire as a home for pilgrims.

I accidentally formed the acquaintance of a brother of my host, while on the boat on Saturday evening, on this wise: It was late and many of the passengers having retired, some one proposed a game at cards, and in a few moments all were busily engaged (ladies and gentlemen) in talking of "trumps," and "aces," "jacks," etc., etc., but a solitary gentleman and myself, who were left to entertain each other. I found my strange companion to be intelligent and sociable, and soon learned that we were of one opinion as regarded polite (?) gambling. Soon, having learned that I had traveled some in the West, he asked how the grange flourished in that part of the country. I replied in rather a careful way, when he went on to say (not knowing what my views were), that he regarded the grange as a branch of Masonry, and "he thought secret societies were the great curse of our land." I was very much gratified at the boldness of the expression, but kept my feelings concealed, simply replying that I never had been a Mason, but had taken one degree in Odd-fellowship. He said they were to have some Anti-secret lectures in his town the next week, and upon inquiring I found he lived in Belpre. Our satisfaction at thus meeting was mutual. Rev. Dixon dined with him on Sunday, after which he accompanied him to his brother's where I then was. After some pleasant conversation, he went to attend to the communion service while I lay down and rested, having been broken of my rest by my almost incessant traveling and lecturing since the Pittsburg meeting.

In the evening Mr. Dixon came around to talk awhile on the secrecy question. He informed me that he was a Royal Arch Mason, and at once asked if I ever had been a Mason. I informed him that I never had; he then went on to ask, in the most gentlemanly way, "how I knew," etc. I referred to my witnesses, Finney of Oberlin, Thompson of Otterbein, and others. He then submitted the following interrogatory argument: "Suppose you should take into the bosom of your family a friend, to whom you should extend all the advantages of your home. And suppose, after you had thus given him every privilege within your power, he should suddenly depart from your fireside and relate the most monstrous falsehoods about yourself and family, what would you think of such a man?" "I would think, sir, that he was a most treacherous scoundrel." He smiled, as much as to say to those standing by, "make your own application of his admission."

"But Elder," said I, "suppose that instead of your illustration as it is, we change it a little. Suppose I induce my friend to come into my family, by fair promises of moral, social, and business advantage. And suppose that, after entering my family he finds that instead of the advantages promised, there is every disadvantage. I have swindled him out of his money; have brought him into intimate association with my family, which he finds to be, morally and socially degraded. And suppose that, disgusted and astonished at my hypocrisy, he leaves summarily and exposes me; what would you think of his course?" "I would think," said he, "that he did right." There was a smile passed, and the illustration dropped.

On Monday brother V. Alderman, my steamboat comrade, took me in his carriage a mile below town to a sawmill, where we borrowed a skiff and rowed over to "Blannerhassett's Island," where in 1806 was formed the conspiracy of Burr and the poor, misled and destroyed Blannerhassett. The island is about four miles long, and in the middle of the Ohio river. Its soil s exceedingly fertile and deep, and rarely fails to produce abundant crops. Feelings of sadness filled my heart as I stood where, seventy years ago the great, but bad Aaron Burr, the murderer of the good Hamilton, and the wealthy, refined, and noble family of the deceived and victimized Blannerhassett resided in a dwelling truly palatial, if the desoription of its site commonly accepted, be true. Only one clear and well-defined memento of their expensive improvement of the place remains. It is the well. Large, deep, and walled with stone, it will be a blessing in ages to come. A simple frame and windlass with an "old oaken bucket," is the means of securing its most pure and cooling draughts. I drew up a bucketful of the water, and slaked my thirst from a tin-cup hanging on the curb, and had the satisfaction of knowing that I drank from the same well from which Aaron Burr drank when it was new; and I felt no change in my mind. My ambition looked not toward an empire: but that pure, free, cooling water made me think of the scene at the well of Samaria, where "the water of life" was freely offered. And I said, "Lord give me evermore of this water." The island is occupied by persons who "knew not Joseph."

On Monday and Tuesday evenings I spoke in the Congregational church to fair audiences, and on Wednesday morning at six o'clock took the train for Marietta, Cambridge, and Kennonsburg, where next you will hear from me. Sincerely,

JOHN T. KIGGINS.

Bro. Kiggins at Kennonsburg.

KENNONSBURG, Ohio, June 28, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE.—The Rev. J. T. Kiggins came on according to promise and gave us two very interesting lectures on the 23d and 24th of June. The first evening he lectured in the town hall, the second we moved over to the M. E. church. The meetings were largely attended and I think brother Kiggins did much good in our town. I only wish we had thousands of such men as brother Kiggins. We are gaining ground in our township. We have about forty-five "Anti" voters. When we first commenced we only had about twenty-one. I think Bro. Kiggins' lecture will add more to our number.

Yours truly, J. W. M.

St. John's Day at Westville, Ind.

June 24, 1875.

DEAR BRO K.—The New Departure has come and Satan has come down with great power. I have just returned from a Masonic mock celebration of the birth-day of St. John the Baptist. It was held in a grove near the village and was well attended. Many of those present were Anti-masons, drawn there by their desire to hear and answer the arguments that could be made by the craft. Of the addresses, the first by Past G. Master Rice was by far the most systematic and elaborate, but they were all remarkable for bold assumptions and for a careful avoidance of the true issue. The Cynosure came in for a large share of denunciation, and its editor-in-chief was denounced by name as a slanderer and as having been convicted of slander. It was added that no one could tell "by what right he wrote Rev. to his name." He then proceeded to his subject, which was: 1st, What Masonry is not; 2nd, What it is.

He told us that (a) "It is not primarily a religious institution;" (b) "Not primarily an institution for the promotion of morality;" (c) "Not specially organized for charity," but (d); "It is primarily and essentially a system of universal brotherhood;" that receiving God as one common Father, it held all men as brethren, and that in recognizing this brotherhood it did in its nature and tendency make men religious, moral and charitable. Truly a beautiful theory, but what are the facts? This Masonic brotherhood shuts out from all possible participation more than five-sixths of the human family, and compels all those who would participate in its benefits to swear under death penalty to always conceal the real character of the brotherhood, even from those made dearest by the ties of nature or of grace. What right such an institution has to be called a universal brotherhood it would be difficult to tell.

The next speaker told us that Masonry could be rightfully judged only by its authorized standards, and he read from one of the monitors to show that a Mason must believe in a god, and that Masonry drew two parallel lines and gave us "a point within a circle" within which if the Mason should keep himself he would be a perfect man; but he did not tell us that this very symbol was derived from the ancient sun worship, and refers to things of which "it is a shame even to speak." He also told us that "a good Mason must believe that the Lion of the tribe of Judah can raise the dead," but he did not tell us that this Lion of the tribe of Judah must be recoganized by Masons as the Lord Jesus Christ, or that Christ might be rightfully named in the lodge.

The third speaker was Rev. Jewell of Danville, Ill. He told us that Morgan was a worthless fellow who "wrote the best exposition of Masonry he knew how," and then was hired to go into the Western wilds, and the pretense that he was killed, brought his publishers vast wealth. He said that "the Anti-masons had published an account of not less than four hundred persons who had either killed Morgan or seen him killed." After so many small witicisms and an apology to the ladies for not allowing them to participate in the lodge, there seemed nothing more to be said and the farce ended.

I will only add that I attended the semi-annual meeting of the Hamilton county Christian Association at Boxley, on the 19th, and gave eight lectures, leaving on the 26th. I spoke at Boxley, Spicewood, Millwood, Westfield and Eagletown, and became acquainted with, and enjoyed the hospitality of the following earnest workers in the cause: Rev. H. Teter, Rev. E. Teter, Peter Rich, Absalom Ballard, and others. I labored under the disadvantage of following in the wake of such eminent lecturers as J. Levington, Kiggins, Givens, Stoddard, and Pres. J. Blanchard,but found nowhere else such warm friends and such unselfish devotion to this reform. H. H. Hinman.

Saegerstown, Pa., and its Workers.

Ellington, June 20, 1875.

Friend Kellogg:—On my way home from Pittsburgh, I fell in company with our old tried friend of our cause, Mr. Shaw of Seagerstown, who invited me to stop over with him, and he would get me up a meeting. Of course I consented to do so, after our meeting should come to a close at New Castle.

I reached his place on Tuesday, about 10 o'clock P. M., and I really thought it was like unto the promised land we have read of, a land literally flowing with milk and honey. I wish we had a few thousand of such men and women as friend Shaw and his wife, conveniently scattered all over our land, we should soon see a vastly different state of things.

Our friend and a few oth ers are about purchasing the M. E. church in this place, so that the true friends of God and our country can have a place to meet, unbeholden to the secret orders that infest this beautiful little town. In consequence of this trade going on, it was thought best we should hold our meeting in the Wesleyan church, over the mountain, some three miles away, which came off on Wednesday evening. We had a full house, composed of Masons, Odd-fellows, grangers, and a sprinkling of "cowans." Good attention was paid to what was said about Masonry till the close, when the bees of the several secret hives began their buzzing—some cried one thing and some another, and from such demonstrations it was evident our shots had taken effect.

Yours truly, J. B. Nessell.

Correspondence.

Tremendous Shock.

Stupidity itself aroused and the very nerve of obtuseness struck! Nothing short of the shock of an earthquake could have reached the sensorium of an editor way in the village of Scranton, Pa., so as to apprize him of the fact (?) that the National Christian Association opposed to secret societies, is "first in the field" in nominating for the Presidency for 1876. Said association must excuse the editor of the Republican in his misstatements that this nomination was by that body and that J. G. Walker is the candidate, as the wonder is that such a fact in any form, should be "known at all" in such a place, by such a man. He has, we presume, never heard of James B. Walker, the justly celebrated author of the "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation" and other works of scarcely less value.

When facts, sadly misstated, can find their way to such places so as to be partially comprehended, or "known at all," it argues the existence of a moral earthquake in our land, nearly sufficient to shake deadness itself from the tombs. Brethren go ahead. Earth itself feels the shock even down to Hades and even the editor of the Scranton Republican knows that Anti-masons are going to vote as they think and pray. Tat.

Who will say Masonry is not Profanity?

Cincinnati, June 16, 1875.

I quote from Moore's Outlines of the Temple, page 20. He says: "If Masonry's outward splendors bespeak the habitation of divinity, go with me over its 'tisselated ground floor,' through its middle chamber," and into its holy of holies, and there you will see the altars and the fire and the divinity itself."

I would ask what fire can any one see? Assuredly none but the three burning wax tapers that surround the Masonic altar. One of white, typical of the Worshipful Master who sits in the East personifying the Rising Sun in the vulgar trinity, or the Polar Star as the All Seeing Eye and wisdom in the recondite trinity; one of blue, typical of the junior warden who sits in the South, personifying the meridian sun, in both the vulgar and recondite Masonic trinity; and lastly, one of red, typical of the senior warden, who sits in the West, personifying the moon and the Virgin of the Zodiac in the vulgar and recondite Masonic trinity, which trinity is consonant to all the ancient pagan religions and mysteries of the world. What divinity is it which is to be seen in the Mason's Holy of Holies?" All Masonic authors inform us that three rule a lodge, and that the three who do rule a lodge are the Worshipful Master, the Senior and Junior Wardens, and hence it is apparent that the divinity Mr. Moore refers to can be and is none other than these three ruling officers, who are symbolized by the three burning wax tapers at the altar, which tapers, as fire, Masonic authority informs us are typical of the divine presence. Now is not this profanity—is it not blasphemy of the worst sort? Can it be that sane American citizens, ministers of the Gospel, and others of intelligence, can become so bereft of reason, of ordinary sense, as to recognize in the three superior officers of a Masonic lodge, a Godhead—a Trinity—a Divinity? Yet such is the direct and plain teaching of Mr. Moore, one of Masonry's most brilliant lights, one of its most talented authors. It would seem that when a man has once sold himself to Masonry and the devil, there is scarcely anything or pretence that Masonry can put forward, however profane, however devoid of truth, reason, or sense, that does not at once claim and receive a ready yea of blind and fanatical credence at his hands. That such is the fact, no better evidence is needed, than the quotation made from Moore's Outlines of the Temple. With such light as this before him, who but a fool or a knave would desire to become a Mason? Let all men not entirely destitute of good sense, or the principles of common honesty come out from and quit this vile institution and lend a helping hand to extirpate its and its soul-corrupting heresies from the American soil. J. H. H. Woodward.

OUR MAIL.

Joshua Sampson, Spring Green, Wis., writes:

"I want to take the Cynosure as long as I live. It gives my mind on secret societies exactly. I have always been opposed to them."

James Springer, Springertown, Ill., writes:

"Compromise, latitudinarianism and literalism, seem to be the order of the day, all of which, when simmered down, amount to nothing but infidelity. Is it not probable that the grasshoppers and other pests are sent to scourge our country on account of such? I trust the time is not far distant when the just shall rule and the people rejoice; when war shall cease, and man shall not crucify the Lord afresh or put him to open shame as they certainly are now doing."

Dennison Alcott, Broadhead, Wis., writes:

"It seems to me that the day in which we live, is one of fearful responsibility, especially in religious matters; a day of desertion and departure from the good old gospel way. Secret societies have multiplied, and spirituality has died out of the churches. I may be an old fogy and a faultfinder, but I have not put my conscience in the hands of other men, nor do I propose to submit to the operation of having a padlock put on my mouth. 'Cry aloud and spare not,' is my motto."

J. W. Jefferds, Waterloo, Ind., writes:

"Please consider me one of the family of your readers. I have long sworn eternal hatred to the unfruitful works of darkness, and intend to fight it out on this line. I have introduced your paper in many places where it was not known."

G. C. Coffin, LaPorte, Ind., writes:

"I am in sympathy with your society and believe it to be called for, as the religious press is silent in rebuking popular sins. I trust God will make it a means for the downfall of Freemasonry and other secret orders, all of which do greatly effect our Zion and cripple her in her appropriate work. I have watched with intense interest the practical workings of these orders for the past fifty years, and can say with safety that I have seen no good arising from them, which might not have better been obtained by obeying the Gospel of Jesus Christ. I circulate your paper all I can. You have my prayer for the success of the cause."

Bro. J. W. Raynor, State Agent for Pennsylvania, is heartily for political action; he writes:

"You may put me down as a supporter of the Pittsburg nominees, by vote, prayer, influence and example. May send you a list of names of supporters, as we have a goodly number this way."

Lesson for July 18, 1875—Jesus at the Marriage.

SCRIPTURE—John 2: 1-11. Commit 3-10; Primary Verse, 5.

1 And the third day there was a marriage in Cana of Galilee; and the mother of Jesus was there;

2 And both Jesus was called and his disciples to the marriage.

3 And when they wanted wine, the mother of Jesus said, they have no wine.

4 Jesus saith unto her, Woman, what have I to do with thee? mine hour is not yet come.

5 His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it.

6 And there were set there six waterpots of stone, after the manner of the purifying of the Jews, containing two or three firkins apiece.

7 Jesus said unto them, Fill the waterpots with water. And they filled them up to the brim.

8 And he saith unto them, Draw out now, and bear unto the governor of the feast. And they bear it.

9 When the ruler of the feast had tasted the water that was made wine, and knew not whence it was, (but the servants which drew the water knew,) the governor of the feast called the bridegroom,

10 And saith unto him, Every man at the beginning doth set forth good wine; and when men have well drunk, then that which is worse; but thou hast kept the good wine until now.

11 This beginning of miracles did Jesus in Cana of Galilee, and manifested forth his glory; and his disciples believed on him.

1.—This miracle was performed in answer to the prayer of Mary, in order that Christ's glory should become manifest. His glory could be shown even in adding to the happiness of a wedding feast. Let us not, then, fail to add to our prayers for even the humblest things: "For the glory of thy name, O God." 1 K. xviii. 36, 37; 2 K. xix. 19; Ps. lxxix. 9; lxxxiii. 18; Jer, xiv. 7, 21; 1 Cor. x. 31; Col. iii. 17.

2.—After the prayer comes the waiting—often the hardest part to bear. God's time is not always ours, though he never puts us off a moment too long. Lam. iii. 25, 26; Ps. xxxvii. 7; cxxx. 5, 6; lx. i; Is. xxx. 18; lx. xxxi.

3.—How different are the eyes of faith from those of unbelief. They will often see a Yes where the others only can behold a No. Gen. xxxii. 26; Is. lxii. 6, 7; Micah. vii 7; Matt. xv. 27, xxviii; Luke. xi. 5–8; xviii. 1–7; Eph. vi. 18; Col. iv. 2.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1875.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Ten thousand dollars secures the occupation, and $20.000 the ownership.

Dr. Geo. W. Champ of Van Buren, Grant Co., Indiana, writes us praise of Mr. Bain's book, "as far as it goes," but insists that we prepare a small book which shall be a sort of lecturer's vade mecum or hand book, giving the leading features, political and religious, of the evil nature of the lodge, sustained throughout by proofs from Masonic standard authors, carefully collated and verified. We are all overworked. Who will write this book unless Dr. Champ does it. Mrs. Cook's History of the National movement is admirable and useful of its kind. But Dr. Champ's idea is not only a good but exceedingly important one.

It would seem that the attempt looming up on all sides to drive the Bible from our schools and the Sabbath from our customs and laws, and so deliver us to priests, must soon awake a general concern and alarm among all enlightened Christian people. Already we see some symptoms of a reaction towards the God of our fathers and the Christian religion. But if Bunker Hill celebrations, and national centennaries put heathenism and Christianity on a level, they in effect deny the truth of Christianity altogether.

Wheaton Commencement has come and gone with the multitude of commencements; but very different from many of them. Chicago University brought down the house with a laudation of Popery as the stability of the dark ages. Another orator gave a rhapsody on Stonewall Jackson, the saint of the of the Southern rebellion, and these efforts were quoted at the dinner as proofs that that University is not sectarian.

Ann Arbor graduated a crowd of bachelors of arts with the customary "history of the class" made up of a laudation and enumeration of college sprees, tricks, hazings, and other immoralities equally damaging to the general cause of virtue and religion whether the narrative was real, fictitious or mixed.

The College Board, in the fullest meeting for years, approved of the efforts of their faculty to stem and resist the influence of Freemasonry; had a happy and harmonious session; and inaugurated important financial measures. They gave leave of absence to two of their young professors, one to study in Europe and the other in Chicago Theological Seminary. The crowd at the Commencement exercises was an increase. Rev. Geo. Huntington of Oak Park gave the Society of Inquiry one of the best and most beautiful addresses we have heard for years; Rev. Thomas Easton of Belvidere gave an able dissection and demolition of the fallacies of modern thought; and Mr. I. Brown of the class of 1872 delivered a Master's Oration impressing his deep and clear convictions of the supremacy of conscience in the civil government. A holy and happy spirit prevaded the meetings and eleven graduates took their degrees.

A MASONIC RAID ON WHEATON.

We ask the special attention of every reader of the Cynosure to the letter of the Faculty of Wheaton College to one of their trustees.

This trustee, Jesse C. Wheaton, Esq., is one of the first settlers of the place. The town and College were named from his brother's family and his own. Both Hon. Warren L. Wheaton and himself are members of the College Board; the first, also, a member of the Executive Committee. Both have been benefactors of the College. Both have always been professedly opposed to the lodge, and nothing could have happened to occasion a deeper or more just alarm to the friends of the College than to learn that Mr. Jesse Wheaton was, in company with Freemasons, erecting a lodge-room as a leading feature of the "Central Block" in Wheaton.

The immediate effects of this transaction, as the Faculty saw them, must be these:—

1. As the Board is the College, if Mr. Wheaton builds and rents that lodge, he is responsible for it, as the owners of the saloons, whom Mr. Wheaton has helped us prosecute, are, by law responsible for the dram-selling.

2. Of course, if Mr. Wheaton runs that Masonic lodge, he wars on the College law which he, as trustee, sustains, which forbids students attending the lodge. Thus he will give his whole power to break down the discipline of the College.

3. But worst of all, as part owner of a lodge, Mr. Wheaton will be tempted to vindicate and defend his tenants and thus advocate Freemasonry outright. This he is reported already to be doing; saying he "knows nothing about Masonry;' which is not strictly true; and yet he vindicates the lodge, saying that Masons don't swear to conceal each other's crimes, but "only to see that lodge-men have a fair trial," etc. That is to say, he is in danger of becoming the worst and most dangerous propagator and protector of the Freemasons in Wheaton.

Seeing this, the Faculty promptly began labor with Mr. Wheaton as a brother in Christ; and private Christian admonition failing, sent him the letter found in this number of the Cynosure. This letter was reported and read in full by the Faculty to the Annual meeting of the Board of Trust among the doings of the Faculty for the preceding year. The Board, in the fullest and most enthusiastic meeting it has had for years, carefully considered the letter, and, unanimously passed the customary vote approving the doings of the Faculty, of which this constituted a part. The letter speaks for itself. Read it. It pointedly asserts the doctrine that Mr. Wheaton, as trustee, cannot "innocently," build and rent a lodge, or be one of a firm to do so. See also Galesburg's experience.

THE MASONIC RAID ON GALESBURG.

In 1866 Dr. Edward Beecher, then pastor in Galesburg, Ill, made a report on secret societies to the State Congregational Association meeting in Ottawa, Ill., in which he used these words respecting Freemasonry: "By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted."

Soon after this report of Dr. Beecher which was widely published, twenty-one lodges met in convention in Galesburg. They employed a Baptist pastor who was a Freemason, with his church, to prepare a public lodge-dinner, on which they were said to have cleared one thousand dollars. Dr. Beecher's congregation soon lost every person whom the lodge could draw off, and as he was fearful and silent he gained no support from opposers of the lodge and soon left.

Galesburg had been the seat of reform and Satan owed it a grudge. The college was soon ruled by secret societies, which President Gulliver ridiculed as "rat-hole societies," but dared not attack. Missionaries went from Knox to neighboring colleges and planted secret fraternities in them. Five such secret squads sprang up in Monmouth College alone, under the inoculation of the Galesburg missionaries; and Knox College has lately inaugurated Hon. Newton Bateman as President, who has heretofore officiated as Masonic "grand orator," and has drawn a host of aspiring young teachers of the graded schools of Illinois into the accursed soul-bondage of Masonic oaths. One of these teachers and proteges of Mr. Bateman, while superintendent of common schools of Illinois, depraved and demoralized by the lodge, a member of the Congregational church in a city of this State has long since left the prayer-meeting for the billiard saloon, and his brethren are now being moved to discipline him for card-gambling for money. Meantime the godly men and women, successors and survivors of those whose tears and toil and prayers founded Knox College, look on in tearful silence to see the end.

Such is the Masonic raid now attempted at Wheaton. The lodge, like the copperhead, is a serpent without rattles. And the far-seeing spirit which rules the darkness of this world, holds his dusky revels in all places where he has stamped out the hated light with a superior and malign joy, as whisky has a superior relish when drank in a temperance town. But he is but a weak observer of the "sign of the times," who does not see in these things only the denser darkness which precedes and presages the dawn of "the day of the Lord."

SWINDLING IN GARRET OR CELLAR THE SAME.

Citizens of Wheaton:—You are soon to have an opportunity to petition the builders of Central Block in Wheaton, not to put Freemasonry in the top of it. The lodge, you know, swindles every candidate it initiates, by taking his money for secrets which are not secrets. Now we ask you whether the builders of that block, if they put a perpetual swindling shop in the upper story, have any stronger reason to induce them not to swindle in their bank in the first story below.

A bank was started in Galesburg on a small scale at first, like this in Wheaton. Its cashier was a Democrat and Freemason. The citizens entrusted their money to it in deposits. After awhile the active officer of the bank, who went into it without means, retired, rich, to a fruit-farm in southern Illinois. The bank soon failed; and Dea. Royal Hammond of Galesburg, told me he lost several thousand dollars of his savings and earnings; and that a large number of citizens sunk the fruits of their industry in like manner.

Now we are aware that all the rogues are not Freemasons. But Freemasons, as you all know, are sworn to stand by each other, and if they do not do so, they are perjured Masons. If therefore the bank is to be conducted on the principles of the lodge, viz., sworn secrecy and favoritism; and if the same man run both institutions, it is difficult to see why they should not treat men alike in both, and take their money and use it, with no reference to justice and right.

If, however, the young men to be hereafter initiated into the lodge were to lose nothing but their money, I should hold my peace. The loss might teach them experience. And you will bear me witness that in a fifteen years residence in Wheaton, I have been a quiet tax-payer and citizen, striving for the unity of the town and the principles of good neighborhood. But that lodge is to be perpetually sending souls to hell. Its prayers are Christless; its creed is Christless, and its altar pagan. If the present lodge-master ever enters and worships in a Christian temple, I know not where. Is it fitting that ministers of religion, and the future business men of Wheaton should go on their knees, blindfold, before such priests and such altars? By our allegiance to God and our country we are bound to pray, plead, argue, remonstrate and petition our misled friends and neighbors till they turn from these guilty vanities to God in Christ, who in secret said nothing in religion, and who requires us to follow him.

—The Secretary of the State of Illinois has incorporated Chicago Conclave, No. 81, of Knights of the Red Cross of Constantine. Among the members are Post-master McArthur and Rev. Mr. Stocking of this city, who has for some time past been pastor of the Church of the Epiphany (Episcopal), and had the honor of furnishing a name for the candidate of Mr. Ronayne's last lecture.

OUR CANDIDATES AND PRINCIPLES.

We learn that our candidates are everywhere popular. The Chicago Tribune attempted to disparage the Pittsburgh nomination but was so neatly and promptly answered in its own columns by Rev. J. E. Roy, D. D., a sincere Republican, widely known and respected throughout the country East and West, that it has observed a discreet silence since. An old Republican farmer who is an officer in a Congregational church, one of that stamp who never scratch a Republican ticket, said to us yesterday, "If the Republicans nominate Sherman I shall vote for Walker." There are multitudes of good men who will do so. "Mr. Walker's letter of acceptance," said another, "has not been excelled in point of statesman-like ability by any presidential candidate." But the charm and glory of our political movement is our platform. The haggling, huckstering attempts by the old parties to make issues where there are no material differences between them, are so manifestly efforts for existence with the people that they are wet blankets on their own heads. God makes issues. He forced that of slavery on the country, and the American people responded to it. So now he has brought on us the issue Heathenism or Christianism; a Sabbath for the masses or Asiatic perpetual drudgery relieved only by beer gardens and bear gardens as in Germany and Paris; godless schools or Christian; and finally, as the sure and certain results, the Asiatic despotism of the lodge or civil liberty for the masses. The platform must be taken up, spread before the people article by article.

RATIFICATION.

VIOLA, ILL., July 2, 1875.

BRO. KELLOGG:—Please give me room in the Cynosure for one hearty "Amen" to our amended platform, adopted at Pittsburgh. I could not feel satisfied with our former platform; it did not quite "touch bottom" on the temperance question. We cannot afford to go out before our rum-ridden nation, as reformers, without well-defined lines on the rum issue, as well as on organized secretism. Anti-secret men are generally genuine temperance men; and our lady thinkers and workers are all a unit for prohibition of both secrecy and rum. These two reforms should go hand in hand; for the secret temperance orders weaken, rather than strengthen, hope of successful political action. The Pittsburgh platform cannot fail to challenge the admiration and support of all intelligent, patriotic reformers on the live issues of the day. Good men can stand and work on that platform.

The convention is sound this time in their ticket—"John Hancock" style of men, not afraid to write their names on the anti-secret issue. Cheers forever! J. B. Walker and Donald Kirkpatrick. Raise the flag.

J. C. GRAHAM.

NOTE.—From all quarters come reports of unqualified approval of the platform and candidates nominated at Pittsburgh. Iowa is the first of the States to get into line, a State Central committee having been appointed to make every arrangement to get the matter in proper shape for the voters. Pennsylvania will soon be ready. Mr. Walker's letter of acceptance is regarded on all sides as an able document for circulation, and, with the platform, should broadcast over the land and read by every intelligent voter, and a fund must be raised for this purpose without delay.

MR. RONAYNE'S LECTURE in Father Mathew Temperance Hall on Wednesday evening, June 30th, was in point of numbers and enthusiasm a great success. A good audience was present and the lodge opened in regular form, all the officers being in their places. As the candidate was being led from the ante-room under the non de plume of Dr. Stocking, the Masons, who were present in some numbers, began to hiss, but these snakish demonstrations were cut short by a prompt remark from the speaker on the consequences of disturbance and the ready encouragement of friends in all parts of the room. Mr. Ronayne spoke for three hours and demonstrated finely the first degree, amid enthusiastic demonstrations from an unwearied audience, who were anxious to learn when the rest of the grand farce would be presented. A member of Waubansia lodge testified to the correctness of the work to a large part of the audience which had not retired after the close. The lectures and exposition will be continued in about a fortnight, and, if Providence favors, the whole city will have an opportunity of beholding this great false and fatal system thoroughly exposed.

NOTES.

—The addresses published in this number nearly complete the proceedings of the National Convention. The address of Dr. Milligan will be published in tract form according to the vote of the Convention, and should immediately have a wide circulation. It is an argument that will reach every thinking man and dispel any remaining doubts of the legality or binding force of lodge oaths.

—We learn that at the late meeting of the Executive Committee of the Missouri State Association, Rev. A. H. Springstein of Ypsilanti, Mich., an ex-Mason, has been invited to take the field as State lecturer; and Rev. A. W. Geeslin, who assisted in compiling the grange exposition, has been selected to write an address to the people at large on the subject.

—The Iowa State meeting at Clear Lake, is described by the General Agent, who attended, as one of the best in in his experience genuine enthusiasm. Forty-eight delegates were enrolled from seven different religious denominations. The mob at Mason City on the Saturday before had the effect to thoroughly arouse the friends in all that region. The brief notice of this week will be followed by a full report in our next.

—The Western Rural refers to a Mr. James G. Clark, a singer now in the West, as having received the high enconium from the late Gerrit Smith that he would ride fifty miles to hear him sing "The Promised Land To-morrow." The Clark of whom Mr. Smith probably spoke was our friend of Danville, N. Y., the "Liberty Singer," who has produced such enthusiasm in our late conventions at the East, and at the Old Abolitionists' Reunion in this city last summer.

—Friend Myers of Coplay, Pa., gives a fair example of lodge benevolence when put to the test. A gentleman joined the Knights of Pythias in Pennsylvania; was taken severely ill, but received no aid; he afterwards removed to New Hampshire, and was persuaded to send back, pay up his dues, and get a transfer card, which he did. But on applying to the "gallant fraternity" for admission he was informed that he was physically disqualfied from his sickness for admission. So the party laid his $17 upon the altar of this great mogul of secrecy and found himself counted out after all.

—An apt illustration of the spirit of the lodge is given in a recent letter from Rome to a New York journal:

"The number of priests is legion. They all wear long black cloaks, silver shoe-buckels, and three-cornered beaver hats. Their fresh faces indicate good living more than intellectuality or fasting, and they appear to take life quietly and easily. I lately heard of one who preached but two sermons annually, and spent the year in committing them to memory. Some of them are very bold in their expressions and have quaint ways of doing things. While preaching, the other day, one of them turned in his discourse to make a very tender appeal on behalf of a poor man with a large family that he needed the immediate assistance of his hearers. He portrayed the necessities of this family in such pathetic strains as to move his audience to tears, and then said: 'Such is the exigence of this case that I will stop here in my sermon and take up a collection.' He descended from the tribune and passed the bag around amongst the people, who, being greatly moved by his appeal, dropped in the lire very bountifully; but on returning to his place he smilingly said: 'This poor man is the Pope!'"

Honeywell's Tracts.

If those who are willing to distribute the "Honeywell Tract" headed "Young Men of America" will send orders by their neighbor or call themselves at the Cynosure office, Chicago, for parcels of these, they will save me doubled postage—16 cts. per lb. This money had better be used in printing MORE. The tract, as now arranged, is stereotyped and printed by E. A. Cook & Co., and is free. I will still mail 1 oz. rolls. (about 24) to such friends as find the above course inconvenient. Will distributers please give or send one of these to each intelligent young man in your respective vicinities, as also in your travels and lecture rooms? The careful distributer is the chief benefactor in this branch of our work,—a work in defence of our country and the laws of God; and is opposed by such, and only such as truckle to popular sins, or try to stand neutral between Lord and Lucifer.

ENOCH E. HONEYWELL.

REQUEST.—Some gentleman who subscribed $5 for our Publishing House at the Mansfield Convention paid me at Pittsburgh, but in the confusion of business and papers I have lost his name. His money is now at interest, however, and I hope when he reads this, he will forward me his name at once that the proper credit may be entered on the Treasurer's books.

J. P. STODDARD.

First Note of the Iowa Convention.

ROCHELLE, Ill, July 2, 1875.

DEAR K:—The State meeting of Iowa has just closed at Clear Lake and our friends there are rejoicing over results. God was with us in great power and the lodge minions quailed before the truth. Bros. Riley, Hankins and others unvailed the lodge and chapter, and spoke with great freedom and with telling effect of the hidden things of the order and challenged any one present to deny what they had said. But not a word. The way had been prepared for a successful meeting by the egging of Bros. Riley and Hankins at Mason City on the Saturday evening previous to the convention. This dastardly, cowardly act had the effect to thoroughly arouse the people in those districts and embolden the speakers to use great plainness of utterance.

BUSINESS OF THE CONVENTION.

Bro. Hankins was recommended as State Lecturer and Agent for Iowa with an assistant for the southern part of the State more especially, and measures taken to secure funds for their support. The nominations at Pittsburgh were endorsed and a State central committee appointed, J. W. Lyons of Mason City, chairman. The Publishing House interests were presented and the steps taken explained to the convention and approved, and the work of raising funds commenced on the spot with very commendable liberality. Iowa will not be behind in this matter. The time and place of next meeting were fixed, and Bro. Lyons proposes entering with Bro. Hankins immediately upon a canvass of the northern portion of the State. Arrangements were definitely made for Mr. E. Ronayne of Chicago at four different points if he can be secured, and partial arrangements were made at several other points. Thus has God wrought wonders in the land, and to him be all the glory.

J. P. STODDARD.

—Bishop Weaver of the United Brethren church, has been visiting the conferences on the Pacific coast and encouraging the churches. He returned a short time since and reports the work of the denomination growing in that large section of the country.

The Home Circle.

Thy Work, O God, is Mine.

To live and work for thee,
Me thou dost send
Amidst earth's ruins. May I be Unto the end
A living sacrifice. My store
Is thine—not mine—for evermore.

Thy work, O God, is mine
Daily to do;
My work, O God, is thine
While I pursue
The path in which my Saviour trod,
In sunshine, or beneath thy rod.

With thee to guide aright
I fear no foe;
Nor, in the darkest night,
Refrain to go
Where'er thy voice is heard to call,
For thou encirclest, rulest all.

What though my passions rage
And urge retreat,
The warfare which I wage
Knows no defeat.
The conquering power is on my side,
While I in Jesus' love abide.

If, till I reach the end
Of life's short day,
I must the truth defend
'Gainst error's sway,
O, let thy Spirit on my sight
Pour forth his beams of heavenly light!

Then, when death's icy hand,
Shall touch my heart,
And from life's weary stand
I must depart,
Let the dismissal, Lord, to me
Be but the entrance hour with thee.

How Spurgeon Rose.

Something more than a score of years ago, a Christian man who resided in London, in the providence of God was called, in company with a friend, to spend a Sunday at Cambridge. He was very strict in his observance of the Lord's day, and quite careful to confine his "Sabbath day's journeys" to very moderate limits; but on this Sunday afternoon, instead of attending public worship in the vicinity, he felt an unaccountable restlessness of spirit, and a strong impression that he must take a walk, whither he knew not, why he knew not,—but he must go; and go he did. He walked out into the country a distance of several miles, seeing no special occasion for his uneasiness, nor for his journeying, yet feeling that he was taking the proper course; until at length he heard the voice of sacred song issuing from a little lowly chapel by the wayside. He stopped and listened at the door, and presently went in, and seating himself near the entrance gave attention to the services.

A young man, a stripling of eighteen or twenty years, conducted the exercises. There was much about him that betokened youth and inexperience, but there was more that gave evidence of acquaintance with God and the Gospel of his Son. The stranger returned to his lodgings and to his home. Shortly after, on another Sunday, he took another brother with him, and they together sought out the humble chapel, and listened again to the preaching of the young man. On another Sunday they went, taking a delegation of Christian friends and listened again to the words of grace.

They found on inquiry that the young man was the son of a minister, a graduate of Cambridge and was now preaching the Gospel freely, and supporting himself by acting as a tutor. They themselves were members of an old and well known church, which had been blessed with a succession of pastors, eminent for learning, and remarkable for their permanence,—the combined pastorates of three of them having extended more than one hundred and fifty years—but more latterly the church had fallen into decline. The house, which seated from twelve to fifteen hundred people, being found too large, they had divided it by a partition, and then the pulpit had been pushed into one corner, and the little flock had been gathered around it there. Some were despondent; others had faith, and patience, and held fast a hope of better days, praying that God would send them some one who should preach the word of truth and brighten the feeble flame of their candlestick; and at length they decided that this young man should be invited to come up to London for three months, and preach the Gospel to the New Park Street Church.

He came, and with considerable careful management objections were overcome, and at length the church concluded to call "the young man" to preach the gospel there. He preached two months, and they knocked the partition out of the church. Another month saw the seats full. Ere many months they decided to build a larger house. From that time the work went on. The minister preached in the largest available places of the metropolis, to from five to twenty thousand people, stirring the city as it had not been stirred for years, and finally, when his Tabernacle was done, entering upon the work with fresh zeal, making it the centre of earnest and extensive operations in the Gospel field.

Of course the wise people about town heard of the new preacher, and said he was going up like a rocket and would shortly come down like a stick. The going up proved according to their expectation. The coming down they are yet waiting for. To-day that young man preaches statedly in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, to six or eight thousand people, the largest congregation that gathers regularly on this globe for the worship of the Lord. An hundred thousand copies of his sermons are caught up and scattered weekly by the press. Twenty volumes of them have been collected, published and scattered by hundreds of thousands, one person having purchased not less than two hundred and fifty thousand copies, for gratuitous distribution, sending them to all the students of the universities, members of parliament, and to all the crowned heads of Europe. Volumes of them have been translated into some twelve or fifteen different languages, and have been read by millions scattered throughout every quarter of the globe. A single volume from his pen has had a circulation of a million copies. Orphanages and benevolent institutions have sprang up around him; and a training college for ministers has been established, the students from which have founded or revived not less than three hundred churches during the last twenty years.

Supported by the proceeds of his publications, he preaches the Gospel free of charge, in a church where no collections are taken except for outside objects of benevolence, and deals out with a bountiful hand the abundance which God has given him; and to-day is exercising an influence for good, which is a matter of thankfulness to the true disciples of the Lord.—The Christian.

The Strait Gate.

A writer in the Christian Ark, published in Rangoon, giving an account af William Taylor's Gospel labors in Madras, where hundreds have been converted to God through his preaching, says:

"I would mention one very striking incident in connection with Mr. Taylor's preaching at the Memorial Hall. On the last night of the meetings there, he delivered a most soul-stirring address on 'Enter in at the strait gate'. He described what he had seen in Jerusalem, and applied it most beautifully: The strait gate is the last gate to be closed at night, and if people do not enter before it is closed, they must wait until morning. At the close he pressed upon the congregation most solemnly that 'the gate' was probably ajar for some of them, and asked them to enter to-night before it closed. A young man by the name of Frederick Clark was awakened, came to the front, knelt down with the other seekers, and found salvation. Next day, on his way to his place of business, in the Mount Road, he met a friend, who asked him, 'Well, Frederick, did you get what you were seeking last night?' He answered, 'Oh, yes, I did,; I am very happy." A few minutes after, he was struck down with sunstroke; he lingered for three days, and died, giving ample evidence to his friends of his conversion. In his case, the gate was literally ajar for him that night, and it closed upon his heel as he entered it! He heard the last message of mercy, and received it! Oh that thousands who are at the brink of eternity would accept the offer of salvation through Jesus!"

The Sabbath.

There is one weapon which the enemy has employed to destroy Christianity and to drive it from the world, which has never been employed but with signal success. It is the attempt to corrupt the Christian Sabbath, to make it a day of festivity, to cause Christians to feel that its sacred and rigid obligation has ceased, to induce them on that day to mingle in the scenes of pleasure or the exciting plans of ambition, to make them feel that they may pursue their journeys by land and water, by the steamboat and the railway, regardless of the command of God; and this has done and will continue to do, what no argument, no sophistry, no imperial power has been able to accomplish. The "Book of Sports" did more to destroy Christianity than all the ten persecutions of the Roman Emperors; and the views of the Second Charles and his Court about the Lord's day tended more to drive religion from the British nation than all the fires that were enkindled by Mary. Paris has no Sabbath, and that fact has done more to banish Christianity than all the writings of Voltaire; and Vienna has no Sabbath, and that fact does more to annihilate religion there than ever did the skepticism of Frederick. Turn the Sabbath into a day of sport and pastimes, of military reviews, and of pantomimes and theatrical exhibitions, and not an infidel anywhere would care a farthing about the tomes of Volney or Voltaire, about the skepticism of Hume, the sneers of Gibbon, or the scurrility of Paine.—British-American Presbyterian.

Down in Mississippi.

In one of Mr. Charles Nordhoff's most recent letters to the New York Herald, he says: Here is another incident of Mississippi life. About four weeks ago a mulatto girl, aged 19, who had been living for sometime as servant in the house of a farmer, two and a half miles from Verona, in Lee county, left her service and went to Verona, where she became a house servant, in order to attend an evening school. She had been at her new place a week, when one day the farmer, her former employer, accompanied by his father and a neighbor, all armed with shotguns, appeared before the house. Two of the men came in and demanded the girl, saying she belonged to them. She refused to go with them, and declared that she was free, which was true, of course. They knocked her down, took her by the feet, dragged her thus through the house, through the yard, into the street, her clothing torn and deranged in the struggle, and she screaming for help, and—this was in open daylight and in the presence of several men, besides women and children—set her on a horse and carried her off. When they got her home, two of them tied her to a tree and flogged her bared back with green withes until the blood ran. Then they took her to the house and chained her with a trace-chain and padlock to the bedpost. The next day she was turned to work, and chained up again at night. After some days she made her escape, and found refuge with a Southern man, the County Superintendent of Education, who, after proper notice, sent her to the United States District Attorney. From the District Attorney's lips I received the account of this outrage. Now, cruelty and violence may and do happen in any State. The part of the story which seems most horrible to me is this: It is in evidence before the District Attorney that the Mayor of Verona, who is its Justice of the Peace, heard the girl's cries, and saw the struggle, and when asked why he did not interfere himself, testified that he thought it was none of his business, as he knew it was only a negro girl. Several other men testified that they stood in their doors and saw the girl dragged by her feet out into the road. It was none of their business either. Finally, I related this tale to a Democratic Judge of the Supreme Court of the State. He replied that brutality was found everywhere, North as well as South, and I could not, with all my efforts, apparently, make him understand that what filled me with indignation and hopeless disgust was not so much the act itself, but the fact that an officer of the law and several citizens could witness it unmoved—because it was only a negro girl. If it had been a white girl no doubt the Mayor would have interfered, and the Judge would have been indignant. If the brutes who should maltreat a white girl so bad had been negroes, the country would have risen to lynch them, and the papers all over Mississippi would have yelled with fury.

Fitting Boys and Girls for College.

A correspondent of The College Courant makes some very sensible remarks on the subject which forms the heading of this paragraph, to which remarks we invite the attention of parents who have children fitting for college. "In most preparatory schools the course is not arranged and pursued with reference to securing a definite degree of education, that is of mental discipline, and thus really qualifying a boy for the work of college, but to getting him into college with the least possible expenditure of time, labor and money. Everything not absolutely necessary to college is omitted, and whatever cannot be omitted is crammed into the boy and arranged with special reference to a coming examination, while the student is not made to digest and assimilate it to his mental being. To 'get in' and 'get through' college is the great end of the student's labors. Every teacher of a preparatory school is too familiar with the student who presents himself for admission with the announcement, often reiterated by the parent in a letter or in person, that he must be fitted for Yale, Harvard or some other college, in one or two years, as the case may be; and if this school cannot do it, he will go to some school which can. He may be utterly ignorant of the first elements of a common English education; he may have only the merest smattering of Greek and Latin, and less of mathematics, and yet he must be pushed over a certain course of study in a year or two in order to 'get into college.'"

Colleges must require a certain degree of preparation in certain studies for admission to their privileges, and many students make a great mistake in supposing that if they are fully up to those requirements a good education is in a manner assured to them. It is on account of this very misapprehension that we have so many college graduates whose education seems thrown away upon them. While a special preparation is necessary to enter college, a general preparation is equally necessary, if the student be expected to "digest and assimilate" the knowledge he gains. For this general preparation the parent and not the teacher should be held responsible, especially where the parent has himself enjoyed good educational advantages. How is this to be done? By familiar and frequent conversation with children on topics suggested in every day life, by teaching them the principles of physiology, chemistry, astronomy, geology, in fact of all the sciences, using the technical nomenclature when necessary, so that the young mind shall become familiar with it in early life, before text-books are taken up at all. By directing the child's reading and leading it, step by step, to a knowledge of the great writers and the great facts of the past and present. The story of Homer's "Iliad," of Milton's "Paradise Lost," of Scott's "Marmion" and "Lady of the Lake," children from seven years old and upwards can be made to take the most lively interest in; the same is true of nearly all the plays of Shakespeare. Historical stories may be related without limit, and thus a taste for general information fostered in the child; this, with the germs of the various sciences thus planted in the juvenile mind will, by their own natural law of assimilation and growth, be in itself an education, by the time the child has acquired the special preparation necessary to enter college, and multiply incalculably the advantages derived from the four years' course. This pre-supposes labor on the part of the parents, but do not parents expect or wish to labor for their children? And how can effort be more wisely expended than in the manner above indicated? The plan proposed is not a theory merely; it has been tried with the most satisfactory results. When parents thus co-operate with teachers in furnishing and training juvenile minds, preparation for college will mean something more than so many books gone over in Greek, Latin and mathematics.—N. Y. Tribune

There is room in the church, and need for all manner of workers. The poorest and least recognized are as much needed as any. Open your watch; your eyes fall on jewels there. But the sparkling jewels cannot say to the modest coil of steel beside them, "We have no need of thee," for that is the mainspring. And the mainspring cannot say to the tiniest cog-wheel, "I have no need of thee," for without it the works stand still. It is just so with the Church of Christ. One little worker can mar the whole by failing to fulfill his office. There is a place for each.

Work of the Heart.—A man's total outward work, his whole effect upon the world in twenty-four hours, has been reckoned about 350 foot-tons. That may be taken as a good "hard day's work." During the same the heart has been working at the rate of 120 foot-tons. That is to say, if all the pulses of a day and night could be concentrated and welded into one great throb, it would be enough to throw a ton of iron 120 feet into the air; and yet the heart is never weary.

Liberty of the Press.—The liberty of the press cannot impute criminal conduct to others without violating the right of character, and that right can only be attacked in a court of justice where the party attacked has a fair right or opportunity. Where viturbation begins, the liberty of the press ends.—Kent's Commentaries.

The Mother's Lullaby.

Soft sleep bedew thine eyes,
My baby dear,
The love that never dies
Is watching near.
He smiles upon thy brow,
And charms thy sleep,
Bright dreams it brings thee now
And slumber deep.

Peace to thy sleeping thought,
Joy to thy dream:
Fancies thy heart hath sought,
Sweet may they seem.
God's blessing rest on thee
In mercy mild;
His angels watch o'er thee,

Story of a Pin.

Many years ago a lady in Paris was going out to walk the gay streets of the city, to see the new and beautiful goods, hanging so temptingly in the windows, and perhaps to buy a few trifles. When all ready to go out, she noticed that some part of her dress seemed to hang awry, and so she snatched a pin from its paper, and thrust it in her dress. The poor pin felt that he was lost and almost smothered for the first hour; but after a while he began to work his way out, so that his head was in sight.

"Now," says he, "I can see it all. I have nothing to do but to ride through these streets, and see all the beautiful things, and enjoy myself."

Soon after the lady met some gentlemen, and they took off their hats and bowed very low.

"Ah!" says the little pin, "was not all that for me? I'm sure they looked directly at me when they bowed. My head is bright, and perhaps they thought me a costly diamond. Who knows!"

And then the pin began to thrust his head up higher, and to look about with an air of great satisfaction. It seemed to him that all the people had come out in their best clothes and in their carriages for him to look at, and that he was the most important thing in Paris. He felt that his mistress was walking out for his sake, and had placed him up near her neck so that everybody could see him. Poor pin, he had so much to learn!

By and by, as the lady was walking through a street in which none but the rich lived, the pin thought he would stretch up his head high enough to peep into the window, when he lost his balance and fell. He cried, with a tiny, jingling sound, as his head struck the sidewalk. He lay still, expecting that all the passers would stop and gaze at him, and especially that his mistress would miss him and come back after him. But she passed on and all the rest passed on, and nobody stopped. Presently a heavy foot trod on him; then another and another; and at length the foot of a dirty beggar trod on him.

"Oh!" cried he, "have I come to this? Alas! I find I was nothing, am nothing—a poor, useless, despised, forgotten pin! No human eye will even look upon me again. I must rust and perish between the crevices of the pavement!"

Just then a young man came out of one of those great houses. He had gone in to see if the rich banker who lived there could not give him employment as a clerk.

The banker said, "No, I have now more clerks than I really need."

The young man was disappointed, and as he came out he paused a moment, and then saw the little pin lying on the sidewalk. So he stooped down and picked it up, and stuck it in his sleeve. Careful, saving young man! Many would have despised you for saving a pin. But it was the making of you.

The rich banker was looking out of the window and saw him pick up and save the pin.

"That young man," said he to himself," will make a careful, prudent man of business. I will have him."

So he sent for the young man and took him into his employment. After some years that young man became a partner and then the head of the bank, and eventually one of the very richest men in France.

When the little pin learned how much good he had done, he was very glad; but he had the good sense to see it was Divine Providence, and not he, who had done all this. It was not because he was great or bright, or could make his voice heard, but because God can make a pin teach; and the welfare of a man for life may turn upon the mere picking up of a pin. He was thoroughly humbled, and all his descendants since have been willing to be stuck and thrust anywhere, just as willing to hold the rags over the shoulder of a beggar, as the rich cashmere shawl on a princess. Who can tell on how small a thing great interests may turn? They seem small to us, but with him there is nothing small and nothing great. A pin and a kingdom are alike, each and both nothing without Him.—Child at Home.

What Idleness Does.

Many young people think an idle life must be a pleasant one, but there are none who enjoy life so little and are such burdens to themselves as those who have nothing to do. Those who are obliged to work hard all day enjoy their short period of rest and recreation so much that they are apt to think that if their whole life were spent in rest and recreation it would be the most pleasant of all. But this is a sad mistake as they would soon find out if they made a trial of the life they think so agreeable. One who is never busy can never enjoy rest, for rest implies relief from previous labors; and if our whole time were spent in amusing ourselves, we should find it more wearisome than the hardest day's work. Recreation is only valuable as it unbends us; the idle can know nothing of it. Many people leave off business and settle down to a life of enjoyment, but they generally find that they are not nearly so happy as they were before, and are often glad to return to their old occupation to escape the miseries of indolence.

IMPORTANT LETTER OF THE WHEATON COLLEGE FACULTY.

To Jesse C. Wheaton, Esq.

DEAR SIR:—The undersigned, Faculty of Wheaton College, of which you are a trustee, and which bears your family name, beg leave respectfully to express to you the anxiety and regret with which we have learned that you, with others, are to erect, own, and rent rooms for a lodge and chapter of Freemasons in this town. We quite understand that Freemasons and others have the legal right to erect and use lodges, dram-shops and saloons for billiards, where, and so long as the laws permit them. But we respectfully submit that as trustees of Wheaton College, you cannot, in whole or in part own and rent property for such purposes, without manifest inconsistency, and detriment to the College of which you are a legal guardian and friend, for the following reasons:—

1. As one of the Board, you adopt and sustain a law positively forbidding the students "attending any secret society." Now, by owning stock in a Masonic lodge, so far as money and moral influence go, you will weaken and destroy that law, which, as a Faculty we are required to enforce. This you at once percieve must be very damaging to the Institution.

2. Among your many acts of friendship and benevolence to the College, you made us glad by your voluntary declaration in open Board, that you "approve of the principles of the College," one of which principles is, and has been from its foundation, hostility to the Masonic order as an idolatry and despotism. But if you with others build, own and rent a Masonic lodge-room, then your actions, louder than words, will reverse the verbal testimony by which you have cheered and sustained us, and give your whole moral force to the lodge, whose Master has once prosecuted the College and sought its destruction.

We do not, respected sir, propose to doubt or disparage your intelligence by a lengthened argument to prove that you have placed the College on right ground; that you have committed no mistake in opposing the lodge; but that Freemasonry is all and worse than it is implied and claimed to be. But we beg to call your attention a single one from a mass of facts sworn to before courts and legislatures, and proved by hundreds of living witnesses among the purest and best men on earth. We refer to the fact that Freemasons swear to conceal all a Master Mason's crimes but two, and all a Royal Arch Mason's crimes without exception, when given to them as such, they knowing them to be such.

If any will say and make oath that the Master's and Royal Arch oaths do not contain these obligations, we will bring the most unexceptionable proof to convict them of perjury; or, failing to do so, we will confess that we are wrong in assailing the lodge, and make due reparation.

Now concealing crime is to be accessory to crime, and punishable as such; and swearing to conceal crime is swearing to be accessory to crime, and is itself a crime in fact and ought to be in law. By our State statutes, a threat to break the peace is punishable by any judge or justice by imprisonment in default of bail. And if a threat to commit crime is crime, an oath to commit crime is worse. When therefore a Mason swears to conceal the crime of his brother, that oath is criminal and ought to be punished. And a trustee of Wheaton College cannot innocently aid and abet wholesale sworn concealment of crimes. In saying this we charge no Freemason with criminal intent. The candidate is not allowed to read his oath before he swears; and, after he is sworn in, he is often confused and knows not what to do; or is timid and dreads the vengeance of the lodge.

That Freemasonry is idolatrous is proved to all by the fact known to outsiders, that its prayers are not offered through Christ; and its despotic nature is equally plain to outsiders in that the standard Masonic writers declare all local lodges bound to absolute, unquestioning obedience to Grand Lodges, thus making all ordinary members of local lodges the sworn "underling adherents to unknown superiors!" This is despotism.

We would, respected sir, do the greatest injustice to you as our neighbor, fellow citizen and brother in Christ, not to believe that you loathe and abhor a system so fraught with despotism, idolatry and crime. And we fully trust that on careful reflection, you will shrink from incorporating so dark a system in your person and property, into the institution which you befriend and cherish as the ornament of your town and State: least of all in this hour of promised enlargement and success.

Hoping to hear from you that you are aloof from all sinful complicity with the lodge, we remain as heretofore, dear sir, your affectionate friends and fellow citizens,

The Faculty of Wheaton College.

Commencement at Wheaton.

WHEATON, June 30, 1875.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—This has been a bright day in the history of the College of our reform, one of the superlative days. The whole commencement season has passed pleasantly and with profit to all. Old students from the halls of the College, parents whose sons and daughters she has for the time adopted, thousands of your readers who have learned to look hitherward for men to do hard work in your great cause, are not unmindful nor without interest in this, the fifteenth anniversary of the institution.

Commencement began on the Sabbath with the usual Baccalaureate sermon before the graduating class by Pres. Blanchard. His discourse was developed from the text "Teach me to do thy will" (Ps. cxliii. 10) "and I will walk at liberty" (Ps. cxix. 45), and presented in his usual clear and forcible manner the truth that perfect liberty for the individual follows from perfect submission of the soul to the will of God, a grand theme to close the instructions of the course.

In the evening Rev. George Huntington of Oak Park made the annual address before the Society of Inquiry, an occasion of intellectual delight and religious profit. "The Relation of Culture to Christianity" was the subject around which he threw the light of reason and illustration in eloquent sentences, which I may, by your leave, at some time copy out for your readers.

On Monday evening the four literary societies held, through their "Union," the annual exhibition. While the more purely literary portions of the entertainment maintained the standard excellence, the lighter parts were tedious in preparation and hardly satisfactory in performance. As a whole it was not a success and may suggest for future occasions a programme more harmonious with college orthodoxy.

The annual reunion of the Alumni Association was attended by perhaps more than usual interest from the failure of the accustomed address and the happy and successful efforts to make the missing part of the programme unfelt. Judge Harvey Potter of Iowa, of the first class (which claims also J. P. Stoddard and L. N. Stratton) was the appointee, but was kept at home by sickness. Like the minute-men at Concord, Profs. Blanchard and Stratton and Messrs Lloyd, Bissell and Brown were ready with wit, eloquence and sense to entertain and instruct, and best of all Judge Farwell of your city closed the hour with well-timed advice given in a quiet but impressive way reminding of the dignity of courts. The essay by Miss E. M. Grant in every way sustained the good repute of the class of '70 of which she is a member.

Commencement day proper came in brightly, adding a gentle influence to the public invitation to the College. The Chapel looked most inviting, large, high and cool, beautifully not gaudily decorated, it was with a sense of relief from things physical that the large audience poured through its entrances filling every seat, aisle, corner, door, and even the halls and stairways held a large number who could get no nearer. First among the ornaments of the room were the motto of the class, "Gradatim," and also of the College, "Christo et Regno Ejus." With becoming ceremony the Board of Trust, the Faculty, and the Graduating Class were ushered to their places, and after an enlivening strain of music from the orchestra the exercises opened with prayer by Pres. Blanchard and the hymn

"We are living, we are dwelling
In a grand and awful time," in which the whole congregation joined, led by Prof. F. G. Baker with the assistance of Pound's orchestra from Chicago.

Mr. E. D. Bailey was introduced to lead the exercises of the Class on this to them supreme occasion, in his salutatory address with an oration on "The Healing of the Nations." His introductory task was gracefully performed, and the address following given in cultured style and clear tone. He referred to the fossilized history of ancient nations in which we read their rise and fall, and all seemed to contain in themselves the seeds of dissolution. To take the diagnosis of national disease is the study of the statesman. The character of a nation as taken from its individual citizens was finely illustrated by reference to the Mississippi which pours to the Gulf the debris washed from a thousand hillsides, so to a nation's capital pours the corruption gathered from the townships, the county and State governments; and Christ, the truth, must be the Healer.

Mr. E. K. Bailey spoke next on "The True Man," a subject too trite to expect a brilliant oration, but giving scope for several good points spoken in a pleasant though not very forcible style.

Miss S. Carrie Blanchard followed with an essay on "Hidden Truths," a subject well suited to the retiring and fascinating style of the reader, which won the auditors first to herself and kept their favor by the merit of the production. If glittering gold and shining pearls are worth the vast labor given for them of what value must be a newly-revealed truth, pure, bright and holy, continually more beautiful and increasing its power of producing pure enjoyment.

After an overture from the orchestra, Miss Julia W. Blanchard gave an essay, entitled, "Starlight—Natural and Moral." The study of the heavens changing like the nations and the lives of men, was traced from its inception in astrology, "the ill-behaved daughter of astronomy" to Kepler's prayer of thanksgiving at closing his great work. The influence of God's moral stars will conquer the world's darkness, until the starlight of earth is lost in the sunlight of heaven. The clear voice and expressive manner of the reader added to the popular effect of the fine essay.

F. W. Comfort gave an oration on "Civil Law," which was described to be as necessary to the existence of society as society is to the existence of man,—"The daughter of Deity and love is her mother." The "Higher Law" was set forth as paramount, for human power cannot ordain, but only adopt law; and also the evils of false or conflicting oaths in church and state or in midnight orders. The oration was given in an earnest manner and with a gravity becoming the subject, marred somewhat by a false emphasis.

Mr. William D. Gates followed with a pleasing address on "Music," and by apt references to common life provoked the mirth of the audience, whom he gracefully resigned to the musicians. They in turn responded finely with one of Verdi's choruses.

"The Achievements of Culture" furnished Miss Emma J. Humphrey a fine theme, finely extended over the operations of genius in subduing wild fruits and flowers, to the uses of humanity, and the influence of Christianity in bringing that humanity itself to a high state of enlightenment.

"Superstition and Medicine" by Herbert H. Hurd was a clear and interesting history of the war with superstition attending the early progress of the healing art and its wider application in the history of the arts and of society.

Miss Mattie B. V. Myers also had an oration with the equivocal but familiar title, "What will be the Result"? The effect was not improved by a somewhat hasty and unnatural delivery; but the pointing of the interrogation toward scientific investigation and the experience of our American nation, elected to the destiny of leading the social and moral freedom of the race, until the nations, if they do not actually behold the rising sun, may exultingly cry, The morning breaketh, was ably made and with popular effect.

Herbert C. Nash, after a discourse of fine music paid a fine tribute to the "universal Yankee nation," a timely topic presented under the title "The Nation of a Century," which would have borne more force of thought and utterance without the charge of extravagance.

"Out of Tune" was chosen by Miss F. E. Wheaton as the subject of her essay which was accompanied with the valedictory. The time when all nature was in tune and "The morning stars sang together," the Eden tragedy which unstrung the chords so that all vices with all virtues are continually struggling together, and the bright day when all things shall be restored and the groans and cries of ages shall have an end, passed in review. The farewell remarks to instructors, friends, fellow students and to the class were given with strong but controlled emotion and deeply touched the sympathies of all by their fervor.

The honor of the Master's Oration which fell to Mr. Israel Brown, of Oberlin, was borne with becoming grace, and met by a highly satisfactory oration on "Conscience the Guaranty of Popular Government." The degrees were then conferred by President Blanchard and after the benediction the audience slowly and unwillingly passed out of the sound of the sweet strains from the musician's corner.

In the evening public expectation was enlarged like a flood with more than the ordinary interest a Commencement address is supposed to excite, and the Chapel was early filled to overflowing with a brilliant audience. Rev. T. C. Easton of Belvidere did full justice to his subject, "Fallacies of Modern Thought," but concluded with his hearers still expectant. While President Blanchard added a brief application a group entered from the Ladies' Parlor and took a place upon the platform fronting the audience, and the President, turning, in a brief, simple form joined his daughter, Miss Julia W. Blanchard of the Graduating Class, with Prof. Herman A. Fischer in the bond of holy wedlock and Dr. J. B. Walker added the consecrating prayer. A general exodus was then made for the college parlors where the happy pair received the congratulations of friends. They expect to start soon for Europe where Prof. Fischer, who has ably filled the chair of mathematics and natural sciences for two years, expects to perfect himself for his position as instructor.

Thus closed one of the brightest, and most hopeful anniversaries of Wheaton. LYMN.

Religious Intelligence.

—Rev. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., now Senior Professor at the Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, Rev. J. L McCartney (now in Europe), and Elder Walter T. Miller, of New York, were appointed by the late Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, as commissioners to the conference on Confederation of the Presbyterian churches to meet in London, 21st of July next, with power to add to their number. No specific instructions were issued to the commissioners, but it was distinctly understood that the testimony of the Reformed Presbyterian church on the subject of Scriptural Psalmody and other distinctive points should be carefully guarded.

—Rev. Dr. Butterfield, of the New York Educational Society has been elected President of Olivet College.

—The public school question is agitating the citizens of Rochester to an unusual degree. A couple of weeks ago the Board of Education passed a resolution declaring that hereafter no religious exercises, whether Bible reading, prayer, or singing should be allowed in any of the schools. An effort was made to delay action upon the resolution to the next meeting, but it was unsuccessful. As might be expected the course of the Board gave offense to a large portion of the citizens. It was regarded as hasty, curtly expressed, and uncalled for. The clergy of the city generally were represented as favoring the measure. To place themselves right before the public some twenty of them last week published a protest against the action, and last Sabbath a number of the pulpits gave emphatic expression to the general dissatisfaction.

—Further conversions are reported from Poland of United Catholics to the Orthodox Greek church. No less than 243 parishes, with 202 priests (including the cathedral clergy of Chelm) and 236,000 lay members, have during the last few months gone over, and only twenty-three parishes, with twenty-three priests and 17,000 lay members, remain true to their old faith. Some priests have emigrated to Galicia.

—One of the happy effects of the religious awakening under Mr. Hammond's preaching in California is thus given. In a court-room in Stockton an important case was to have been tried. The jury had been shut up all night, and were dreading the long and weary trial that was before them. When the hour for trial arrived, one of the lawyers arose and addressed the Judge as follows: "May it please your honor, you are perhaps aware that there is an eminent evangelist in our town, who has been doing all in his power as a peace-maker among our citizens. As a consequence of his labors the plaintiff and defendant have met and settled in an amicable manner this perplexing suit, which has already had two trials, and it is therefore now taken out of court. The judge, who was a Christian man, rejoiced, and the jury were delighted.

—The break up in the convents of Germany has already began. The Arsaline nuns of Posen have sold their property, and will migrate to Cracow. The Capuchins have left Munster; the Benedictine nuns at Fulda have also sold their property. The Franciscans of Westphalia are preparing to leave their homes. About one hundred of them purpose migrating to America.

—Col. Robert Cowden, the secretary of the interesting conventions of the Ohio State Christian Association opposed to the lodge, is also corresponding secretary of the State Sabbath-school Association and one of the most efficient workers in that cause. He reported the following cheering facts: "There are in Ohio 5,545 Sabbath-schools, of which 1,675 continue the whole year. One hundred and thirty of these are new schools. During the year 216 township conventions were held. There are 62,934 officers and teachers, and 319,815 pupils, of whom 253,075 attend regularly. Two thousand seven hundred and thirty-five schools use the international lessons. There are 500,000 volumes in the libraries, and 2,000,000 Sabbath-school papers were distributed. Twenty-one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five pupils and teachers signed the temperance pledge. Eleven thousand four hundred and seventy-five were converted in Sunday-schools and joined the church. Thirty thousand dollars were contributed for mission funds, and $92,642 to pay the running expenses of the schools.

News of the Week.

City.

Monday was celebrated as the 99th national anniversary. One of the most important features of the day was the formal opening of the Calumet river to navigation and the laying of the corner-stone of the Brown Iron Works in South Chicago. Several casualities were caused by the careless use of fire arms, one of which resulted in the death of a little boy.——The city government is engaged in another quarrel with the nominal head of the Police force, which is a board of three commissioners. The Common Council lately abolished this board, but it will not yield except to the decision of the courts. The plan is probably in the interests of the corrupt authorities now controling the city government.

Postal.

The Postmaster General is much pleased with his recent tour of investigation. He met five or six hundred postmasters. They were unanimously in favor of raising the rate of registration from eight to ten cents, and the Postmaster General made an order to that effect upon his return. On the largest routes between the East and West from eighteen to twenty-five tons of mail matter are carried daily and handled in the postal cars. The transfer of mails at Chicago from road to road is sometimes as much as one hundred tons per day. The postal clerks in the railway post-office cars in the division west of the Alleghenies assort and handle 40,000,000 of letters per month, an amount of work which it would be impossible to do in post-offices. The registry rate would be better mended if reduced to three or five cents. It is so high as to exclude its use very largely in the competition of express companies. The rate in Canada is two cents and is profitable.

General.

Recent storms in various sections of the country have caused great damage to crops, bridges, etc., especially in Iowa. In Decorah and vicinity $150,000 worth of property was destroyed. Nineteen of the twenty-one railroad bridges between Decorah and Conover, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad were carried away.——The potato-bug made its appearance in the southern part of the State of New Jersey last year. This year the swarm is exceedingly dense, and the devastation done by them beyond comprehension.——A fearful collision took place on Monday between two heavily loaded excursion trains on the South Side railroad Long Island. How many are killed and injured was uncertain, but seven dead and twenty wounded were reported.——The last report from the Black Hills July 5th, says that gold is not yet found in paying quantities.

Foreign.

It is estimated that the destruction of property by the inundations in the south-western portion of France will amount to 300,000,000 francs. The number of persons who perished is estimated at 3,000. The loss of life by the flood at Buda Pesth exceeds that given in the first reports. One hundred and twenty dead bodies have been found in the Danube, and many more must have been carried away by the current.——The subscriptions received for the sufferers by the inundations are unprecedently large. The total amount is $200,000. The list opened by President MacMahon already reaches $40,000. It is announced that 100,000 persons will be wholly dependent on public charity for months to come.——Mr. Gladstone has written an article, which appears in the Cotemporary Review, and is entitled "Is the Church of England Worth Preserving?" After summing up the arguments on both sides, he answered the question strongly in the affirmative. He reviews the divisions which have taken place in the church, and the attempts made to maintain conformity by penal proceedings. He declares the enforcement of arbitrary rules fatal to the Church.——The population of Japan has increased 150,000 since the census was taken at the close of 1873.——A recent investigation of the number of missionaries and converts in Japan gives the following results: Greek church, one missionary, 3,000 converts; Roman Catholic, forty missionaries, 20,060 converts; Protestants, seventy missionaries, 200,000. ——Moody and Sankey expect to leave London soon and go to Paris.

Farm and Garden.

THE CURRANT WORM.—For several years past the currant bushes have been nearly destroyed by numerous small worms which divest them of their foliage. As the eggs from which these worms spring are deposited on the upper side of the leaves, the first indication of their ravages will be observed by many small holes eaten through, and the minute worms may be seen making the holes larger.

The writer has been accustomed to sprinkle powdered hellebore on the bushes, which is an infallible remedy, as it destroys the worms in a few minutes, and will not injure the currant bushes in the least. White hellebore can be obtained at most drug stores, in a powdered state, at a few cents per ounce. To sprinkle it on bushes, put about two tablespoonsful into a pepper or flour box, and sprinkle it lightly all over the outside leaves. Then turn up the bushes and scatter a small quantity in the middle of them. Let it be spread as thinly as practicable, as a quantity so small that it cannot be perceived with the naked eye will check the ravages. In the spring of 1864 our gooseberry bushes were stripped of every leaf, and all the branches were literally covered with full-sized worms. We sprinkled them lightly with white hellebore, and in less than two hours every worm fell to the ground dead. Great care must be taken in handling the hellebore, as a small quantity will produce violent sneezing.—American Agriculturist.

SALT AS A REMEDY FOR CHINTZ BUGS.—A very important discovery has just been made in regard to driving away chintz bugs. It was first discovered that these pestiferous bugs never touched crops growing on salt land, of which there is a large acreage in Saline county. A number of farmers caught at this idea, who lived on farms overrun with chintz bugs, and they procurred several barrels of salt, and scattered it on their land. One man sprinkled a forty acre piece in this way, and was rewarded to see the chintz bugs take their flight; others used salt with a similar result, and it is firmly believed that in salt our farmers have a sure guard against the ravages of the chintz bug. The experiment is worth trying, and we would advise some of our farmers to give it a thorough test. It is estimated that a barrel of salt costing $2.50 will sow over ten acres of land, and, considering the end gained, we do not consider it a very expensive remedy.

A DISCOVERY ABOUT CORN.—A writer in the Western Rural says: "An intelligent and reliable neighbor of ours who has for years been making experiments with corn, has discovered an importance and value in replanting corn, which is quite novel and worthy of publication. We have always thought replanted corn was of very little consequence, but this gentleman says 'it is of so much consequence he replants whether it is needed or not—or, rather, he plants two or three weeks after the crop is planted a hill every fifteenth row each way." He says: "If the weather becomes dry during the filling time, the silk and tassels both become dry and dead. In this condition, if it should become seasonable, the silk revives and renews its growth, but the tassels do not recover. Then, for want of pollen, the new silk is unable to fill the office for which it was designed. The pollen from the replanted corn is then ready to supply the silk, and the filling is then completed." He says nearly all the abortive ears, so common in all corn-crops, are caused by the want of pollen, and he has known ears to double their size in this second filling.

A correspondent of the New England Farmer gives the following method of treatment for animals who may have gorged themselves with grain: "Keep the animals from water. Put a quart of wood ashes into a pail of lukewarm water, stir it up, and let the horse drink one or two quarts of this alkali water at intervals of one or two hours, and in this way the horse always does well, and after a day's treatment water and feed as usual."

Home and Health Hints.

On Bathing Children.

Some mothers, writes a physician, think when their children get beyond two or three years of age, the frequent entire bath can be dispensed with. If some of the main facts of physiology were well known and understood, everyone would perceive that cleanliness of the skin is one of the conditions of good health. It happens when bathing is disregarded that the lungs, kidney or bowels have more than their apportionment of work. If these are strong and healthy, they may bear the tax with little apparent injury, but, to most cases, a lowering of the vitality and tone of the system ensues. Large bath tubs are pleasant and convenient, but not indispensable to the proper cleansing of the skin. A speedy sponging of the body in pure water, followed by friction in pure air, is all that is necessary.

When disinclined to use water, I find thorough application of the flesh brush to the whole person an admirable substitute; especially on retiring, it relieves nervousness, equalizes the circulation, and induces quiet sleep. Mothers, above all, should see that their children are well bathed. If the skin is kept active and healthy, there will not be half the danger from fever, cold and eruptive disease. If your little one is cross and troublesome, and finds no occupation that pleases him, try the effect of a bath; sometimes it is magical, and if tried, he will go to sleep and awaken bright, cheerful and happy. Do not, though, as I have seen some parents do, plunge a child into water, when he screams and shrinks from it, thinking you are doing a good deed. Nature must be the guide; if your child has a nervous constitution, a shock of this kind is only exhausting and injurious.

Dr. Guthrie says: "We have a great many things taught in our schools now—physiology, philology, craniology, geology—and what the better is a girl for it when she becomes a tradesman's wife? She cannot darn her stocking, bake her bread, boil a potatoe, or light a fire. When I see a servant making two or three attempts to light a fire, I am tempted to say, 'My good friend, let me try and do it for you.' I do not, remember, despise these ologies, but I am for stitchology, bakeology, and boilology."

TO PREVENT TIN RUSTING.—Rub fresh lard over every part of the dish, and then put it in a hot oven and heat it thoroughly. Thus treated, any tinware may be used in water constantly, and remain bright and free from rust indefinitely.

In dealing with furniture, remember to keep water away from anything soluable therein, oil from everything porous, alcohol from varnish, and acid from marble.

An agricultural journal maintains that alum water is quite as destructive to insects as Paris green, and not at all dangerous to leave about the house.

Unslacked lime is excellent for cleaning small steel articles, such as jewelry, buckles, and the like.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows: "Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diaholical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescue;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abducted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS, in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

OBJECTIONS TO MASONRY.

By A SECEDING MASON, of Cornton, Vermont.

This tract contains many strong arguments against the Lodge drawn from personal experience, observation and study of its character. A 4-page tract at 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

TRACT NO. 21:

MASONIC CHASTITY.

BY EMMA A. WALLACE,

The author, by wonderfully clear illustration and argument, shows the terribly corrupt nature of Freemasonry. No true woman who reads this will ever speak with approbation of this institution A 4-page tract 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1,000.

GERMAN CYNOSURE TRACT A.

Six Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason

By REV. A. GROLE, Pastor, German M. E. Church, WORCESTER, MASS.

This is our first German tract, and it is a good one; it ought to have a large circulation. Price 50 cents per 100; $4.00 per 1000.

Publishers' Department.

SHALL WE PUT THE DATE ON EACH PAGE OF THE CYNOSURE?

Half a score or more of our readers have requested us to do this and still it is not done, because it would add to the expense of publishing the Cynosure, and would add but a trifle to the real value of the paper, as the date is on the first and eighth pages now. We wish greatly that we could afford to make many other and greater improvements in the Cynosure, and if every reader of the Cynosure will send us one new subscription for a year we can and will make these improvements. May God give all a "mind to work" in this cause.

SUBSCRIPTIONS RECEIVED DURING WEEK ENDING JULY 5th, 1875, FROM S Allen, W Atkinson, C Bender, E Bascom N Bingham, C A Blanchard, F L Batchelder, H H Clay, F Christian, J Cole, V Carter, A Doremus, A L Dearing, F Fisher, H W Fowler, G Geiger, C Gray, L D Hollingsworth, S W Hackley, P Howe, J M Hodge, J E Irish, J T Kiggins, G C Kellogg, G W Lewis, R H Love, J McCree, L Meacham, J McConnell, W Mauchmer, S T Orr, I Preston, D Pricer, G Pelton, J O Risheil, J Squire, W J Selfridge, W G Steele, J M Shellebarger, J H Spohn, M R H Tudor, J W Thompson, J Wilkinson.

JUDGE C. R. BROWN, of Kalamazoo, Michigan, the author of "Government of Michigan," "Government of Ohio," etc., is now having engraved a very interesting map of the Old Northwestern Territory, showing the locations of the old forts, trading-posts, missions, and other points of historic interest, giving dates and other particulars concerning their establishment. This map will be furnished, by addressing the publisher, for fifty cents.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

How to Send Money.

Post office orders, checks or drafts on Chicago or towns east of Chicago, and currency by express may be sent at our risk. If it is not possible to send by either of the four ways named, money in a registered letter may be sent at our risk, but it is not as safe.

The date at which subscriptions expire is with each subscriber's name on the address label. Send renewals before this date occurs. Notice if this date is changed to correspond; if not or if the paper fails to come, write without delay.

We discontinue during the first part of each month all subscriptions which expire during the preceding one except such as are ordered continued with a promise to forward the money soon. We do not like to lose a single subscriber and will not remove names simply because the cash is not received promptly, if we understand that the paper is wanted. Address all letters with subscriptions or orders for Books, Tracts and donations to the Tract Fund to EZRA A. COOK & Co., 13 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

C & N-W LINES

This great corporation now owns and operates over two thousand miles of road. With one branch it reaches Racine, Kenosha, Milwaukee, and the country north thereof; with another line it pushes through Janesville, Watertown, Oshkosh, Fond du Lac, Green Bay, Escanaba, to Negaunee and Marquette; with another line it passes through Madison, Elroy, and for St. Paul and Minneapolis; branching westward from Elroy, it runs to and through Winona, Owatonna, St. Peter, Mankato, New Ulm, and stops not until Lake Kampeska, Dakota, is reached; another line starts from Chicago, and runs through Elgin and Rockford, to Freeport, and, via the Illinois Central, reaches Warren, Galena and Dubuque, and the country beyond. Still another line runs almost due westward from Chicago, and passes through Dixon, Sterling, Fulton, Clinton (Iowa), Cedar Rapids, Marshaltown, Grand Junction, Missouri Valley Junction, to Council Bluffs and Omaha. This last-named is the "GREAT TRANS-CONTINENTAL ROUTE," and the pioneer overland line for NEBRASKA, COLORADO, UTAH, IDAHO, MONTANA, NEVADA.

CALIFORNIA and the PACIFIC COAST.

It runs through the Garden of Illinois and Iowa, and is the best, safest, shortest and quickest route for OMAHA, LINCOLN, and other points in NEBRASKA; and for CHEYENNE, DENVER, SALT LAKE CITY, VIRGINIA CITY, CARSON, SACRAMENTO, SAN FRANCISCO, and all other points west of the Missouri River.

If you want to go to Milwaukee, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, De Pere, Ripon, Baraboo, Eau Claire, Hudson, Stillwater, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth, Breckenridge, Morehead, Fort Garry, Winona, Plattville, Dubuque, Waterloo, Fort Dodge, Sioux City, Yankton, Council Bluffs, Omaha, Lincoln, Denver, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, San Francisco, or a hundred other northren, north-western or western points, this line is the one you should take. The track is of the best steel rail, and all the appointments are first-class in every respect. The trains are made up of elegant new Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Coaches, luxurious Day Coaches, and pleasant lounging and smoking-cars. The cars are all equipped with the celebrated Miller Safety Platform, and patent Buffers and Couplings, Westinghouse Safety Air Brakes, and every other appliance that has been devised for the safety of passenger trains. All trains are run by telegraph. In a word, this GREAT LINE has the best and smoothest track, and the most elegant and comfortable equipment of any road in the West, and has no competitor in the country. It is eminently the favorite route with Chicagoans traveling west, north, or northwest, and is acknowledged by the traveling public to be the popular line for all points in Northren Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Northern Michigan, Dakota, Western Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Montana, Idaho, Nevada, California and the Pacific Slope.

On the arrival of the trains from the East or South, the trains of the Chicago and Northwestern Railway leave Chicago as follows:

For Council Bluffs, Omaha and California, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Drawing Room and Sleeping Cars through to Council Bluffs.

For St. Paul and Minneapolis, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached on both trains.

For Green Bay and Lake Superior, Two trains daily, with Pullman Palace Cars attached, and running through to Marquette.

For Milwaukee, Four through trains daily, Pullman cars on night trains.

For Winona and points in Minnesota, One through train daily.

For Dubuque, via Freeport, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Dubuque and La Crosse, via Clinton, Two through trains daily, with Pullman Cars on night train.

For Sioux City and Yankton, Two trains daily. Pullman Cars to Missouri Valley Junction.

For Lake Geneva, Four trains daily.

For Rockford, Sterling, Kenosha, Janesville, and other points, you can have from two to ten trains daily.

Topics of the Time.

Centennial season was handed on at Cambridge, Mass., on the third of July, the one hundredth anniversary of Washington's taking command of the revolted colonial forces. One witness yet remains of that memoriable transaction, for the same old elm under which Washington drew his liberating sword and formally assumed the leadership of the American army, yet lifts its branches above the spot, a faithful guardian of a memorable scene in the nation's history. The celebration was of course accompanied with less parade than the recent occasions at Bunker Hill, Concord and Lexington, as was fitting, but was in good taste and honored with participants of national fame.

The death of Hon. Frank P. Blair, Jr., in St. Louis, on Wednesday last, furnishes another warning comment against political ambition. Over two years ago he sustained a paralytic stroke from which he never recovered. His disease was superinduced by disappointment in the senatorial contest of 1872 with Hon. L. V. Bogy, in which the latter was victorious. In 1870 Blair headed the Liberal movement in his State, and after filling an unexpired term in the United States Senate he formed an arrangement with the Democratic leaders by which he was to be returned for six years. Blair it is said performed his part in good faith but found himself at election in alliance with treacherous men. The defeat was keenly felt and his physical health became affected from that time. Gen. Blair was a strong anti-slavery man before the war, and his influence kept Missouri from secession. His record as a soldier is everywhere well spoken of, except a mention in Gen. Sherman's memoirs.

Last fall Gov. Osborn of Kansas hoped to save the reputation of his State by misrepresenting the destitution of the famine-stricken districts, and made a late effort to retrieve the error. Now he wants to prevent any investigation or punishment of some other citizens of the State who committed acts of outrage, robbery and murder on a band of Osage Indians who were peacefully hunting, by giving them a military commission written after the outrage, but ante-dated so as to cover the crime with the show of authority. He has also protested to the government against settling several wild tribes in the Indian Territory, holding that the country should be open to white settlers. It is charitable to hope that he may find his mistake in Indian, as well as in grasshopper management, and before his term of office expires make such amendment as the honor of his position requires. The reputation of a State can be worse injured by the dishonorable management of its rulers than by anything else.

The Chicago Tribune foots up the loss of life during the last six months from epidemics, earthquakes, famine, floods, marine disasters, tornadoes, fires, explosions, snow-slides and railroad accidents at over ninety-six thousand; and these only disasters of considerable moment and not the daily accidents of mere local interest which would swell the list into the millions. The ravages of disease in the Pacific islands, of famine in Asia, the overwhelming of whole districts in South America, the piteous destruction of the Icelanders, shut away from the world's sympathies to the mercies of volcanic fires, the floods and tornadoes that have swept parts of our own country and of France—the religious observer cannot fail to notice in all these visitations, whether of judgment or warning, that the day of Christ is approaching, and they are wise who heed the admonition.

The Bishop of Verdun, like the Freemasons of Illinois, finds that fraud can overreach itself and that apparent popularity is death to measures of questionable character in the present century. He therefore says that the miracles at shrines of "the Virgin Mary" in France are not satisfactorily proved and that the priests must discourage the miracle business. For two or three years the whole papal church has been drawn toward a shrine at Paray-le-Monial and pilgrimages organized in Germany, England and even the United States, expended considerable devotion and more money in visiting the place and receiving the supposed sacred influences emanating therefrom. These pilgrimages have all along been suspected of being political devices, to work upon the superstitious mind of Catholic France and recover to it the zeal for Rome lost during the fiery reign of the Commune on the downfall of Napoleon. The plan has been more than successful. Pilgrimages and shrines have become so popular that their multiplication has overstocked the market and exposed the cheat. The Grand Lodge of Illinois has found the order in this State thumping on the same rock and have backed their engines; one lodge in Chicago has been merged into others, and at the last meeting of the body strinent measures were taken to prevent multiplication of lodges. Their wisdom came too late.

Masonry in the Rebellion.—An Opinion by Charles Sumner.

BY SAMUEL D. GREENE.

I was with the political party in, 1860, which elected Abraham Lincoln President. When he were about to take his seat at Washington, there was such threatenings such strife and conspiracies that I began to fear that Masonry and the old Morgan conspirators were at work again. Lincoln was saved and inaugurated President. It seemed to me a wonderful interposition of Divine Providence, for I knew by report that he was not a Freemason. Then Wm. H. Seward was made Secretary of State, and my old Anti-masonic feelings that had partially slumbered so long came back again like a giant waking from his slumbers refreshed. I wrote Mr. Sumner asking him if Lincoln's cabinet was made up in any part of rabid Masons. He sent me back the brief word: "Quite clear, except Blair in the Post-office." My curiosity still excited, I wrote again and asked him what proportion of the Southern Congressmen were Freemasons before the war and those who left and went into the rebellion. He sent back: "Nearly all." I held no further correspondence with him, except in relation to the murder of Lincoln, a few days after the surrender of Richmond, which I think I have sent you.

In February, 1866, noticing an article in the Cincinnati Commercial, which showed that nearly all the slave-holders of the Southern States were Freemasons, I wrote Mr. Sumner from Walnut Hill, Ohio, and asked him if in the lapse of time, he had gained any evidence during, or since the war, by which he believed that Southern Freemasons took any decided part in the rebellion? And he wrote in a letter, saying, that as near as he could ascertain, "about 700 Freemasons, with Jefferson Davis at their head, met in South Carolina and through their instrumentality eleven States were led out of the Union, and thereby our protracted war which cost us millions. But confidentially, we have a great work to do for the partially emancipated slave. Don't let this letter see the light."

I have often quoted the above, but never mentioned the author, and I never should have published any part of our correspondence, had he out-lived me, With this letter he sent me his speech, "Taxation without Representation is Tyranny."

In 1871 I sent him a copy of the "Broken Seal," for which he returned me his thanks, saying, "I am glad you lived to publish it."

When I read the eulogies upon the Hon. Charles Sumner, I can hardly realize the fact that for forty-four years that great statesman should have remembered and reposed so much confidence in me from the facts he gained from my lips in his honored father's parlor in 1830. Only that he beheld my hazardous situation at the time, as principal officer over the village of Batavia, New York, saving life and property, and at the same time, inside of a Masonic lodge of which Capt. William Morgan was a member, fulfilling my legal oath with moral courage sufficient to discard the illegal Masonic oaths imposed upon me by fraud eight months before. Only as it developed a principle implanted in his heart that he would do right, and it shown out plainly when at the close of his first speech in the Senate of the United States, he declared in the face of slavery: "By the constitution I have sworn to support, I am bound to disobey this act." And in the last campaign for President, when he and my son were mutually interested for Horace Greeley, Mr. Sumner observed to him: "I always retained a friendship for your father."

Past Master Ronayne vs. Keystone Lodge, No. 639, Chicago.

MR. EDITOR:—In a late number of the Cynosure in your editorial account of the proceedings of the recent Anniversary of the N. C. A. at Pittsburgh, mention is made of my name in the following connection on page 13, to wit: "RENUNCIATIONS."—"The most conspicuous instance of this sort during the present year, is that of Edmond Ronayne, Past Master of Keystone Lodge, Chicago. Becoming convinced that Freemasonry was an anti-Christian deception and fraud, he advised some who had entered, to go no further. For this offense he was expelled from the lodge, and is now initiating candidates publicly in Chicago, and surrounding villages."

The statement contained in this extract is certainly true, though it does not give the whole truth, and as I do not remember of ever having explained to you all the facts in the case, I thought the time had now arrived for publishing in full the "charge" and specifications preferred against me by "Keystone Lodge, No 639," in order that your numerous subscribers and all into whose hands this number of the Cynosure may come, might be able to have a correct and thorough understanding of my reasons for, and the manner in which I left Keystone Lodge. The copy of the "charges," which I transmit herewith, you will observe is official, the seal of the lodge being attached; and I will simply remark that it is important to note this particular, as it forever prevents Keystone Lodge, No. 639, from going back on her own record.

CHARGES.

To the W. Master, Wardens and Brethren of Keystone Lodge, No. 639, A. F. and A. Masons: The undersigned, in the discharge of his official duty as set forth in Sec. 2, Art. I., Part 3d of the by-laws of our Grand Lodge, do hereby charge Bro. Edmond Ronayne, a member of said Key-stone Lodge with gross un-Masonic conduct, in this, to wit:

Specification I. That the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne on or about April 23d, A. D. 1873, in the city of Chicago did persuade and advise Bro. Wm. Aiken, then secretary of said lodge, to keep and withhold certain moneys belonging to said Lodge, with intent to cheat, wrong and defraud said Keystone Lodge.

Witnesses—Bros. Pflaum, Becker, Lally and Aiken.

Specification II. That the said Brother Edmond Ronayne did on or about June 10th, A. D. 1874, in the room adjacent to said lodge-room of Keystone Lodge, attempt to discourage certain Fellow crafts from advancing further in Masonry by denouncing the institution of Freemasonry as a d—d humbug and fraud, and other words of a similar character; also threatening to expose the workings of Masonry to the world.

Witnesses—Bros. Glover, Sittig, Spathold and David.

Specification III. That the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne did on about August 20th, A. D. 1874, violato Sec. 4, Art. xiv., Part 2nd of the by-laws of our Grand Lodge: 1st, By wilfully exposing the character of his ballot; 2nd, by an attempt to interrupt the legitimate labors of said Keystone Lodge by casting a black ball against the advancement of a Fellow craft, and afterward communicating the fact to others.

Witnesses—Cunningham and David.

Specification IV. That the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne did on or about Oct. 6th, A. D. 1874, threaten in profane language at said Hall of Keystone Lodge, to do bodily harm to Bro. Morris Pflaum, a Master Mason of said Lodge, also calling said brother a thief and swindler in open lodge.

Witnesses—Bro. Ekvall, Cronin, Pflaum, Prince and others.

All of which acts of the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne were in violation of his duties and obligation as a Master Mason and to the injury of his brethren as well as to the harmony and prosperity of the said Keystone Lodge and to the scandal and disgrace of the Masonic fraternity at large. Wherefore, it is demanded that the said Bro. Edmond Ronayne be put upon trial therefor, and dealt with according to Masonic law and usages.

Signed, OSCAR L. EKVALL, J. W. Keystone Lodge. No. 639, A. F. and A. Masons.

Oct. 21*st*, A. D. 1874.

It will be observed that the foregoing document charges me with "gross unmasonic conduct" and particularizes the "gross" acts of which I had been guilty in four "specifications." There was a fifth specification but it was so glaringly false and no witness being present to sustain it, it was withdrawn before my trial commenced, and they were obliged to content themselves with the four above given.

Now your readers will bear in mind that my first offense is said to have been committed "on or about April 23d, 1873," and consisted, as alleged, of "persuading and advising Bro. William Aiken, then secretary of said lodge, to keep and withhold certain moneys, etc. Byreferring to the Grand Lodge Reports of Illinois, it will be found that I held the office of Senior Warden in the Lodge in 1872. I was Worshipful Master in 1873; and refused; positively refused re-election; was Master in 1874, and fear, am doomed by fate to wear that questionable distinction among men and Masons during the rest of my natural life. On leaving the chair on Jan. 7th, 1874, I assisted in installing my successor, J. H. Dixon, better known as Detective Dixon, and on Jan. 14th, 1874, the lodge, amidst considerable enthusiasm and great rejoicing, presented me with a beautiful "Past Master's regalia," consisting of a collar and apron and also $75 in money, while Worshipful Master Dixon presented me with a "Past Master's Jewel" purchased from his own private purse and bearing the following inscription—"To W. Bro. Ed. Ronayne from Bro. J. H. Dixon." Now if I was guilty of "gross un-Masonic conduct in April, 1873, why in the name of common sense and common honesty did the lodge make me the recipient of those beautiful and valuable presents in Jan., 1874. Was it for good or bad conduct that Keystone Lodge, No. 639, gave me $75 in cash and the regalia above mentioned? And if I was guilty of "gross un-Masonic conduct" in April 23d, 1873, how is it possible they allowed me to go unpunished until Oct., 1874? This whole business of charging me with "gross un-Masonic conduct" supposed to have been committed in April, 1873, and preferring charges against me in Oct., 1874, is as great a humbug as Freemasonry itself, and that is without doubt the most gigantic humbug the world ever saw. The facts in the case are simply these: I was W. M., in 1873 and William Aiken was secretary. From the night of his initiation he was disgusted with the institution, but at my earnest solicitation he allowed himself to be put in nomination for the office of secretary and was unanimously elected. We always paid $100 a year to our secretary, and Mr. Aiken was given to understand by both Bro. Dixon and myself that he would be paid a like amount. The lodge owed him for his services $33.33 on May 1st, 1873. He received $21 in his official capacity on the night of the 23d of April, and as he had pressing need of the money and could not possibly wait for two weeks when the next "regular" of the lodge would be held, I undoubtedly authorized him to use the money, feeling confident that I was only doing a simple act of justice and merely paying the brother only a part of what was lawfully his due. Masonic law and usage, bore me out in doing this, both as W. M., of the lodge and as member of the Finance Committee, and by the regular attendants of the lodge it was considered at the time perfectly legitimate. Furthermore, at the close of 1873 I appointed a special Finance or Auditing Committee who examined all the accounts, bills, vouchers, &c. belonging to the lodge, and if my official conduct was "grossly un-Masonic," on the 23d of April preceding, why did not this committee so report, in order that the lodge, instead of presenting me with $75 cash and a beautiful and expensive Past Master's regalia and jewel for my eminent services, both as W. M. and lecturer of the lodge, might put me "upon my trial" and so suspend or expel me as the enormity of my offense deserved? One word more and I'll drop this "specification" for the present. In December, 1870, a man named Adolphus L. Miller, a Jew, was initiated in Keystone Lodge, hurried through the degrees up to Master Mason and finally elected secretary. He was "installed" in Jan., 1871. He was scarcely able to write his own name decently and hence was utterly unfit to fill the duties of his office. He never did perform them, and yet at the last "regular communication" in March, 1871, he presented a bill for $25 for services as secretary, and obtained the money under false pretences and on the following morning decamped for parts unknown, in company, (as was alleged at the time) of a woman of loose morals who lived on Division Street. He also took $78 of the lodge funds and left his own Christian wife and five small children in the greatest destitution. I preferred charges against this scoundrel half a dozen times; but the matter was always allowed to die out simply to please the Jewish members; and, while they used every effort to screen and protect him from merited punishment, they utterly refused to pay Mr. Aiken (than whom an honester or more respectable man cannot be found in Chicago) the balance of his wages because, as a few of us believed at the time, he was my personal friend, and to be revenged in some way for my public denunciation of the institution seven or eight months previous.

To specification No. 2, I plead guilty. This is the head and front of my offending. To denounce Freemasonry in the lodge—to call it a fraud and a humbug, and to threaten to expose its workings to the world, is a crime so heinous in even a Past Master that nothing short of his expulsion could, or did, satisfy the great moral luminaries, who shed their bright refulgence on the nightly gatherings of the poor dupes of Keystone and other Masonic lodges in Chicago. But I did more than this; I informed Bros. Sittig, Glover, David and Becker, that they could purchase more Masonry for 25 cents in any respectable book store in the city, than they could buy in Keystone Lodge for $50. The mock-auction stores which swarm on Canal street and other thoroughfares of Chicago sell snide watches worth, 75 cents at wholesale, for from $40 to $75, and the keepers of those infamous dens if caught at their nefarious traffic are arrested, fined and imprisoned; but what difference, I ask, is there between selling snide jewelry and snide Masonry? There is not a Master of a lodge in Illinois nor in the United States, nor in the world that does not know that he is selling secrets which are no secrets and charging from $25 to $100 for so-called degrees, which can be purchased of Mr. E. A. Cook, or any other respectable bookseller, for 25 cents; and because I dared to think thus and to give open expression to my thoughts and opinions, and especially within the sacred (!) precincts of a Masonic lodge, they rummaged all the musty records of Keystone No. 639, and spent six or seven months in the search, aided by the keen-scentedness of a shrewd detective, himself Master of the lodge, and yet they were unable to find anything against me, except that I paid a worthy man what he had honestly earned and that I expressed myself ready to stand upon the defensive, should I be assailed, either in the lodge-room or in any other place.

Specification 3d is false as the members of Keystone Lodge well know, because no man can expose his ballot from the fact that in balloting he has to put his hand into the end of the ballot-box and deposit his ballot through a small hopper into another compartment in the box before he draws his hand out. But granting that I did cast a black ball, was it not my constitutional right to do so? Why are black-balls put into the ballot-box if nobody is ever to use them? A man is at perfect liberty to vote black or white, just as he pleases, and I deny the right of any authority in Masonry, Grand Master, or even the Grand Lodge, to dictate to, or demand the character of a brother's ballot.

To specification 4th I also plead guilty, in calling Senior Warden Pflaum "a thief and swindler," and simply remark that upon the vote of the lodge being taken on this specification, 29 voted for me and 9 for Morris Pflaum, thereby conclusively proving by an overwhelming majority that I was right in my estimate of the brother's character, and that he was all, if not more, than I publicly represented him to be. As for threatening to do him bodily harm, I certainly would be a silly coward if I allowed him to abuse and mob me in the privacy of a lodge room with doors barred and bolted and guarded outside by a tyler with a naked sword in his hand.

And now, to sum up, what am I charged with by Keystone Lodge No. 639? First, that I paid Brother Aiken $21 out of $33.33, which was due him for work done. Second, that I black-balled somebody, and that I held the ball in my hand so that some other person could see it. Thirdly, that I called Bro. Morris Pflaum a thief and swindler, which he was subsequently voted to be; and lastly, that I denounced the ancient (?) and honorable (!) institution of Freemasonry as a humbug and fraud "and threatened to expose its workings to the world." This latter charge is the only one in reality which Keystone or any other lodge of Masons dare bring against me; the other specifications were simply so much silly trash thrown in, in order, if possible, to swell the number. And now that I have exceeded the just limits of the space you so kindly accord me in your truly great Anti-masonic journal, allow me to say in conclusion that I thank God I had courage enough to denounce the miserable sham called Freemasonry, even in the very lodge room where I lectured upon and taught its unchristian and infidel tenets for four years; and I pray that He will open the eyes of my brethren in the lodge, that they also may see it in its true character, and so "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," but rather expose them.

E. RONAYNE,
Past Master Keystone Lodge, No. 639.

A Noble Reply.

To editors of religious papers who quail before the lodge or truckle for its favor the following from the New York Daily Witness is sincerely commended:

To the Edutor of the Witness:

DEAR SIR: When the Witness was started, I hoped that we would have a daily newspaper which would attract and unite Evangelical Christians, and lead them in the battle with the enemy, especially the arch enemy, Rome. I have had occasion to notice in the Witness articles calculated to drive away from the list of subscribers and readers many whom we cannot afford to lose. Surely, when such good men as Washington, and Bishop Simpson, and at least half the Evangelical ministers of the United States, can conscienciously join, and remain members of the Masonic fraternity—a useful newspaper like the Witness ought not to weaken its influence, and divide Christian men and societies, by doing the unclean work which Rome has hitherto engaged in, viz: Excommunicating and anathmetizing men for being Freemasons.

For the sake of the good cause, stop. I am a well-wisher of the Witness, and hope to see it some day the leading daily of New York city. But, how can it expect to be when it drives away the very ones whose support and influence are indispensable to its ultimate success?

"United, we stand—divided we fall!"

Yours hopefuily, GIUSEPPE GIORNO

REPLY.

From the name, we presume the writer of the above letter to be an Italian, and we can easily account for his predilection for Freemasonry. In Italy, Austria and other countries where Rome and despotism heretofore reigned, secret societies offered the only means of leaguing against them, and oaths of secrecy, fidelity, and mutual defense were excusable, if not laudable; but in a free country, where the law protects all alike, secret leagues for mutual comfort and protection are not only works of supererogation, but disturbing elements in the regular course of politics and justice. We are earnestly opposed to the dark, secret, despotic system of the Romish Church; but that is not to be overthrown by secrecy and darkness. On the contrary, openness and light are what the Gospel inculcates. And as for introducing discord into churches, we may well repel such an accusation from Masonry with the words of Elijah, when Ahab accused him of troubling Israel: "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house." We are ready to unite with any one in Christ, but not in the deism of Masonry. Washington identified himself so little with Masonry that it is a disputed point whether or not he was ever a Mason at all; and we have known ministers of the Gospel who had been induced to join the Masons, who ever after left them severely alone, and were as little proud of the connection as Vice-President Wilson was of his alleged connection with the Know-Nothings. We do not believe that a half or a tenth part of American preachers of the Gospel are Freemasons, and we are inclined to think most of those who are so, believe they made a mistake. We cordially thank our correspondent for his good opinion of the Witness, which we doubt not will be increased by this frank explanation.

Anniversary Correspondence.

FROM BREMER COUNTY (IOWA) ASSOCIATION.

To the National Christian Association, in Convention Assembled,

GREETING:—We, an association auxiliary to your honorable body, wish to address you expressing our most hearty sympathy and pledge you our earnest co-operation in your noble work of reform. Although we are unable on such a short time after this meeting to send a delegate to your assembly, we would respectfully set forth the following views on the the subjects herein stated, in regard to the carrying forward of our work in the reform.

Politically, we are in favor of action, as soon as may be practicable, and our motto will be "Vote as you pray," and our prayer is that secrecy may be removed from church, state and courts, which can only be done by refusing to vote for any person who belongs to any secret order.

We are in favor of accepting the Carpenter Donation and will do our part in the payment of the same.

We think it perhaps unwise at the present time, to connect with this reform the "God-in-the-Constitution" movement. However, do not wish to be understood as desiring a cessation of the discussion of the merits of it in our organ. But that it may not be deemed obligatory on members of our Association to support or not support this movement.

We desire a speedy organization of our State and of all States.

P. WOODRING, Sec'y.

Gen. Sherman's Memoirs.

General Sherman seems to think that he is strong enough to defy all public sentiment, and assault whoever he pleases without danger to himself; but he could not be more unhappily mistaken. There is a certain respect due to the faith and customs of our people which no man can withhold and offend with impunity. A man may drink whiskey and swear, and yet be possibly a person of high attainments, an excellent soldier, an honorable citizen; but when that man chooses to tell in his autobiography not only of these vices but just how he indulges in them, the impression is irresistible that he lacks one of the very important characteristics of greatness. General Sherman's book is very freely interlarded with oaths from beginning to end, an exhibition of very bad taste, to say the least, though they are put down for the most part as the expression of others. The following passage shows, however, that he was not indisposed to be profane himself at times, and thinks it now of sufficient importance to particularly recite these oaths in his memoirs. Speaking of his return from the South, and his first visit to Mr. Lincoln, he says:

One day John Sherman took me with him to see Mr. Lincoln. We walked into the room where the secretary to the President sits; we found the room full of people, and Mr. Lincoln sat at the end of the table, talking with three or four gentlemen, who soon left. John walked up, shook hands, and took a chair near him, holding in his hand some papers referring to minor appointments in the State of Ohio, which formed the subject of conversation. Mr. Lincoln took the papers, said he would refer them to the proper heads of departments, and would be glad to make the appointments asked for, if not already promised. John then turned to me and said, "Mr. President, this is my brother, Colonel Sherman, who is just up from Louisiana; he may give you some information you want."

"Ah," said Mr. Lincoln, "how are they getting along down there?" I said, "They think they are getting along swimmingly—they are preparing for war." "Oh well!" said he, "I guess we'll manage to keep house." I was silenced, said no more to him, and we soon left. I was sadly disappointed, and remembered that I broke out on John, d—ning the politicians generally, and saying: "You have got things in a hell of a fix, and you may get them out as best you can."

General Sherman speaks in other places of "dismounting and taking a drink," as if it were part of a soldier's duty, which he desired to impress forcibly on the rising generation. General Sherman should remember that he is one to whom the people have looked for example and precept. The boys in our schools write essays and deliver orations upon his character and achievements. Are such recitals calculated to impress our youth with that regard for sobriety which is so necessary to their development as good citizens? Is it not enough to do these things, without incorporating them in a history of war?

These are some of the minor defects which mar General Sherman's work. But there is another phase of his character revealed in the book which will go far toward dethroning him as one of the idols of the American heart. Heretofore the country has looked upon him as one who left his place in the South to fly to the aid of the Government, assaulted by traitors. He left Louisiana, it is true, because he could not take up arms for the Confederacy; but not because he desired particularly to fight for the Union. He tells us that he considered the difficulties had been brought about by the politicians, and he was in favor of letting them fight it out. Analyzed, this is the old condemnation of any attempt to stay the aggressive march of slavery. But he shows us he was then, as throughout the war, the unthinking machine, ready as the soldier to do the behests of his superiors, but having little faith in the moral force and justice of our cause. He wrote to his friends in Louisiana that the Union might break into many fragments, but it would be some time doing it; there would, he thought, be an effort to prevent it, and he therefore preferred to go North. He believed this, and so expressed himself, but there was none of the indignation of the patriot at the traitorous acts of the Lousiana militia, and he even received arms captured from the United States, and receipted for them as Superintendent of the Military School in Louisiana, without protest, though he states that this annoyed him. When he came North, it was with the evident feeling that the people up here were very weak and pusillanimous, while the South was most strong and warlike. He was disgusted with the homely remark of Mr. Lincoln that "he guessed we could manage to keep house," and having told his brother that the politicians had got the country in a fix and might get it out, he started for St. Louis, to engage in business and let the country take care of itself, so far as he was concerned. He declined repeated offers in the volunteer service, and it was only when he was at last made a colonel in the regular army that he threw up his place in St. Louis and began to assist in saving the country.—Inter-Ocean.

The attempts that are being made on a large scale to do temperance work, plainly indicate, among others, these two growing convictions: First, that there must be more of conscience in the temperance reformation; and second, that there must be some kind of concerted action and consolidated organization. Heretofore very much of the temperance enterprise has been mere play or pantomime. Silly societies with grips, passwords, and various childish emblems; popular uprisings and local spasms; hasty legislation, to be rescinded just as hastily. All this and more has disfigured the good cause till sensible people have become literally worn out with the pretense and frivolity. They now desire to go to work with earnestness and in a methodical, regular manner, leaving the nonsense of lodges and regalias to those who can afford to make sport over the suffering and perishing. And temperance lecturers and other speakers are beginning to discuss the subject in the serious way its character demands without using their opportunities simply for purposes of rant and gasconade. We have hope of the cause as it begins to take this direction, and think the reform of the reformers is the greatest we know anything about.—United Presbyterian.

Reform News.

—The General Agent returned from Iowa in poor health. He remained in Chicago to attend the adjourned meeting of the corporate Association, and started on Friday for Ohio where he will remain several weeks if the Lord prospers his work. Let the prayers of God's children follow him.

—The Ohio State Association holds it annual meeting in Xenia during the first of August. Mark the time when announced.

—Friends of the reform will rejoice to see an awakening in Vermont which looks toward a State organization and something of the old time enthusiasm for the protection of social and political order from the incursions of the lodge.

—Bro. Hinman, the Illinois agent is working in Kane and DeKalb counties for a short time, and will then visit the southern part of the State.

—The Corresponding Secretary, C. A. Blanchard, leaves next week for Pennsylvania and possibly Massachusetts. He will speak at various points on the way and labor in every way to advance the interests of the Association.

—Samuel D. Greene, although at the age when most men are superannuated, is still active in the reform with pen and voice. He is trying to raise a lecture fund in Massachusetts and get the State organized.

The Iowa State Meeting at Clear Lake, June 30th.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved, that we as citizens of the State of Iowa in convention assembled, viewing with alarm the encroachments of this lodge conspiracy upon our social, civil, political and religious rights, do solemnly declare our purpose, by all lawful means, to expose, withstand and remove this conspiracy and cordially solicit the co-operation of all who are like-minded in this work.

WHEREAS, the National Christian Association seeks to unite all who believe in the equal rights of men as set forth in the Declaration of our National Independence upon the Christian platform of "supreme love to God and equal rights to man," as opposed to the sworn favoritism of the lodge, thus forming a nucleus around which men of every nationality, political faith and Christian connection can gather to unite their efforts and prayer for the extermination of a common foe;

Resolved, that we recognize in the National Christian Association an efficient agency adapted to the promotion of this end, and desiring to co-operate and aid in this our common cause, we will use our best endeavors to secure the objects set forth in the foregoing preamble.

After the passage of the foregoing by a unanimous vote the convention listened to a very earnest, able and exhaustive address by Rev. J. Hawkins, which, all things considered, was one of the most convincing, irresistible speeches I ever listened to. At the close of Bro. H.'s address the following received a hearty and unanimous approval.

It having come to the knowledge of this convention that certain reports derogatory to the moral character of Rev. J. Hankins have been put in circulation, by which his influence has been endangered where the facts were not known, and believing it to be just to our brother and to the cause in which he is laboring so efficiently, to give a public expression of our views;

Therefore we would say that so far as we have been able to learn and after such examination as we have been able to make we are persuaded that Bro. Hawkins has been greatly traduced and maligned by those whose evil deeds he is ably and truthfully exposing and we take pleasure in bearing testimony to his faithfulness and efficiency as a lecturer in the anti-secrecy reform.

After the transaction of a few items of miscellaneous business, the following resolution was unanimously approved:

Resolved, that we endorse Rev. J. Hankins as State lecturer and agent for the State of Iowa for the term of six months, and recommend his appointment by the National Christian Association to that position and request him to report his labors monthly to the National Christian Association and also to the Recording Secretary of our State Association.

Immediately on the passage of this resolution, measures were adopted and the work of securing for Bro. H. a support commenced. When I see men who mean what they say, pledging fifty and a hundred dollars for his support I have little fears for Bro. H. in that direction.

The matter of a home and headquarters for our reform being under discussion, after the movement hitherto and its present status were fully explained, the following, backed by subscriptions on the spot running up into the hundreds, was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, in the opinion of this convention the anti-secrecy reform has hitherto been greatly hindered in its work for want of a home and suitable head quarters, and means sufficient to own and publish its own literature, as also to aid more largely in the lecture work; and

WHEREAS, Philo Carpenter, Esq., of Chicago, Illinois, has offered to donate to the National Christian Association for its uses and objects a suitable property upon the most reasonable conditions. Therefore,

Resolved, that we assure Mr. Carpenter of our appreciation of his liberality and while we acknowledge this favor with gratitude to God and to his servant, by whose hand it is proffered, we recommend that immediate and diligent efforts be put forth to obtain the amount necessary to secure this munificent gift for our needy cause.

POLITICAL.

After a brief comparison of views on the question of political action, in which there was great unanimity, the following received a most hearty and enthusiastic affirmative vote:

Resolved, that we hold as auspicious and timely the nominations made by the Mass Political Convention at Pittsburgh, Pa., June 9th, 1875, and we hereby ratify said nominations and will use all just and lawful means to elect to the office of President of these United States in 1876, Hon. J. B. Walker of Illinois, and Hon. Donald Kirkpatrick of New York to the office of Vice-president.

Resolved, that we hereby appoint D. W. Lyons, Esq., of Mason City, Rev. I. L. Bookwalter of Western and David Platner, Esq., of Mt. Vernon, a central committee for the State of Iowa, with instructions to make all provisions necessary to enable the friends of our cause to comply with the forms of law in such cases made and provided, in casting their votes for men who are free from all secret, sworn or pledged alliances of partiality or favoritism.

The foregoing among resolutions passed by the convention will give the readers of the Cynosure an idea of the work accomplished. Did space allow it would be a pleasure to speak of the able addresses delivered at the several sessions and of the indefatiguable labors of friends in getting up the meetings, among whom Bro. Palmeter, Bro. Lyons, Rev. Allen, Bro. Mayne, the Bros. Howard, father and son, with honorable women not a few, to whose active efforts under God the success of the convention is largely due. But I must leave details for the Secretary to give, if he is so minded, simply adding that the addresses were appropriate and worthy of commendation throughout, and that of Bro. Bookwalter was by vote requested for publication in the Cynosure, where I hope to see it in due time.

Thus another milestone is passed and with renewed courage I am looking forward to a series of State and mass conventions during the approaching fall and winter that shall tell for good upon the future of this nation, and hasten the happy day, when not the sable sons of Africa only, but their enslaved brethren of fairer hue, shall be emancipated from a bondage more cruel and unrelenting than that imposed by the bloody code of Southern conspirators, and but recently blotted from the nation's schedule of legalized crimes by the blood of half a million of her bravest sons, whose bodies, wrapped in the flag of our country, are awaiting their summons to that tribunal where the "free in Christ" shall receive their promised rewards. May God hasten the day of our nation's emancipation, and for this let us both labor and pray.

Yours in Christ,

J. P. STODDARD.

Jottings from the New York Field.

SYRACUSE, July, 6, 1875.

From Batavia, where my last letter left me, I passed on to Warsaw, where I found friends to our cause in Frank Miller, Hon. Augustus Frank, Hon. Seth M. Gates, and others. Those named are all supporters of the Cynosure. Here I gave two lectures, very much to the discomfort of the craft. During the day preceeding my first lecture, my friend, Mr. Miller, was informed by a leading Mason that if the lecturer told any lies he would "pitch into him." At the close of my last speech, I gave an invitation to "pitch in," and waited for a response. As none came the friends had reason to believe I had "told no lies;" of which they were not slow to take advantage. But though we have many friends here, there is a lack of courage to go forward and make an earnest attack upon the enemy. Only one of the village pastors (the Presbyterian,) had sufficient courage or interest enough to bring him out to hear. The Congregationalist church of which I was a member over 30 years ago, and to which Mr. Gates now belongs, had once, and still has some kind of standing testimony upon its records, against the lodge, but how long it will remain there has become a serious problem to its friends. One after another, the witnessing churches, in different denominations are succumbing to the power of the lodge. "While men slept, his enemy came and sowed tares among the wheat." The general prevalence of this state of things is alarming to all who love a pure Christianity. The pulpit of that church is silenced as against the enemy, much to the grief and chagrin of many of its old and true-hearted members. The church has a glorious temperance anti-slavery record, but alas! cannot be counted on fully for this fight. In no church in the village is there an open door for the Anti-masonic lecturer. So it is with all our cities and large towns unless there be in them a church of the Free Methodist, Wesleyan, U. P., U. B., Covenanter, or other of the smaller denominations, which makes opposition to secret societies a specialty, and sometimes, not even among them, so great is the fear of the lodge.

There is in all this a fearful moral cowardice, a treason to principle, a disloyalty to Christ, awful to contemplate. I will apologize for the above expressions just so soon as I am convinced that they are not true, and it was not my solemn duty to publish them to the world. Till then, let them stand over my name, as expressing the convictions of an honest man. I mean these assertions to apply more particularly to those ministers and churches where opposition to secretism is a part of the creed, and where their supposed moral convictions out of that creed grew.

It is a lamentable thing that with many, a house of worship is becoming a thing too sacred for any of those moral teachings, such as temperance lectures, or lectures against Masonry and its kindred evils, which are as much a part of the religion of Christ, and as naturally grow out of his Gospel, as anything that is dispensed from those pulpits from Sabbath to Sabbath, and should therefore have such place and opportunity in the house of God as their relative importance entitles them to. This pernicious feeling which is daily growing stronger, is robbing the people of most of our smaller towns—where there are no public halls—of all opportunity of being enlightened on subjects of the highest importance. Masonry, like a blood-hound stands guard at the doors of these sanctuaries, and bars the entrance to every one who would warn the people of their danger. But pardon the digression. Warsaw does not stand alone, nor even pre-eminent in this matter. I hope for her yet.

In Perry, also in Wyoming county, I gave three lectures, which were well attended. Here I had no difficulty in getting the Baptist church, which still maintains her olden testimony against the lodge. This is a strong church, with a glorious record for temperance, Anti-slavery, and Anti-masonry, and she has thrived on this diet. When I first knew the church in 1840, Elon Galusha, that glorious old reformer was her pastor, and now that thirty-five years have passed away, his memory and his lessons live in many hearts. For the last fifteen years, if I remember right, D. B. Cheney has been the pastor, until worn out with prolonged toil, and broken affections, he was compelled to hand in his resignation, about the time I visited his church. He was a true leader in all these reforms, and held the church to her position, and was a power in the Association in the same direction.

After closing my lectures the friends formed a good town organization, which will I hope be a power for good. The pastor of the M. E. church attended some of the lectures, and manifested a good degree of interest in the subject. If my memory serves me right, this is correct. The Free Methodists have a thriving body here, and were well represented in the meetings, showing a fealty to their distinctive principles worthy of all praise. While I was treated kindly by many whose names I do not remember, I was indebted to Dea. Westlake and Bro. Tinkham and their families for many kindnesses.

The village of Castile, lies six miles south of Perry. Here, assisted by Bro. J. B. Slocum, a Baptist, and by my old teacher, Davis W. Smith, I gave two lectures,—the last evening to a very large audience, among whom were many Masons who lost their jewels in a very interesting and amusing manner. The only thing, however, particularly noticeable, was a little trick, apparently concerted, which consisted in charging me with saying something which I did not say and when I denied, they cried out, "We can prove it by 20 or 30 witnesses!" I had not met with this before; nor have I since, but it was truly Masonic.

In giving the Master's oath, which I informed the audience, was given as Morgan Masonry, I used the term "Hermaphrodite," whereupon one of the sons of Hiram rose and called me a "liar," saying that word was not in the oath. I knew as well as he did that that word was discarded by many, if not all the lodges at present, but it amused me to see how nicely the craft man was caught in his own trap; for, by saying that word was not in the oath, and stopping there in his denials, he virtually admitted that I gave the rest of it correctly. When I left, as I was compelled to do to take the cars for Warsaw, in order to preach the next day, some of the citizens and the craft were having a lively time. I heard one man saying to the Masons: "It seems to me you don't like it very well; seems to scratch a little as it goes down." As I passed down the street on my way to the cars, an egg struck the ground and broke a few feet behind me, intended no doubt, to be a strong and nasty Masonic argument. On the whole I gave the Castile lodge the credit of being the liveliest institution of the kind I have met with except the one in Franklin county, about which I wrote last winter. I hope they will appreciate the compliment. On the whole, as Masons, if they will be Masons, I am indebted to them for assisting me in showing up their institution. So mote it be.

J. L. Barlow.

Proceedings of the Windham County Anti-masonic Society.

At its Fifth Annual Meeting, at Fayetteville, Vermont, on the 29th day of June, 1875.

REPORT.

Since our last annual meeting not much has been done by the society, though the cause has been steadily growing in other quarters, especially in the North-west. Masonry has become too deeply rooted in Windham county to be easily effected; but it begins to be questioned and discussed everywhere. It is high time, else the country will cease to be the home of Liberty, and become her tomb, from which there can be no resurrection, though strewn with the prettiest flowers of May by the smoothest politicians in the land. In New England, the land of the Puritans, Connecticut has taken the lead in forming a State Anti-masonic Society, which is made up of sound Republican men who are determined to have the balance of power in the State, and thus deprive Masonry of the control of the Republican party, and of its corrupt and demoralizing influence upon the community.

On the other hand, the Masons, true to their tactics, have rallied to the support of their institution another secret society, called grangerism. This society, formed by a set of scheming politicians in Washington, is claimed to have spread rapidly here in Vermont, the farmers enlisting into it in great numbers, and honestly believing, perhaps, that the laws of trade can be controlled by secret grips and signs, and closed doors, while in reality they are only giving their support and countenance to the lodge, which the laws of the State seek to suppress. Owing to this new phase of Masonry, our bill brought forward again in the Legislature for securing fair and impartial juries, free from the control of the Masonic ring, wholly failed of being carried through. It received far less consideration than it had done the session before, while the Masons were yet unreinforced by their new allies the grangers. It was evident that a corrupt influence, proceeding from Washington, was having more power among the legislators of Vermont than was possessed by the people of the State themselves. This power drew over into the secret lodge some of the very agents whom we had supposed to be men of the old type of Vermont character, and upon whom we had relied for the support of our bills, and the rights of the freeman of the State.

In return for this conniving at the violation of the State law against Masonry, these Masonic allies, the grangers, claim, it is said, that they have lowered the price of Western produce. In exchange for principles, they have cheapened flour, they have lowered the standard of character of their State and of themselves, for the sake of lowering the price of corn meal. They have helped to drive away our old class of farmers, men of open and fair dealing, from the State, by enabling Western farmers to undersell them at their own doors, so that our farms are being rapidly vacated and going to decay! This work has been done under the rule of the Republican party managed by the lodge.

But it were well if the decay and dilapidation stopped at our farming interests, precious as they are, and did not extend into our morals and manners. Under the sway of our Masonic rulers, distinguished invitations and honors are bestowed upon swindlers and speculators, back pay grabbers, habitual violaters of law, who make law a personal convenience rather than a public obligation, while a corrupt and partial administration of justice, political favoritism and jugglery, neglect of official duty, unequal and onerous taxation, apathy and indifference to public interests, and a servile adherence to lodge rules, have become the normal condition of society. Large amounts —millions of real estate are exempted from taxes, while the widow's mite of money in some savings bank is hunted out and taxed more heavily than any real estate. These tender sympathizers with widows and orphans, and "poor boys," are the very first to oppress that class of the community. They are also seemingly zealous, openly, for extending the political franchise as far as possible to every man, but they secretly circumvent the measure by confining the controlling power over the voters to a small oligarchical ring, the Masonic lodge.

At our last meeting we nominated a good Republican ticket for certain county officers. Among these was a candidate for sheriff, one of the most important ministers of the law, who ought to be free from all Masonic connivance or ring influence. Our Anti-masonic candidate was honest, trustworthy, and unexceptionable, having already held that office with credit and satisfaction. The Masonic candidate, who possessed the merit of giving the true grip, and who was believed to be an habitual abettor in the violation of two of the statutes of the State, was preferred to ours, and, while violating the laws of the State himself, was elected to an important office for seeing the law impartially administered and executed! Such is Masonry, always.

One would suppose that it is about time that a free people should begin to inquire when this violation and contempt of law under the baneful influence of Masonry, beginning with the general government and extending down into our most immediate local interests, is to end. Have not the American people had enough of it since the beginning of the civil war? Is no amount of disregard of law or neglect of official duty; or silent tacit support of Credit Mobilier swindles, inviting its leaders here to address the State on agriculture; or the active maintainence of the corrupted of all privileges, viz., the franking privilege; or the back-pay grab, differing from these only in the shameless affrontery of the transaction; or abetting the sale of office; or giving dinner at elections; or defrauding the custom-house; or teaching the people to be exclusive in honors bestowed upon the dead, giving indiscriminate honors to some dead and none to others, yet extending these honors to those who fell bearing arms against the government—are such acts as these to meet no disapproval from a people who, once zealous and watchful for their liberties, and foremost in Anti-masonry, are now becoming one of the most Mason-ridden States in the Union? People cannot save their liberties, which are above all price, or secure any other enduring good, by secret signs, grips, pass-words, and other such underhanded dealings. The forms of religion that are borrowed to be thrown over and to conceal the offensive features of these secret proceedings, serve but to degrade and corrupt religion instead of sanctifying practices that can admit of no sanctification.

The financial condition of our society is very easily set forth. It amounts to two dollars received and paid out (for extra printed copies of last year's proceedings) besides sums that have been spent by individual members for special purposes. Our society does not believe in money as a reform-power. It is men of principle, not money that we want—men who, like Mr. Wesley, the founder of Methodism, will enter into a covenant with themselves, that they will "use absolute openness and unreserve towards all;" be as averse to Masonry as they are to slavery, and never aid by their votes to elevate to office of any kind, any slave-holder or member of a secret society, or any candidate set up by such a society. For whoever joins a secret society, gives evidence of a willingness to take a sly advantage of his fellow men, and thus transgress against the very fundamental principle of republican government. An association of men that makes an ostentatious, public show of its follies, and practices its virtues only in secret and in the dark, is not to be trusted.

Under the sway of this association the people are becoming gradually and insidiously educated to the surrender of their political rights and duties and the loss of their liberties.

Every frank, generous, open-hearted person, every "open and unreserved" man, woman and child in the State is wronged and oppressed, all the higher and nobler charities of life are stunted and dwarfed by the very shadow which the dark and sinister institution of Masonry throws over the otherwise sunny and cheerful face of Christian society. Under the reign of Masonry a wicked combination may be sprung at any time against honest men and women. Not only are bad men honored, but persons of signal excellence of character are made special objects for defamation and disgrace. The freeman who has undertaken the duties of republican government must not mistake the light and terrors of the lodge, as the lodge would have him do, for the lightnings and darkness of Sinai. He must throw off his hoodwink and cable-tow, and manfully, independently, and self-reliantly, look the dangers and responsibilities of republican government in the face.

In search of men like these, here in

From Oshkosh, Wis., and Vicinity.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Three lectures have been given in the Wesleyan church in Oshkosh, commencing June 21st, to a not very large audience, the church being in the suburbs of the city, where a general interest could not be excited. I have the promise of a hall free in a more central location, which I intend to use in a few weeks.

Liberty Prairie was the next point made; found a few old friends there of many years ago, when the country was new. Elder H. McKee making the first claim there twenty-nine years ago this last spring, and gave it its name; and in the same place some of my earliest efforts were put forth to persuade men to be reconciled to God. The M. E. church was secured, and four lectures were given, commencing the 28th of June. The first evening there was quite a congregation, but granger and Templar rowdyism was let loose and there was an abundance of confusion. One James Picket made himself particularly notorious, by giving me the lie upon the subject of Masonry, when it is well known that he knows nothing about it. This was more noticeable in him, because his father was a person of some manhood, and the rowdyism of this degenerate son is the common talk of the people. The second, third and fourth evenings the audience was large and good order prevailed. At the close of the last lecture a small pettifogger by the name of Bowles undertook to get a little notoriety for himself by attempting to show that some of my positions were not sound, but it was too thin, and easily seen through. He is a lover of small town offices, and he had talked on the other side, and now he is on both sides of the fence and of course promotion is certain.

That church is in the midst of a good farming community, and there were many not members of any secret society who were made interested in lectures; but a collection was taken the third evening, amounting to 56 cts; and the next evening no one could be induced to move a step toward another; so 56 cts. pays for four lectures to large audiences. For the war,

Who Run our News-depots.

Editors Christian Cynosure:

The Cynosure has four thousand subscribers, more or less, in all parts of the country. I would suggest to each of these subscribers to inquire, as a matter of fact worth ascertaining and fixing in the progress of our cause, whether any Anti-masonic book, tract or paper can be found at his or her news-depots or bookstores, and whether Masonic publications can be found there. Let those who travel, especially, enquire along the route, and note well the result.

Masonic Influence.

It is well known to all readers of the Cynosure who are acquainted with that body, that the Reformed Presbyterian church is opposed to the whole system of secrecy. Her opposition is all that could be asked by the most sanguine opponents of the lodge. Wherever else advocates of secrecy or devotees of the mystic tie are to be found, Reformed Presbyterians are in the habit of congratulating themselves that none are found in their number. The Society of Friends takes a decided stand against secrecy, and yet a member, prominent in that society, was pointed out to me as a granger and a Mason, and also it was stated that many of them were in connection with the various orders in our country.

I have often been told that our church had plenty of Masons in its communion. This I have universally thrown back as a slander, but we had in our congregation not long since an occular demonstration of the fact that at least one who professedly belonged to our church, had also been hoodwinked. He was not raised in the church but connected himself after marriage. It was not long after his connection with the church until report made him a Mason. Inquiry was made, and the brother said, "I have nothing to do with Masonry, nor do I expect to have."

In this way matters stood until last fall. The brother was taking a trip East, and it was understood that before going he went to the lodge, paid his dues and took a demit, which is nothing more nor less than a certificate of membership on which he could enter another lodge in good standing. He was asked to meet the session, which he did. There he acknowledged that he had joined the lodge subsequent to his connection with the church; ceased connection with the lodge, however, up to the date of last fall, at which time the lodge summoned him to appear and pay his dues, which he did and took a demit for the sole purpose of escaping from the "paw of the lion," as he termed it. He submitted all his papers into the hands of the session, protested his disavowal of the obligation to the lodge and professed profound sorrow for his former association with it, and promised solemnly never to entangle himself again. He submitted to an authoritative rebuke, and was restored.

The case teaches us two great lessons. In the first place it shows us the tact of the advocates and devotees of secresy. It counts little to them to obtain a member from a church which does not take grounds on the subject, or from the world. But it does give prestige to the lodge if it can boast members from the ranks of the avowed enemy. But the second lesson is that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." If we are to be able to bear aloft our standard against secrecy, it must be one consistently. The fact that we hold strong ground is not a guarantee against invasions. On the other hand it only makes us the more enviable mark for the enemy. Let the advocates of light be vigilant, be active, be prayerful, if they would be consistent.

Yours for the truth,

T. P. Robb.

Strategic Points.—An Odd-fellow Rocket.

Wellington, Ill., July 5th, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Our cause in this section has a number of earnest friends, but we are greatly needing a course of lectures or public expositions by such men as Mr. Ronayne. Iroquois is a very large county. Onarga is our literary centre and seat of a prosperous Methodist Seminary. It is also where the M. E. presiding elders for Onarga district reside and who unfortunately are and have been for the last twelve years or more, Masons. The present elder may not be a Mason, but I am told he is.

Gilman is also quite a town and perhaps our commercial centre. A Mr. Mann resides here and owns a hall which he has offered to us a time or two free. Mr. Mann is in good circumstances and says he "has no faith in these orders."

Watseka is our county seat and is full of lawyers, a few of whom, perhaps, sympathize with us. As a strategic point Watseka ought to be looked after, but Onarga and Gilman are scarcely less important.

Sherman, the great Odd-fellow light of Chicago, recently visited Watseka and laid with "imposing" ceremonies the corner-stone of the Bank and Odd-fellow's Hall. Our court adjourned its sessions to do honor to the occasion! There ought to be about three lectures at each of the above places, to expose the Masonic and Odd-fellow humbugs.

The secret society interest got Sherman down at Milford to give the Fourth of July oration. He is a fluent talker and talked in the main as a patriot should, but he made one tremenduous blunder when he was enumerating the different agencies that should be fostered in order to perpetuate our liberties and noble institutions. He enumerated, good morals to be taught at home, the common school system to be sacredly maintained, and a number of other agencies which were all proper in every sense, if he had not included the "orders!" Shame! It takes a long stretch of charity to persuade one's self that a person of Mr. Sherman's ability and sense should think the "orders" are conducive to liberty and "equality," when the membership are packed in layers called "degrees," which the poor can't receive, as they can't pay the lodge dignitaries for them. What, Mr. Sherman, the "orders" in favor of liberty and equality, that, in the Morgan trials, defied the power of the whole State of New York! The "orders" conducive to liberty and equality that lock men's mouths with death penalties! The orders of Odd-fellows and Masons, favorable to liberty and equality and the maintainence of good order in the community, that are shooting, poisoning, egging and mobbing American citizens to-day, and endeavoring to muzzle the press, and even when we tell the truth about your boasted orders, your papers and your membership, in order to hide your evil and wicked acts, say our statements are lies, when it is well known they are the truth! Yes, sir, we are willing to sell to your poor, "chained," "hoodwinked" and "cable-towed" victims the "degrees" for less than a dollar and warrant them better than yours, but for which the lodge receive perhaps fifty dollars for, and to make sure of the money, so that the lodge can peddle to other victims the secrets, they take a strong pledge of secrecy and perhaps show the victim his grandmother's skeleton to scare him so that he won't tell it!

Wise Suggestions from a New Friend.

Dear Cynosure:—I call you "dear" on short acquaintance, having never seen but three copies, but they have endeared the paper to me. I have been reading your columns and have become soundly converted. My conversion is evinced in my longing to work. I have been in College and in a Theological Seminary, and for five years a pastor. In all that period I never learned so much of the evil of Masonry as in the three old Cynosures I came across and read. I am convinced that thousands are in the lodges and thousands more will go in just for a want of such light as your columns can impart. You want a wider circulation.

I have been thinking over and praying for means to help do away with this curse. I am sure there are hundreds that would take the paper and be benefitted by it, if they only knew of it. I have resolved on this plan. I will take it and after reading each number, put it in a wrapper and direct it to some one that does not know of it, and urge them to take it. Thus I can acquaint fifty-two families each year with it. Now why will not this be a good suggestion to others? If some one had sent me a copy years ago, I should have been a subscriber before.

I am sure that there are many young men in our colleges who would be saved and go forth from college earnest workers, if they could only read your columns. Why not put it in the reading room of every institution in the land? I resume my theological studies in the fall and one institution will get the benefit of it. Will not some friend furnish the means to furnish our reading rooms?

Another suggestion, circulate tracts. I was stopping over Sabbath with a pastor a few weeks ago. There was an intelligent Christian man there who was selling Bibles. He had about concluded to join the Masons through the misrepresentations of some one. He picked up a tract on Masonry and read it, and then confessed his intentions and acknowledged that that tract had given him more light on the subject than he had ever had before. How many of our young men might be saved in this way.

Christian fellow laborers, there is an evil in the land. Let each do something, and the aggregate of our efforts will be a mighty and irresistible power. Let us strike, and ask God to direct the blow so that it will hit, and this Goliah or giant evil will receive its death-blow.

"A New Recruit."

From Grasshopper Land.

AUSTIN, Cass Co., Mo., June 25, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Though living in South-west Missouri I wish to say that we are sorely annoyed with secrecy, in all of its horrid forms, from the old cat Masonry to all the kittens, Odd-fellowship, Temple of Honor, Good Templars, grangers, and all brought to bear against the Christian religion and to prevent the execution of civil law. I have been favored with a few tracts published by you and occasionally some friend sends me one of your excellent papers, which I highly appreciate; would be glad to take it but the grasshoppers have left us on half rations, so we are not able to take it and pay for it. If out of your liberal heart you can send us one occasionally it will be thankfully received, and if we ever get able we will take it. Politics, as they have been, are not worthy of attention; but if you make a nomination for anti-secret President he will be sure of one vote in Missouri.

GOLDEN, Col., June 28, 1875.

Editor Christian Cynosure:

Having been called upon to chronicle a few facts for the brothers and sisters of our cause through the columns of your valuable paper, I will premise that I have not been here very long, but find the state of society at a very low ebb, and give it as it is without coloring.

The climate is good and is especially beneficial to all lung and throat diseases. Invalids in the last stages of consumption, who come here in or so near the mountains as a last resort only, hasten their death; the change is too great at once. The water here is generally good, sometimes impregnated with alkali. The scenery everywhere is beyond description. Perch yourself on one of these snow-capped peaks, thousands of feet above the prairie level, and look at the stupendous mountains surrounding. See the great forest of timber, the little mining towns and camps. See the small ravines, like tree tops converging to a center gulch, and that leading through a large valley which now and then is confined to narrow gorges, now breaking from the mountain and on through yonder vast plain, growing from rivulets to a river. In the valley of settlements there are large ditches constructed turning those streams out on the dry lands when little or no rain falls, making the soil produce wonderful crops. I pause to let you meditate. Here is this part of God's footstool so wisely planned as to ever confound our conception of its true value. Is not man happy with all this? The testimony stands firm as the adamantine rocks; No.

But in all this region a large portion of the people belong to secret societies, operating with harmony only in localities, and for a short time at that, but the interests of different localities are rather antagonistic, and confusion is continually brewing. There is a warfare between secret societies and the common, moral and unorganized society. The bickerings even in families and neighborhoods are very damaging. There is one locality deserving of especial mention. This place is the county seat of Jefferson county, Col., where one murder after another has occurred for years, not one of which has been investigated properly. No less than fifteen men have been found dead, all unknown. Some years ago, three men were secreting a band of horses which was stolen from the government. One of them, Mike Leyden, became convinced of his wrong and went to McNaper and Darlington, the other two, who told Leyden that nothing but death could separate the gang. Leyden became alarmed, left Denver for home, six miles north of Golden. As he neared home he told a neighbor he feared parties would kill him, and was urged to go no further, but he wanted to see his daughter, so rode on; but was pursued, overtaken, and shot dead on the prairie. McNaper and Darlington were arrested and brought to Golden. The evidence was positive, but they were admitted to bail and bought up some witnesses, menaced others, got a change of venue, put off trial from court to court, and when finally brought to trial there being no evidence brought against them they were dismissed. The little orphan girl 11 or 12 years of age was sent to the States. Leyden owned a valuable coal bank from which the heir gets little or nothing. These two murderers were both Masons and had their case well worked up. . . .

There are six churches here closed for want of support; the brick yards are idle, shops, mills and smelting works ditto; several stores closed, and some of the saloons, but there are twenty or more yet running. A large sign over the door of one saloon reads in capital letters a foot square, "The Grange." A few Masons control this town, and always have. They gobbled up all the land supposed or known to be coal land, and then filed papers of incorporation to build a railroad. This little clique of men sent out buggies after night to convey the county commissioners to town to subscribe fifty thousand dollars in stock for this railroad. To prevent much suspicion the hour of 10 o'clock P. M. was fixed upon. This was not entirely a success, as one commissioner disapproved of it and did not come, but the other two did. The road is to run to and through these coal lands. The people objected to the midnight conclave swindle, and sent petition after petition against it, but of no avail. Then the country people hired two lawyers, Gen. Brown & Co., for two thousand dollars to prosecute the suit in the name of the people. The Masons by larger offers held this matter spell-bound for a time, and word was sent to many farmers that they would be ruined in two years if they further fought the railroad bonds. For some reason unknown to the public Gen. Brown was denied an audience in court at the bar; this the judge decided broke the law firm of Brown & Co. Then the farmers employed another firm of lawyers; the case dragged two years and the judge made two different decisions. Here was confusion again, and from these frauds, the farmers through an understanding have withdrawn their trade from this town, so that it is dead. This is a loss generally of more than a half a million dollars, though decline in business on the account of grasshoppers makes it the greater loss. This is a plain and truthful statement of difficulties, all of which have been caused by the secret orders here. And the end is not yet. The people are moving to get the capital to another town.

There are enough middle men in the grange here to so watch and control it that is powerless; a disruption is is expected at any time. Hoping our cause will maintain that steadfast principle of anti-secrecy, I remain yours truly,

JAMES Q. ADAMS.

OUR MAIL.

J. W. Thompson, Dadeville, Mo., writes: "Let me assure you that I am in for the war. With me it is a matter of life or death. To my mind it is as clear as a sunbeam; either Freemasonry with its kindred associations, or our happy country with all we hold dear as free-born, American citizens must go down. They are perfectly antagonistical. Nay, further, not only are such organizations destructive to republican government, but even our holy religion itself is also antagonized by them; hence every lover of Jesus and of good government, to the rescue. Man, poor man! how obtuse are his perceptibilities in regard to all moral subjects, especially those of reform. But a better day is coming. The Lord God has declared it."

R. H. Love, Gainesville, Tex., writes: "I was in Missouri when the campaign against Masonry and darkness opened, and I took an active part in it, and also read the Cynosure every week, but for nine months have been traveling in Texas and have seen but little of that standard of righteousness and truth. If I was able to spend the time to labor here in the cause of reform, I believe a State Association might be organized, composed of live men of all denominations. The field is not so cheerless here as one might suppose. Many Masons speak freely in the following manner: One, a Baptist preacher, says; 'It has had its day; its glory is past.' Another one of many degrees; 'It's an anti-Christian religion, dangerous and ruinous.' Another, 'It is the vilest system of quackery of which I have any knowledge, or that ever proposed to heal the diseases of the human heart and society.'"

E. J. C., York, Pa., writes: "I think Mr. Walker's letter of acceptation should be issued in a cheap form as a campaign document. It is very good, and will help our cause, if widely circulated. I would like to get a few before election day in 1876. Freemasonry is a great political engine; and the sooner we 'bust its biler' the better it will be for Uncle Sam. Lets have good election documents now."

Aaron Phipps, Eagle Harbor, N. Y., writes: "I am seventy-two years old, have been a cripple for many years, and for the last one have not been able to feed myself nor turn in bed, nor stand upon my feet. I have distributed all the papers that I have received from your office. The cause of the Cynosure lies near my heart. Living here in early days and witnessing all the abominations of the Morgan tragedy, I have a deadly hostility to all secret organizations."

Earnest Thompson, Gillette, N. Y., writes: "I am much gratified with your paper. It is stirring in its appeals in the great reform which it leads. Its articles are clear and convincing and have the genuine ring of those who "speak forth the words of truth and soberness," and of those who see the great danger which these institutions of darkness and secresy threaten to bring on our land. It is strange what a hold Masonry has on the press and men of influence. I know numbers of Baptist ministers who would as soon think of taking a dose of arsenic as opposing the lodge. I am doing what I can to put down these institutions and will continue to do so."

Lesson for July 25th, 1875.—The New Birth.

SCRIPTURE.—John 3: 7-17. Commit 3-8, 14-17; Primary Verse, 16.

7 Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again.

8 The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit.

9 Nicodemus answered and said unto him, How can these things be?

10 Jesus answered and said unto him, Art thou a master in Israel, and knowest not these things?

11 Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.

12 If I have told you earthly things and ye believe not, how shall ye believe, if I tell you of heavenly things?

13 And no man hath ascended up to heaven but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven.

14 And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up:

15 That whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.

16 For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

17 For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved.

The announcement that one "must be born again" or rather, as the margin has it, "from above," is significant of the entirety of the change that is necessary before one can see the kingdom of God. In it is plainly written the doctrine of total depravity. It it a declaration that the heart, "deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," needs something more than a mere cleansing—it needs a new birth. It is a judgment of the builder that every stone of the building must be removed, and be replaced by new material altogether. But let us give the Bible idea of the New Birth.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 15, 1875.

THE CARPENTER DONATION.

The above is a front view of the fine stone-front building on Madison street, Chicago, which Mr. Carpenter proposes to give the National Christian Association for head-quarters and publishing house. Occupation is given when $10,000 are raised to carry on the business of a publishing house, and the title, when $20,000 additional is paid to the treasury of the N. C. A., to carry on its work. Send contributions to the Treasurer, H. L. KELLOGG, 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

NOMINATIONS FOR ELECTION, 1876.

FOR PRESIDENT

James B. Walker,
of Illinois.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT

Donald Kirkpatrick, of New York.

A MISAPPREHENSION exists in the minds of a few friends regarding the proposed Publishing House. Mr. Carpenter's proposition was as far as possible from any idea of a bargain for the property. The legal agreement drawn by him and recorded, and published in our columns expressly says that the property is to be transferred if the sum of $30,000 is donated to the National Association to carry on its work directly by April 1st, 1878, "AND IN CONSIDERATION OF ONE DOLLAR TO ME IN HAND PAID BY THE SAID CORPORATION." It seems as if this had been made plain enough for every one who has read the Cynosure. The record of the last meeting of the corporate body, and the "CIRCULAR" prepared by the General Agent, both appearing numberin this are sufficient answer to all doubts about the appropriation of these funds. If they were at the disposal of a General Convention, a small committee would have been put in charge of them, with no legal responsibility, and less likelihood of satisfactory investment.

THE NEW CORPORATE MEMBERS.

Eight new members were added at the first meeting under the incorporation, June 16th (see Cynosure June 24th) William Leuty, J. W. Bain, Rev. Mr. Freeman, I. R. B. Arnold and other veterans were among the eight. The annual meeting adjourned to meet July 7th. That adjourned meeting added nearly twenty-five more to the members of the corporate body. Their names are seen in this present number. In the hurry of wearisome details of business in a hot July day, doubtless other names were omitted who ought to be and will be added. Our next annual meeting will, we trust, be a large one, and in our new and permanent home in the CARPENTER BUILDING. We can then look over the whole country and add to this working body every true friend of the cause of whose attendance at our business meeting we can have a rational hope.

In 1843, Daniel O'Connell was haranguing a monster Repeal meeting, variously estimated at from one to two millions. He told the crowds that the Repeal movement originated a few years before at an Irish tavern up several pairs of stairs, where, at a "regular Repeal meeting" he got two men together and pursuaded one to hold the other by the neck till he (O'Connel) could go out and drag in a fourth man. Our cause has had its small meetings. Let us see if by the help of God we can have our large ones. Eleven years ago, traveling along the South Platte, we saw and heard pellicans, sand-hill cranes, wild geese, ducks, with flocks of the perpetual mountain raven, all on the wing and all cawing and squawking at the top of their babel voices. "There's comin' a storm," said an old plainsman, "and these creeters are looking out for their holes." The swarms of "Freemasons," "Knights," "Templars," and other secret hordes are on their turn-outs because "There's comin' a storm."

FALSE LIBERALISM.

"Your trade is lawful, no one can accuse you of misdeeds."—T. K. Beecher to liquor-sellers of Elmira, N. Y.

The meanest, most cowardly and contemptible of the Old Testament kings, were those who took of the gold and silver from the doors of the temple, and sold its ornaments and sacred utensils to purchase for themselves and their pandours the privilege of living in luxury and lust.

There is at least, a savage sublimity in the raids of the Tamerlanes, Genghis Khans, Napoleons, and other chief butchers of mankind. But who mix in life's battles with no better motives than buzzards, that they may batten on the carrion, are the very feculum of humanity. These soldiers by trade without courage, may dance and cut a figure in the ball-room at "Belgium's Capital," but they neither fight nor fall on the field of Waterloo.

"The whiskered pandours and the fierce hussars',

How much more contemptible is a professed preacher of Christ's Gospel, whose modicum of talent has displayed itself in the vindication of card-playing for Christians; in dancing-balls to be made up of ministers, deacons and elders of churches; in billiard tables for the godly; and now at last, in liquor shops for good and worthy citizens! If there be, or can be a meaner class of human cattle than these, it is those Yankees who aspire to run with the innocent hares of orthodoxy, yet bark with such hounds as these. How long, we ask General Howard and the temperance Congregationalists of Illinois, is Rev. T. K. Beecher to be a privileged correspondent of The Advance.

NOTES.

—Our readers will find the articles on the first page of this number of considerable interest. The care manifested by Mr. Sumner in communicating the important facts recorded prove his dread of the lodgeedge, knowl of its dark methods and while he at the same time, proves his commanding position, watched eagerly its maneuvers in connection with the rebellion. Such facts are most important history.

—Mr. Ronayne's reply to the charges of his lodge are also important, as they answer effectually the only objection the Masons seem to have any honesty in making, that of swindling his lodge. Now that this is effectually answered, let them hear and answer his attacks on their system like men.

—It cannot fail to be noticed that the lodge has introduced a new and (let us be thankful) rare system of jurisprudence in trying a member. Judges, witnesses, prosecuting attorneys, and jury are the same individuals throughout. The same feature may be seen in Judge Whitney's trial. Of how much value the decision of such a body may be, let thinking men judge.

—A member of the National Association related the following at the meeting last Wednesday. An ex-Judge, and member of the lodge, now living in Kane county, Ill., told this gentleman that once a criminal appeared before him for trial. During its progress the culprit gave the Judge the grand hailing sign of distress, having learned of his Masonic connection. Instead of the sign having the usual effect, the Judge was shocked that a bribe should thus be offered him, and exclaimed to himself, "Has it come to this? Then I have had enough of Masonry." And it is believed that he has had no affiliation with the lodge since.

—The Christian Instructor of Philadelphia informs us that Hon. Edward McPherson, late clerk of the house of Representatives, is engaged at last in preparing the "Life of Thaddeus Stevens." "Many will be glad," says the Instructor, "to see a full account of the 'Great Commoner's' decidedly Antimasonic character."

—Rev. D. R. Kerr of the United Presbyterian, and President of our late National Convention has been elected chairman of the Board of Trustees of Westminster College. From the same institution the title of Doctor of Divinity has fallen upon D. W. Collins of Blairsville, Pa., an active member of the same meeting, and David Goodwillie of Girard, O., an old friend and contributor to our cause.

—The American riflemen, now visiting in Ireland, who are receiving an undeserved notoriety, furnish the lodge an opportunity for its peculiar and partisan display. Part of the rifle corps are Freemasons, and to these special banquets have been given by the lodges of Ireland and it is heralded that the New York lodges are preparing to receive them on their return. This particular favor is not given them merely for their success as marksmen, or all would be treated alike. It is simply the selfish spirit of the order working outward.

—The Freemasons of Clear Lake, Iowa, awoke to find a State Convention of the opponents of their order in their midst, and set up a fine chorus of growls as soon after adjournment as it was safe. Their bluster and misrepresentation would have returned with interest on their own heads if begun sooner. A local half-sheet finds a choice occupation in assisting them.

—Bro. Needles of the American Freeman heads his columns with the names of Walker and Kirkpatrick and the Platform, which he maintains is the best before the people; and that every one may judge of its superior merit he publishes the platforms of other parties and conventions as they appear. We do not fear that the Pittsburgh platform or candidates will ever be abashed by comparison with those of any existing political organization.

—Two or three letters in our "correspondence" department this week need mention. That on "Masonic Influence" was written from Linton, Iowa, and suggests to other churches the carrying out of Christ's command concerning offenses in the church. "A new recruit" and friend Timmons of Missouri indicate how some of our large-hearted friends, whom God has blessed with means, can help their fellowmen. Send to our publishers a fund from which they may supply such demands as those mentioned.

Adjourned Meeting of the Corporate Association.

The adjourned meeting of the National Association was held, as announced, in the Cynosure office on Wednesday last, with a good number present. Mr. Carpenter was sufficiently recovered to attend and preside. The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. A. Wait. The reports of the Corresponding Secretary, General Agent, Treasurer and Auditor were presented and accepted. The principal items in these reports not presented at the National Convention were as follows: The Corresponding Secretary reported personal services performed during the year, June 1, 1874, to June 1, 1875, twenty-five lectures delivered in five States; two State conventions attended; $190.70 raised on membership and paid to Treasurer; $76.00 raised for Michigan agent and $275 for Publishing House fund.

The Treasurer reported additions to Publishing House since the report at Convention making the whole sum on deposit $500.52, notes $3,436 pledges on paper, $75; other pledges considered good $1,300; total $5,411.52.

An additional by-law recommended by the Board of Directors, was adopted which reads:

BY-LAW 16—"The majority of the members present at any regularly called meeting shall be a quorum for the transaction of business, provided that the number shall not be less than eleven, a less number having power to adjourn.

The question of additional members was taken up and the following named gentlemen were regularly proposed for members in full of the corporate body and were unanimously elected by ballot.

Dr. J. B. Walker, Wheaton, Ill.
Moses Pettengill, Peoria, Ill.
Rev. Milton Wright, Dayton, O.
Rev. L. N. Stratton, Syracuse, N. Y.
J. R. Wright, ——, Ogle Co., Ill.
Aaron Floyd, Pittsburgh, Pa.
M. R. Britton, Vienna, Wis.
Abel Carpenter, Warrenville, Ill.
D. Kirkpatrick, Syracuse, N. Y.
D. W. Lyons, Mason City, Iowa.
Rev. L. Taylor, Farmington, Ill.
J. M. Wallace, Chicago, Ill.
Rev. J. E. Roy, Chicago, Ill.
Rev. G. B. Hibbard, Pecatonica.
Peter Rich, Westfield, Ind.
J. A. Conant, Wilmantic, Conn.
John Hibbard, Freedom, Ill.
J. W. Wood, Baraboo, Wis.
Dea. Sylvanius Town, Aurora, Ill.
Dea. Alex. Small, Aurora, Ill.
Nathan Callendar, Green Grove, Pa.
Rev. O. E. Burch, Huntley, Ill.
Rev. Woodruff Post, Rochester, N.Y.
Rev. Geo Sovereign, Kishwaukee, Ill.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of Philo Carpenter for President; J. Blanchard, Vice-president; C. A. Blanchard, Corresponding Secretary; H. L. Kellogg, Recording Secretary and Treasurer; C. R. Hagerty and Edward Hildreth, Auditors. The old Board of Directors was generally re-elected and stands thus: Philo Carpenter, J. Blanchard, Archibald Wait, I. A. Hart, C. R. Hagerty, E. A. Cook, O. F. Lumry, C. A. Blanchard, H. L. Kellogg. I. R. B. Arnold, E. S. Cook. (J. P. Stoddard was elected General Agent at the previous meeting June 16th.)

Under miscellaneous business a resolution was discussed and passed that the next National Convention be held in Chicago, the time being referred to the Director's Board. The hope was expressed that the new Publishing House might be occupied at that time, and Mr. Carpenter offered the upper room at any time for committee meetings.

Saturday, the 13th of November, was recommended to the churches of the country, as a day of fasting and prayer for the extinction of secret societies.

The appointment of Rev. James Hankins by the State Association of Iowa, for lecturer and agent for that State was unanimously endorsed.

The recommendation of the National Convention in regard to altering the by-laws so as to permit the election of regular members by that body was freely discussed and the harmonious opinion was embodied in the following resolution:

Resolved, that final action upon the recommendation of the Pittsbugh Anniversary to amend our second by-law, so as to give each annual convention power to elect members of this incorporation at their discretion, be postponed till our next annual meeting, after discussion in our next anniversary, when we shall have a larger attendance and shall have had further deliberation. Meantime it is our present judgment that the just and proper end sought by the Pittsburgh vote is to be reached and realized by choosing representative men devoted to our cause in all denominations whose members co-operate with us, so as to make the action of the National Christian Association to be the result of the opinion and judgment of the Christian opponents of secret societies throughout the United States; and that to make the Chicago home and headquarters of reform immediately dependent on members elected by a circulating system of mass meetings assembling annually throughout the country, would weaken confidence and deprive us of the means of carrying forward the great work to which we are called of God."

The General Agent then presented a paper which he had prepared for a circular to the people setting forth the needs of this reform and how they may be met, which was approved and ordered to be printed for circulation.

The association then adjourned after prayer.

Westfield College.

The seventh annual commencement of this young College was held June 16th, 1875, in a beautiful grove near the town, and west of the College campus. A large concourse of persons was in attendance. After devotional exercises, and interspersed with instrumental music by the Terre Haute band, the audience was favored with the addresses of the graduating class, consisting of two scientific and three classical graduates, who received appropriate degrees.

The addresses of the graduates were very favorable efforts, while one made, as remarked by one of the professors, the best graduating effort he ever heard.

One of the classical graduates, Rev. W. S. Walker, is a seceded Mason. He is a young man of firmness and promise. All the graduates give promise of usefulness and success in life.

The remarks to the Graduating class by President S. B. Allen were impressive and timely.

The three literary societies of the college held their anniversaries on the evenings of the 10th, 11th, and 12th of June. These were interesting to all in attendance.

On Sunday the 13th, the Baccalaureate sermon was preached by President Allen from the text, "No man can serve two masters," Matt. vi. 24. The sermon was a good one, full of thoughts, ably setting forth the particulars in which we cannot serve two masters at one and the same time. He who attempts to serve two masters of different demands and characters serves neither, for what the one commands the other forbids; or the one commands one duty to be performed, while the other demands another.

On the evening of the 14th, the societies and all in attendance were favored with a lecture by Hon. Mr. Ebersole of Iowa, and on the 15th one by Professor Funkhouser of Dayton, O.

The past year has been of one prosperity for Westfield College. A larger number of students were in attendance than usual, and the finances are in a better state than formerly. The centennary endowment fund of the College has been increased to $15,000. The last year as usual a number of the students were hopefully converted to God. The friends and managers of this College have not lost their zeal against the works of darkness. They employed Rev. Wm. Givens to give three lectures against secretism during the year.

The fall term of Westfield College will commence Aug. 25th, 1875, and will continue twelve weeks, followed by a vacation of one week and then the second or winter term of 16 weeks will commence. In connection with the College is a Ladies' boarding hall, conducted by a good and careful family, and under the supervision of the principal of the Ladies' Department, for the accommodation of young ladies.

Westfield College is a good and safe place for young men and women to obtain a liberal and classical education. It is under the care and patronage of three conferences and one mission conference of the church of the United Brethren in Christ, in the State of Illinois.

The board constituted a separate professorship of National Science in the College, and elected Professor E. Whipple, A. M., to fill the chair. This supplies what has been felt to be a growing want in this College for some time.

Westfield is located six miles from Ashmore, a station on the Indianapolis and St. Louis railroad, with a daily line of hacks to the station, thus making access to the College easy.

REFORM NEWS.

The Windham County Meeting.

Windham county, it must be acknowledged, though to our bitter regret, that we have met with but little of the success which we had hoped and expected. This is our fifth annual meeting, and at no time have the numbers present given us that encouragement to proceed in the work of reform we have undertaken, which the former character of the people of Windham county reasonably inspired.

It is possible that our movement might meet with more support in other counties of the State; and if it be thought so by the members of the society, perhaps it might be considered advisable by them to appeal to the Anti-masons of the State at large, and suggest to them the propriety of forming a state organization. If nothing is done to resist the aggression of the lodge, the Masons here in Vermont will do their full share towards bringing about a condition of things in the country that, before another century is passed, will render a change of our republican government inevitable. Where men are taught to regard secret collusions as religious, sacred, holy, and to look to them for the security of their rights and interests, by whatever name these collusions may be called, whether Mason, Mormon, Golden Circle, Ku-Klux, White League, or that diluted specimen of Masonry, grangerism, the confidence of the community in the protective force of law and self-government is at an end, personal freedom and independence are gone, and liberty will soon become but an empty name.

The afternoon session was opened with prayer by Deacon T. C. York of Jamaica.

It was then voted that the association must be sustained, and the meeting proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year. The result of the election was as follows: Gen'l J. W. Phelps of Brattleboro, President; Judge Laban Jones, West Brattleboro, 1st Vice-president; Dr. Joel Holton of Jamaica, 2d Vice-president; Edson Blanchard of Guilford, Secretary.

It was voted that the officers of the society be authorized to appoint committees in the townships of the county, from one to three each, to extend the knowledge of the cause in which we are engaged in their respective townships; to further the general objects of National Christian Association and for sending delegates to our next annual meeting in Fayetteville.

The objects and the prospects of the Anti-masonic cause were freely and ably discussed by Messrs. Holton, Blanchard, York, Gregory and Muzzy, and several new members joined the society. References were made to the late convention of Anti-masons in Pittsburgh Pennsylvania, which nominated candidates, Walker and Kirkpatrick, for the Presidency and Vice-presidency of these United States, and adopted the name of CHRISTIANS in religion and AMERICANS in politics. The general purport of the discussion appeared to be that there should be no compromise with secretism in any shape; that if a secret collusion, like Grangerism, can operate upon the market to lower the price of goods, another collusion could equally well operate on the market to raise the price of goods; and that the principle of organized secrecy is not sufficiently generous, liberal, and enlightened to serve as a foundation for American institutions, or to move their machinery in any way.

The following resolutions were adopted by the meeting:

Resolved, that the Anti-masons of the State and all who are in favor of making efforts to free the Republican party from the control of corrupt secret rings into which narrow, self-interested and negligent political leaders, selling themselves to the lodge, have allowed the good name and character of the State to fall, are requested to correspond with the secretary of this society, Mr. Edson Blanchard of Guilford, and state their views on the propriety of calling a general convention, naming time and place, for the purpose of forming a State Anti-masonic Society.

Resolved, that the newspapers of the State, which have hitherto maintained such a silent reserve towards our society, ignoring its proceedings while publishing those of the lodge, be requested to do us the same favor, and publish these resolutions for the information of their Anti-masonic subscribers, and the people of the State generally.

After a long, spirited, yet harmonious session the meeting adjourned, to meet again on the last Tuesday of June, 1876, the feelings of the members appearing to be that the prospects of the association are more promising than at any time before since its formation.

The Home Circle.

The Weary Pilgrim.

Slow, step by step, day after day,
I journey on my homeward way;
And darkly dream the land of light
Is drawing near night after night,
Where I shall reach my rest at last,
And smile at all the perils past.

Sometimes I sing, sometimes I sigh,
Sometimes I lift the longing eye,
Sometimes my heart langhs 'neath its load,
To think of that augnst abode,
Where I shall reach my rest at last,
And smile at all the perils past.

This poor mortality of mine
Shall soon pnt on its dress divine,
To meet Him with the blest above,
Who gave His life to gain our love;
And rich will be my rest at last
When all the poverty is past.

He will be near—my life, my hope—
When at the gloomy gate I grope—
And take my hand and reach for me
The fruit of immortality;
And I shall know my rest at last,
And triumph in the trials past.

Jnst one more thorn razed from His crown
Of sorrows, I will cast me down;
And my last tears shall run to meet
Him! ponr full my heart at His feet.
And I shall reach my rest at last
To smile at all the troubles past.

Use the World, not Abuse it.

Men abuse the world by misapprehending its use. The father brings some arsenic home to kill rats. The child climbs up to the chair to eat it, mistaking it for sugar. "Everything is for use," he says; "father brings no useless things." Very true. But some things are of use to kill rats, and some to feed children; and the consequences are serious if the rat gets the sugar and the child the arsenic. "Everything is for use," says the young man as he tosses down his glass of liquor; "total abstinence is asceticism." Yes! everything is for use. And when the patient lies on a bed of sickness, and the feeble flame of life flickers low in the socket, the stimulant may be the only fuel which can keep it from going out in death. It does not follow that the young man whose blood is already at fever heat, and whose nerves are already at their utmost tension, can afford to heap this fuel on the too fierce fires of youth and consume his life before manhood has fairly begun. More gunpowder was used in this country in the four years preceding the civil war than during the war; that is, when we were using it to dominate and subdue nature, than when we were abusing it to maim and kill each other. We "use" gunpowder when we employ it to mine or to build railroads; we abuse it when we shoot either robbins or men.

Most of all does he abuse this world who uses it only for present and transient gratification, oblivious of its higher uses, oblivious of the inner life to which it was intended to prepare. This world is God's school for eternity; and he abuses the school who goes through it considering only how he can get the most fun now, indifferent to graduation and the life that lies beyond. The wise gardner knows enough to prune off the woody growths that he may get much and rich fruit. How many soul culturists there are who put all their life into wood and at the harvest have to offer to the Master "nothing but leaves!" He only rightly uses this world who uses it for the other, who "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts"—pruning the present wood for the sake of the future fruit—"lives soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world"—not trying to get out of it by seclusion, still less confining his sobriety, righteousness, and godliness, to unworldly times and places, such as his closet and his prayer meeting—"looking for that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ"—as children look for the day when the school term will close and they can go home to enjoy the fruits of their time of study and of separation.—Am. Messenger.

Two Ways.

"I will not dwell on the unpleasant theme of a ministry of twenty years almost fruitless in conversions, through a lack of an unction from the Holy One. My great error was in depending on the truth alone to break stony hearts. The Holy Spirit though formally acknowledged and invoked, was practically ignored. An evangelist, with moderate pulpit talent, but extraordinary power to awaken slumbering professors, and to bring sinners to the foot of the cross, came across my path. I sought to find the hidings of his power, and discovered that it was the fulness of the Holy Spirit enjoyed as an abiding blessing, styled by him 'Rest in Jesus.' I was convicted. I sought earnestly the same great gift, but could not exercise faith till I had made a public confession of my sin in preaching self more than Christ. I immediately began to feel a strange freedom strangely increasing. . . . Christ became so unspeakably precious, that I instantly dropped all earthly good, reputation, property, friends, family, everything in the twinkling of an eye—my soul crying out,

'None bnt Christ to me be given,
None but Christ in earth and heaven.'

He stood forth as my Saviour, all radiant in his loveliness, 'the chief among ten thousand.' It seemed as if the attraction of Jesus, the loadstone of my soul, was so strong that it would be drawn out of my body, and through the college window by which I was sitting, and upward into the sky. O, how vivid and real was all this to me! I was more certain that Christ loved me, than I was of the existence of the solid earth and the shining sun. If I ha ve any advice to give my brethren it is to cease to discuss the subtleties and endless questions arising from entire sanctification, and all cry mightily unto God for the baptism of the Holy Ghost. The church thus annointed in the pulpit and pew, would be the mightiest power in our country and in the world. O, that every minister and layman would enquire the way to the upper room in Jerusalem, and there abide till tongues of fire flame upon their heads!"—D. Steele.

Jesuits at their Work.

Prof. Morse, Inventor of the Telegraph, was in Rome in 1830, and there and then was convinced, by his intercourse with a Roman Catholic dignitary and others, that a conspiracy was in existence even at that early date, to extinguish the free government of the United States, and to bring the people under Papal and despotic rule.

In Paris, on his way to his own country, Prof. Morse was on confidential and very intimate terms with Lafayette, to whom he communicated his knowledge of the intrigues on foot. He found that Lafayette was apprehensive of the same thing, and the great friend of American Independence freely expressed to Prof. Morse the sentiment which he afterwards put into epigrammatic words: "If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, they will fall by the hands of the Romish clergy." The publication of this testimony of Prof. Morse, and of this opinion of Lafayette, produced an excitement in this country and a discussion that are well remembered by the survivors of the last generation, though there are many now on the stage who were too young at that time to remember the circumstances.

If the conspiracy really had an organized existence, it still lives. If it had no other shape than the general intent and purpose of the Jesuit order to subdue all the world to the feet of the Papacy, it is now as active, real and progressive as it was forty-five years ago; and it has not been idle in the last half century, as we have the best reason to know.

Ignatius Loyola received the Papal approbation of his order, "The Society of Jesus," Sept. 27, 1540, just 335 years ago; and the first work to which the brothers were assigned, even before the official decree of approbation as an order was obtained, was the establishment of schools to counteract the spirit of Protestantism, in which schools Loyola and his associates might teach "the Christian doctrine."

Thus early in the history of the church after the Reformation by Luther (1520) was the necessity acknowledged; and by the Constitution of the Society, which was the fruit of ten years labor by Loyola and eight subsequent years of revision and experiments, "the teaching the Catechism to the young and ignorant" was defined as one of the grand designs of the order, as it is undoubtedly the most efficient means employed to accomplish the end for which the order was invented. All attempts in the last 340 years to divert the order from its original purpose have been thwarted, and to this hour its energies are concentrated upon the two departments "Missions and Education." They have sixteen colleges distinctly their own in the United States, and their emissaries are in chairs of instruction in many institutions not suspected of being under their control. The number of actual sworn members of the order in the United States and Canada in 1874 was 1,062, of whom 251 were in the missions of New York and Canada. Notwithstanding the suppression of the order by the Infallible Pope of Rome in 1773, in all the States of Christendom, they have been and are now the most active, powerful and successful adherents of the Papal government; the life-blood and muscle of the Roman church.

The Jesuits are the secular arm of the church. In all countries where they are tolerated, they are employed to bring the minds of old and young, people and governments, under the dominion of the papal chair. Hence their incessant intrigues with courts and princes, their interference with the administration of governments, often requiring their ignominious expulsion from the dominions they have embroiled. But when nominally expelled, it is never known how many are left behind, for the secrecy of the Masonic institution which Romanism affects to abhor, is public compared to the sepulchral darkness in which Jesuitism does its work. There is no disguise in which it may not "hide and seek." The church of England has had members of its order concealed under the robes of Protestant clergy. Dispensations are granted which make the conscience easy while the most hypocritical services are performed.

But the members of the order are not so great as to enable them to be everywhere at the same time; their power is in the inspiration they impart to others. The priesthood, and through them the people, from the wealthiest princes and men of business to the lowest servants in the hall or the kitchen, are under the guidance of this invisible but restless agency. To accomplish its purposes there is no crime too great for the Jesuit to decline. It has been stoutly denied that the rules of the order justify a sin; such as the assassination of obnoxious princes. Yet it is not possible to construe them fairly without admitting that they do.

The office of Cardinal is secular, there being no ecclesiastical or sacerdotal duties belonging to it. It was required by the decree of the Council of Trent and the Constitutions of Sixtus V. that these officers should be appointed in all countries, and this ordinance has been construed hitherto as embracing those countries in which the Papal church was predominant; its growth and power in England and the United States have secured the appointment of these officers in the two countries. And it is a matter of some interest to know what work they are expected to perform in countries where they are necessarily unable to discharge secular functions, and sustain no official relation whatever to the governments. The following is from the oath which the Cardinal takes on resuming office:

"I will keep and carry out, and cause others to keep and carry out, the rules of the Holy Father, the decrees, ordinances, dispensations, reservations, provisions, apostolic mandates and constitutions of the Holy Pontiff Sixtus, of happy memory, as to visiting the thresholds of the apostles at certain prescribed times, according to the tenor of that which I have just read through. That I will seek out and oppose, persecute and fight against [Latin omni cenatu persecuturum et impugnatum] heretics, schismatics, against the same our Lord the Pope and his before mentioned successors with every possible effort."

Thus we see that the secular arm of the Romish church is now made strong and put forth, in all its power and efficiency, to do its work in this country. The Jesuit order is the Pope's army of observation, and the Cardinal is the secular link between the Jesuits and the Vatican. The Cardinal is bound by his oath of office to persecute heretics, and the Jesuits are bound to obey the orders of their chief, and the order is their sufficient justification for any deed.—*N. Y. An Impertinent Question.

"Go to, now; let us form a society. It shall be the most glorious society that ever existed. None shall belong to it who (themselves being judges) are not of the noblest in the earth. We will found it on some ancient mystery that the vulgar cannot understand. We will claim for it the honor that belongs to all things old and musty. We will hold our heads high above the pitiable common folk who cannot gain entrance thereto. And we will pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor, in the firm purpose to build up, extend, and gain influence for this most honorable of all institutions."

"But what is to be the object of this society, Mr. Enthusiast?"

"Object, my dear sir! Is it not enough that we shall constitute the most renowned society in the world? That we shall have officers whose names sha often appear in public prints? That we shall have grand anniversaries, and distinguished orators, who shall make eloquent speeches in support of its principles?"

"And will you kindly state, Mr. Vice-President-to-be, what are to be the principles of this magnificent institution?"

"The exaltation of humanity, sir; the efflorescence of sentiment, the developement of the cosmoplitan theory of man."

"And the cosmopolitan theory of man is—what?"

"Ahem, young man! I fear you cannot comprehend the nature and objects of this high-toned society. It is not to be made the subject of impertinent questions."—Working Church.

A Disturbing Element.

Pungent preaching, that stirs the conscience, is disagreeable. A negro preacher did not like to try it, for fear it should unduly cool the emotions o his hearers. Bishop Ames sometimes tells a story of a slave-master in Missouri, in the olden time of negro vassalage, who said to his chattel: "Pompey, I hear you are a great preacher." "Yes, massa, de Lord do help powerful sometimes." "Well, Pompey, don't you think the negroes steal little things on the plantation!" "I'se mighty 'fraid they does, massa." "Then, Pompey, I want you to preach a sermon to the negroes against stealing." After a brief reflection, Pompey replied; "You see, massa, dat wouldn't never do, cause it would throw such a col'ness over de meeting."—Christian Pilgrim.

The First Fuchsia.

The Glasgow Herald in an article in support of the acclimatizing movement, says; "The fuchsia, which is now in every garden, fifty years ago was as rare and almost as highly valued as the Victoria Regia is at the present day; and the story of this beautiful shrub's introduction into our gardens is so curious that we cannot refrain from laying it before our readers. Some time in the first quarter of the present century, a gentleman from Liverpool, while walking through a street in Wapping, saw in the window of a humble looking tenant, a graceful little shrub, with dark green leaves and beautifully pendulous carnation blossoms. He was charmed with the new floral gem, and when he returned home from Liverpool, called upon a celebrated florist to whom he described the plant.

"The curiosity of the florist, who did not know any plant which came up to the description, was so excited, that he set off immediately for London. Having found the house, by seeing the plant in the window, he entered, and ascertained that its owner was the wife of a sailor, and that her husband had brought the plant home from the West Indies, as a love offering to his young spouse. The delighted florist made overtures for the purchase of the fuchsia, which were at first strenuously refused. After some little time however, he got possession of the much-coveted prize. Having given the sailor's wife a handsome sum of money in hand, and a promise that the first plant raised from it should be sent to her, he started for Liverpool, where, after proper treatment, he soon had the plant exhibited in his show room, where it instantly attracted the attention of amateurs, and from which, after fulfilling his promise to the sailor's wife at Wapping, he realized, if we remember correctly, not less than 300*l* sterling the first year the plant was exhibited. Suffice it, however, he was well repaid for his trouble, and had the honor and felicity of being the first to introduce this exceedingly beautiful and now thoroughly acclimatized plant to the parterree and the cottage gardens of the British Isles."

—The law subjecting priests and divinity students to military service has passed the Italian Senate. Its passage was favored by ministers Minghetti and Riccotti, who said that in practice it would not oppress the clergy, inasmuch as a royal decree would most likely assign all priests enrolled to hospital and ambulance duty. Students, however, will be required to perform military drill.

The Future.

Pretty flowers, can you tell me
What my future life shall be,—
Whether bright or dark the sky
Of the mystic by and by?

Flowers point to worlds above,
Saying, "Trust thy Father's love;
Only he thy future knows—
He doth all events dispose."

Little birds that soar so high,
Can ye future things descry?
Birdies twitter in the tree—
"God hath said, 'Leave that to me.'"

Let us, children though we be,
Learn to trust as well as they;
Let us learn from birds and flowers
That to-day alone is ours.

The Blind Girl of Dijon.

Many years ago, when a student of the University of Geneva, I was accustomed to spend the long summer vacations traveling from village to village in my native France, preaching in the open squares the kingdom of God, and distributing the Bible to such as would accept it from me.

On such an excursion in the summer of 183— I entered a little vine-clad cabin in the environs of Dijon. In its low wide kitchen I saw a middle-aged woman ironing, a boy yet too young for labor, and a girl of seventeen or eighteen, of a sweet, serious aspect, platting straw. She did not raise her eyes as I entered, and on a nearer approach I perceived that she was blind. Poor, sightless Marie! how she was affected when I told her of Him who opened the eyes of the blind, and read to her how blind Bartimeus sat by the wayside begging, when he cried unto Jesus of Nazareth passing by, and received his sight. Then an irrepressible longing such as she had never known before—a longing for God's blessed gift of vision—seized upon the poor blind girl; not that she sighed to see the blue heavens, or the golden light, or to look upon her mother's sweet smile, or gaze in her young brother's laughing eyes; no, not these, but she longed to read the blessed word of Jesus.

There lived at Dijon a man of God, who had gathered around him a few blind, whom he had taught to read and work. I sought him out, told him of Marie, interested him in her, and soon made arrangements that she should come every morning and receive an hour's instruction. I also procured for her a Bible with raised letters for the blind. You should have seen her delight as she started off next morning, a warm, bright August morning, one hand locked in her little brother's, and the other fondly grasping the precious Bible, to take her first lesson. Alas, poor Marie! it requires a delicate touch to distinguish the slightly raised surface and nice outline of the letters, and her fingers were hard and callous with the constant platting of straw. Again and again was the effort made, but to no purpose.

One day, as she sat alone, sorrowfully chipping with her little knife the rough edge of the straw, a happy thought occurred to her. Could she not cut away the thick, hard skin from her fingers, and then it would grow anew, smooth and soft, like the rosy fingers of a child! And so she pared the hard skin from her fingers, heeding not the pain. When the reading lesson was tried again, warm drops trickled from the bleeding fingers along the sacred line. It would not do. After the first bitterness of her disappointment, Marie strove hard to be cheerful. "God had opened the eyes of her soul," she said, "and ought she not to praise him!"

And then the new Bible! ah, surely she must carry that back; some happier blind girl might be able to pluck the fruit from this tree of life, and find healing in its blessed leaves. And holding the dear volume near to her beating heart, she knelt by her white cot to pray: "Dear and blessed Jesus, who lovest the poor, and openest the eyes of the blind, I thank thee that thou hast not hidden thyself from a poor blind girl. And since I cannot read thy heavenly words, I pray that thou wilt whisper them into my soul, that my spirit may not be dark like my poor eyes. I can see thee with my heart, dear Jesus, and thou knowest that I love thee and I love thy Book;" and she touched the open Bible with her lips. Oh, joy! To the soft lips the slight indentations of the raised surface are clearly perceptible. With a low cry of joy she passed line after line across her eager lips. She turns the leaf; the lips lose not their power. It is all clear, all easy now; the lips can do what the toil-hardened fingers could not; she can now learn to read God's holy word!

A twelvemonth after, I visited Dijon. The old kitchen bore its old look, but what a beaming, happy face was Marie's, as she sat in her rude chair, her basket of straw at her feet, reading her beloved Bible. Oh, it was full of light to her! "N'est-il pas doux de baiser ainsi les douces paroles pendant que je lis?" "Is it not blessed to kiss the sweet words as I read?"—Christian Weekly.

I've Got Orders Not to Go.—"I've got orders, positive orders not to go there—orders that I dare not disobey," said a youth who was being tempted to a smoking and gambling saloon.

"Come, don't be so womanish—come along like a man," shouted the youths.

"No, I can't break orders," said John.

"What special orders have you got? Come show them to us, if you can. Show us your orders."

John took a neat wallet from his pocket, and pulled out a neatly folded paper. "It's here," he said, unfolding the paper, and showing it to the boys.

They looked and read aloud:

"Enter not into the path of the wicked. Avoid it; pass not by it; turn from it, and pass away."

"Now," said John, "you see my orders forbid my going with you. They are God's orders, and by his help, I don't mean to break them."

SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY.

ADDRESS OF REV. HENRY COGSWELL.

The Religion of Royal Arch Masonry.

[CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.]

After the obligation which is lengthy, one of the members personates the Deity behind a burning bush, and calls out, "Moses! Moses!" who says, "Here am I." "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, the place whereon thou standest is holy ground. I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. And Moses hid his face for he was afraid to look upon God." During this part of the ceremony the candidate blindfolded has to pass over most rugged roads composed of rollers and different kinds of materials made on purpose for him; hence the application of these passages; "Lord, I cry unto thee; make haste unto me; give ear unto my voice. Let my prayer be set before thee as incense, and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips."

At the close of this ceremony they get the long lost word which is promised in this degree. after it was brought up from the pit found on the ark. It is the name of Deity in the Chaldee, Hebrew and Syriac, and reveals the long lost Master's word. He says, "This word was anciently written only in those sacred characters, and thus preserved from one generation to another. It was lost by the death of Hiram Abiff and found at the building of the Temple—Jah-buh-lun—Jehovah, God." All this is a grand lie, for Hiram was never murdered, therefore there was no word lost.

And now, friends, in closing I wish to observe a few things. In the last obligation the candidate says he will assist a companion Royal Arch Mason, "when I see him engaged in any difficulty, I will espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same, whether he is right or wrong." Again, he promises to keep secret all Royal Arch Mason's secrets, without exception. Is this right?

I wish to denounce the system in most emphatic terms as more wicked than many suppose. Many Christian men think there is no harm, and many sinners think it is all right. Masonry in all its influences is a system of morals which teaches its votaries to trust in it, independent of Christ and his salvation. Its members go down to the grave trusting thus by thousands. They live in a lie, and they die in one.

"There is none other name given among men whereby we can be saved," but the name of Jesus Christ. "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thy heart, that God hath raised him from the dead thou shalt be saved." There is no way to heaven but through Christ; all systems will come short; and I wish to say further that the Old Testament lays down no plan of salvation. The Old Testament is good for history, precept, promise, example, comfort and hope, and must not and cannot be dispensed with. But the New Testament contains the plan of salvation complete in all its parts and provisions. Every soul must be saved through Christ alone. For no man cometh unto the Father but by him.

At the conclusion of his address, Mr. Cogswell remarked on the wealth of the order. He said about eight or nine years ago he was appointed a representative to attend a meeting of the Grand Lodge of the State of New York. They then discussed the question of erecting a suitable temple. As a site for it they bought an old abandoned Presbyterian church on Grand street, New York city. In order to raise money to build this temple every lodge in the state was taxed and sent up its dues regularly. The order had been eight or nine years raising enough money to build the temple, and finally it was completed at the cost of a million and a half of money, and was dedicated a few days ago with great pomp. In the Masonic order you have no plaything in your hands; it has power and wealth, and you must combat it with hard work, earnest prayer and money. He made a strong appeal for the proposed Publishing House in Chicago, urging that the completion of this plan would be one of the severest blows upon the lodge. He defied any Mason who had heard his remarks to come forward and deny their truth. If any objections were to be made let them be in public, and not skulking behind a screen of secrecy. There was no response from the numerous Masons in the audience.

Prof. C. A. Blanchard's Address.

[The only source from which this and the following address could be had was the Pittsburgh dailies. Only a very brief synopsis is therefore possible.—ED.]

On being announced for an address Prof. Blanchard said that his indictment against the lodge was three-fold; because it uproots the family, the state and the church. He referred to the manner in which hundreds of wives are left at home at night, weary and worn from the day's hard toil, while their husbands seek the debasing fascinations of the lodge-room. Would men allow their wives to leave home night after night to seek their pleasure in a secret club? Have they not as much right to join the lodges as men? Would a man allow his wife to take upon herself such obligations of secrecy? There is not a Mason in this house to-night, who, if his wife should attend secret meetings and neglect him and her home as he does her, would live with her twenty-four hours; who would not turn her out of doors, unless she would reform. If it is wrong for wives it is wrong for husbands; and a man who would leave his wife to sit alone through the long, weary hours of the night, ought to be ashamed of himself, and a man who is a man would be ashamed of himself.

I object also to secret associations because they uproot the very foundation of our civil government. Freemasonry takes the virtue out that clause of the Constitution of the United States, which says no citizen of this country shall accept any title of nobility from any foreign prince or potentate. And yet what are these names and robes of Masonry? Secret associations uproot the foundations of God's church. What blasphemy has been shown you to-night as a part of the ceremonies of the Masonic orders? It is a fact that Masonry is a great fraud. Granting that Morgan was not killed; granting that many of the charges against Masonry are untrue, it is yet a great fraud and full of evil; and like every other evil, it will sooner or later find its death and grave. The dawn of freedom from the secret lodges and orders has come, [Applause.] and the daylight will soon spread throughout all the earth in all its glory.

Address of W. E. Coquilette.

Mr Coquilette said he had taken sixteen degrees in Masonry, and was able and willing to confirm what had been said of the secrets of the order of Freemasonry by Bro. Cogswell and other speakers. The first three degrees he took in the United States, but the degrees of Royal Arch and Knight Templar Masonry he took in Canada, where the lodges work the ritual adopted by the Grand Lodge of England and Wales; and owing to the slight technical differences, he was under some disadvantage in endeavoring to explain them. He repeated the oaths he took while being initiated as a Knight Templar, and related part of the ceremonies connected with that degree, and spoke of that part in particular where he, in accordance with the impious formula, drank wine from a human skull, calling for the visitation of the sins of the person whose skull he held upon his own soul in addition to his own, if he ever violated his obligation. He said the reason he took steps to free himself from Masonry was from conscientious principles of right. He not only believed, but he knew that Freemasonry is not only incompatible with but antagonistic to the Christian religion, and should be destroyed from the earth.

Religious Intelligence.

—Quite an extensive revival of religion has been in progress in the Wesleyan University at Middletown, Conn. Twenty-eight students have recently professed conversion. The total number of students in the University is one hundred and eighty-three, one hundred and forty-eight of whom are professors of religion. Forty-eight are licensed to preach.

—The Southern Presbyterian General Assembly, which met at St. Louis, resolved to purge its records of all references to politics. The resolution is thus worded: "That a committee be appointed to review the records of our church courts, and to eliminate therefrom everything which would give it such (i. e, a secular tinge) and that we hear resolve and declare and intend to be a non-secular and a non-political church."

—Nine commissioners have been appointed by the General Conference of the Methodist church to meet nine commissioners appointed last year by the General Conference of the Methodist Protestant church, to devise a basis of union. A meeting of the joint commissioners will probably be held this summer.

—An Old Catholic Congress will be held at Breslau, Aug. 20–22. A Union Conference is to be held at Bonn, about the middle of August, composed of old Catholics, of members of the Orthodox churches of Russia and Greece, and of the church of England. A similar conference was held in Bonn last year. Its object is to prepare the way for the agreement upon fundamental dogmas of the bodies concerned, and their consequent recognition of each other.

—The Australian Methodists are organizing missions to New Britain, New Ireland, and other islands off the coast of New Guinea, and are generally prepared to take an active part in missionary work.

—The Baptists of Great Britain report a clear increase of 10,582 members, during the past year, the largest gain they have had in any one year since 1864.

—During the last ten years, the number of Presbyterians in England has increased fifty per cent., and at the same time the church is receiving immense support in the south of England, and from those who had formerly belonged to the Established Church.

—The closing services of Messrs. Moody and Sankey, in the East End of London, were attended by immense congregations. The final meeting, held in Bow road Hall, June 8th, was attended by 15,000 persons, and the services of the last three days, it is estimated, were attended by 80,000 persons. Additional meetings were also held in Victoria Theater by the Earl of Cavan, and Major Cole of Chicago, who gathered large audiences.

—The Rev. William Taylor, of California, who came over from India to assist Messrs. Moody and Sankey, has been holding special services in Bristol, England. His congregations have numbered as many as 1,000 persons. Upwards of 1,000 tickets containing the names of converts have been sent to the ministers of the various places of worship in Bristol. Mr. Taylor, it is reported, is not an "emotional" preacher, but appeals to the understanding and conscience.

—Rev. Wm. Howitt, the well known author of "Visits to Remarkable Places" and other works, says in a letter from Italy where he has been sojourning for some time: "I have seen since I have been here, Bibles snatched from the hands of colporteurs by priests, and trampled in the dirt. In the rural districts, even at this hour, the colporteurs are driven out by the priests, and the Bibles they have sold to the people are collected and burned."

—The General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland adopted resolutions expressive of their great interest in the work of evangelization as carried on among the freedmen of the United States, and commending it to the liberality of their churches.

—The whole Bible has now been printed in the Mandarin dialect, the spoken language of the Chinese. The New Testament was translated by a committee of American and English missionaries and the Old Testament by Dr. Shereschewsky, of the American Episcopal Mission. The entire Mandarin Bible has been printed at the expense of the American Bible Society, at the press of the American Board in Peking. by the veteran printer, Mr. Hunt, who had previously superintended the work upon the entire Tamil Bible in Madras.

News of the Week.

City.

Judge Farwell has decided that the dissolutio nof the Police Board by the city Council is legal, but appeal has been taken to the Supreme Court and an injunction has stopped proceedings. The Police Board is a great incumbrance and can well be spared. ——A strip of land worth several millions of dollars, on which stand the Illinois Central Depot and a portion of the tracks, is in dispute, having just been originally entered at the Land Office at Springfield, although it has been occupied and presumably owned by the railroad company for the last thirty years, As there has been one decision of the Supreme Court fixing the ownership, the railroad company think this a blackmailing scheme.

General.

The particulars of a daring attempt at train-robbing are forwarded from Terre Haute, Ind. As usual, the desperadoes selected a lonely place on the road, where the train only stopped for water, and then made their attack upon the engineer, whom they ordered to "pull out," and when he hesitated for a moment they shot him dead. The express messenger, however, barricaded his car door and kept off the robbers until rescuers came.——The funeral of Gen. Frank P. Blair took place in St. Louis on Sabbath afternoon attended with great public demonstration.——At a late business meeting of Plymouth church, Mr. Beecher's salary was increased by a nearly unanimous vote from $20,000 to $100,000. It is generally understood among the congregation that this enormous salary is only for this year, and is mainly intended to help defray the expense of the trial.——A terrible storm of wind, rain and hail occurred near Denver, Col., last week, causing great damage. The Mississippi has been causing great damage at Quincy, Ill., and St. Louis from sudden overflow at St. Louis the river is the highest ever known for many years. Thousands of acres of corn are being destroyed on the bottom lands. ——In demolishing the Old Dutch Church in New York, the home of the Fulton Street daily prayer-meeting, the tower fell against the wall of another building almost destroying it with its contents. It being out of business hours great loss of life was prevented.——The town of Postville, Cattaraugus county, N. Y., was nearly deatroyed by fire on last Wednesday night. All of the business portion but one store and the railway depot was burned.

Foreign.

The Carlists seem about to begin a forward march. All the bright hopes that Alfonso brought to Spain have vanished, and his best generals are less active than heretofore. They have met defeat instead of victory. The King has not been more successful in Madrid. He has failed to satisfy the church and has enraged the liberals. Hence the Ministry seem ready to try the effect of as much religious toleration as will permit Protestants to worship in back streets, but such concession will disgust the clericals and not satisfy Alfonso's political supporters. Neither has the King made peace between the warring factions. The press is muzzled to prevent it from being disloyal, and there are no funds to pay the army or navy.

The commission of nine members appointed to prepare the draft of a new Constitution for the kingdom of Spain have concluded their labors. The draft opens with a declaration of individual and religious liberty. The Legislature is to consist of a Senate and Chamber of deputies, composed as in other liberal monarchical States. The magistrates are irremovable. It is believed the Constitution will be adopted without modification.

The funeral of the ex-Emperor Ferdinand of Austria took place at Vienna on Tuesday, and was attended by all the high Austrian dignitaries.

[Circular.]

THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

Its Neccssity as a Reform—Its Pecuniary Needs and how they may be met.

Freemasonry is the parent of a numerous progeny of secret orders, which it originated and now protects and controls in its own interests.

These secret orders are essentially the same in moral character and despotic government, and being largely officered by Masons are thus readily wielded by a few designing, far-seeing men for the accomplishment of their purposes. The record of these secret orders, and particularly that of Masonry, proves them capable of the most flagrant crimes, "murder and treason not excepted," and their present military preparation indicates a purpose to assert their supremacy and subdue by force those whom they cannot control by strategy.

The esoteric character and workings of the lodge, given by those who have left it, which are fully corroborated by authentic books and publications of the orders, compel the conviction in honest, well-informed minds, that Freemasonry is the center of a gigantic system, which system is nothing less than a deep-laid, sworn conspiracy against the social, political and Christian rights of mankind; and hence the necessity for their silence and eternal vigilance lest this fact should come to the knowledge of those whose destruction they seek to compass, before the conspirators are prepared to strike the final blow.

It is this conspiracy which the National Christian Association is endeavoring to expose, withstand and remove, in order to save the churches of Christ from being depraved; to redeem the administration of justice from perversion, and our republican government from corruption. To accomplish this object the Association seeks to unite all who believe in the equal rights of men as set forth in the Declaration of our National Independence upon the Christian platform of supreme love to God and equal rights to men, as opposed to the sworn favoritism of the lodge; thus forming a nucleus around which men of every nationality, political antecedents and Christian connection can gather to unite their efforts and prayers for the extermination of a common foe.

When eight years ago this enterprise was started by a few determined individuals, it was by many considered an extremely hazardous undertaking. Friends were timid while enemies disdained and ridiculed the attempt. But results have confirmed both the wisdom and the necessity of the movement.

The enemy seeing his peril has been more active and vigilant, and has left no artifice untried which promised relief. Proscription in business, offers of bribes to young men by promising position and promotion if they would join the lodge, have been freely proffered, and attempted poisoning and midnight assassinations have been called into requisition in the vain hope of averting that doom which the conspirators saw must inevitably succeed the exposure of their dark deeds.

While such and like results have been produced in the lodge the people have been partially aroused and apprised of their danger, and are slowly but surely coming to the rescue. If some have been intimidated by persecution and proscription others have been encouraged to step boldly to the front and sound the alarm until the voice of warning is heard ringing along the whole line of conflict. The general press has broken the long silence by which it was muzzled, and knowing politicians view our movement as an ominous factor in the approaching presidential campaign.

These years of conflict have shown that the strongholds of the lodge are not impregnable, and that what is needed to insure success is, under God, a vigorous, united, uncompromising effort on the part of those who are free from these galling bonds. Thousands who have been ensnared and betrayed are anxiously awaiting a safe opportunity to utter their convictions and sever their connection with an institution which is utterly revolting to their better natures.

The good hand of God hitherto so manifestly guiding this great work had brought his servants "by a way that they knew not" until they found their labors greatly hindered for want of greater concert in action and a recognized existence in law. Proffers of bequests and valuable donations which they were legally incapable of accepting together with the pressing need of funds for our work forced upon us the question of incorporation. Accepting the issues as presented in the providence of God, such of the friends as could conveniently assemble, met on the 7th day of April, 1874, in compliance with the legal forms in such cases made and provided, and thus became a body corporate under the laws of the State of Illinois, with power to hold property, execute deeds, receive bequests, and transact such business as pertained to the legitimate purposes and objects of the National Christian Association. This was the birthday of our organization as known to the civil authorities. A careful legal examination of the case revealed the fact that there was no way in which a circulating system of mass conventions, meeting at different and distant points, could be transformed into a corporate body, and showed the only alternative to be either to abandon the effort to incorporate altogether, or else to begin with such a number as could comply with the requirements of the law, and i is to this fact that the fewness of the first corporate members is to be attributed. They were all that could be conveniently gathered at the time, and sufficient to comply with the legal forms Provisions were made in the by-laws, and steps immediately taken to increase the membership. Thirty-three names have already been added and the number will be increased from friends known to be true to our cause, from time to time, as the by-laws provide and the interests of the cause require.

The work of incorporation completed, the question next in order was how shall our forces be augmented and our efficiency be increased. As the Association had become capable of transacting business it was evident that one of the first great needs was a financial basis upon which as a business transaction this movement against the lodge could be anchored. Without such a basis all felt that the wisest efforts would be greatly crippled. At this juncture Philo Carpenter, Esq., of Chicago, submitted the following liberal proposition to the friends of our cause throughout the United States which is now awaiting their response, viz: Mr. Carpenter offers to donate to the National Christian Association, free from all incumbrance whatever, a building and lot, suited to its purposes and centrally located at No. 221 West Madison street, Chicago, Ill., worth twenty thousand dollars, as soon as there shall be secured from other sources to the N. C. A. for its uses and objects, the farther sum of thirty thousand dollars in money, or in good negotiable, interest-bearing notes; provided said sum of $30,000 be secured before the first day of April, 1878. Mr. Carpenter proposes farther, that as soon as the sum of ten thousand dollars is secured for the uses and objects of the Association to give possession and control of said premises to the Association until April first, 1878; provided further that the said sum of ten thousand dollars shall be secured for the uses and objects of the Association before the first day of April, 1876.

This is Mr. Carpenter's offer which is submitted and recorded in due and legal form, and which is now awaiting a response from the numerous friends throughout the country. To say that it is a generous offer is to say less than the truth. It is munificent, and worthy both the donor and the cause to which it is proffered, and should there be a correspondingly liberal response from the numerous friends of our cause, the National Christian Association will very soon be located in a home and headquarters of its own, with suitable accommodations for presses, sale-room, offices, room for daily prayer-meetings, where the lodge shall not exercise censorship over Christ's freemen, and the means for owning and publishing its own literature, and aiding more extensively in the lecture and general field work. The friends near the center and some more remote have already laid their consecrated offering upon the altar in sums of from one dollar up to one thousand dollars until the aggregate result is over five thousand dollars, more than one half the amount required to gain temporary occupancy of the building, and over one-sixth the sum necessary to secure a bona fide warantee deed. The work is now fairly inaugurated and shall it pause or delay? We believe the quick response from a multitude of patriotic hearts and from those scattered over this land whom Christ has made free indeed, will be: No; emphatically No. The work shall not stop. It must not even be delayed. My efforts shall not cease, nor shall my prayers be hindered until the capstone of this enterprise is laid with shouting and this work of reform fairly equipped for the great struggle of emancipating the nations from lodge tyranny and misrule, and the Bride of Christ from the loathsome contagion of her most malignant foe.

For the accommodation of those wishing to aid in this work by giving notes or making bequests suitable forms have been prepared which will be cheerfully furnished with any information desired on application to H. L. Kellogg, Treasurer. N. C. A., No. 13 Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Liquor War in Ohio.

Columbus, O., July 7.—For some days at Westerville, Ohio, there has been a conflict between the citizens and Henry H. Corbin, who recently opened a liquor saloon within the limits of the corporation. On Monday night a charge of gunpowder exploded under the saloon, shattering the building.

Upon Corbin's application, warrants were issued for the arrest of the clergy of Westerville, the postmaster and four other citizens. The warrants charge the persons designated, and others who are unknown, with riotous conduct in assaulting and encouraging an assault upon Corbin's saloon.

The persons for whom writs were issued appeared in the Justice's Court at Westerville to-day, accompanied by over 200 friends, among whom were nearly 100 ladies, who marched to the court-room in a procession. The defendants were anxious to proceed to trial, but as the prosecutor declared he was not ready, they waived an examination, and were bound over in the sum of $500.

The people of Westerville are fierce in their denunciation of Corbin, the saloon-keeper, and declare he himself placed the powder in his store which partly demolished his building on Monday night. They have raised $500 to prosecute the case and are determined that Westerville shall maintain its old reputation, as a town without a saloon.

A Methodist Editor on the Anniversary.

The Pittsburgh Advocate published the following note during the Convention, which is complimentary with perhaps a doubtful intention. The editor must yet learn that the dark places of the earth need a particular application of sunshine to expose and dry up their abominations; and he himself purposes to "live something better every day" yet does the lodge construe his usual silence a very severe protest? But he says:

"An Anti-secret society convention is in session at Library Hall as we go to press. It has brought together some of the prominent speakers and writers on this subject, among whom are President Rogers, Editor Wright of the Religious Telescope, President Blanchard, Editor Kerr, of the United Presbyterian, pastors Sloane, Cooper, Hart, Milligan, Post, Cogswell and others. These men are eminent Christians, and their motives are beyond question. The speeches of the occasion, thus far, have been marked by intelligence, fair dealing, and honest zeal. We hope these men, and others of equal integrity, may agitate the churches until there shall be no necessity or excuse for any other organization for the promotion of morality and benevolence, aside from that authorized by the Gospel. If the church would but do its whole duty on the bodies and souls of the people, and thus fulfill the terms required in the New Testament, the protest of conventions would be uncalled for. Let every Christian arise to his duty, and the whole church arouse to a sense of its divine prerogatives, and the secret orders will be shined away by the fullness of the light. It is far better to live the right life in Christ Jesus, and thereby recommend the truth, than to strike downward at random in the dark at real or supposed iniquities. The best protest against Masonry would be, if possible, to live something infinitely better every day."

Home and Health Hints.

Look Out for Nuisances.—We have now again reached the hot season of the year when we must begin to keep up a sharp lookout for the causes of disease if we would avoid those grave maladies which annually make such havoc among all classes of the people, especially in cities. Such diseases as dysentery, diarrhea, cholera morbus, and cholera infantum, almost invariably arise from the introduction into the system of the products of organic decomposition. Hence the importance of attending well to the removal of everything that can undergo putrefaction. Garbage, sewage, and offal of every description, should be wholly removed from the premises every day to insure against danger of poisoning from the noxious gases to which they give rise.

Keeping Hams in Warm Weather.—Some of my neighbors wrap their hams in tight sacks and pack them in dry oats or bran. I have read of packing them in dry ashes, but I think I have a better way: "As soon as I can after the hams are smoked, I cut them in slices as for frying, fry them nearly enough, and then pack them closely in stone jars, filling the interstices with fat that is fried out of the meat. When filled, lay on a weight until the meat is cold, and if there is not as much as half an inch at least of fat above the meat, melt some sweet lard and pour over. When you wish to take out some, put pieces with the adhering grease into the frying-pan, and when melted, pour the fat back on the meat in the jar, and it is air tight again. Meat kept in this way will keep sweet as a nut in any place where lard will keep, the year round, and is much handier I think. By using the pancake griddle on the front of the stove and frying-pans on the back, a ham is very quickly cooked.

To Remove Mildew.—Make a very weak solution of chloride of lime in water—about a heaping teaspoonful to a quart of water—strain it carefully, and dip the spot or the garment into it, and if the mildew does not disappear immediately, lay it in the sun for a few minutes, or dip it again into the lime water. The work is effectually and speedily done, and the chloride of lime neither rots the cloth or removes delicate colors, when sufficiently diluted, and the article rinsed afterward in clear water.

Scrap Pudding.—Put the scraps of bread, crust and crumb, into a bowl, with sufficient milk to cover them well. Cover with a saucepan, lid, or plate, and put it into the oven to soak for half an hour. Take it out and mash the bread with a fork until it is pulp; then add a handful of raisins and as many currants, a teaspoonful of brown sugar, half a cup of milk, some candied lemon peel, and one egg. Stir it up well, grease a pudding dish, and pour the pudding in. Grate over a little nutmeg, put it into a moderate oven, and let it bake for an hour and a half.

How to Get Rid of Insects.—At this season of the year it is important for all housekeepers to be on their guard against the insidious attempts of the various species of ants and the detestable cockroaches to invade the kitchen and pantries or storerooms. Sprigs of wintergreen will make the small red ants leave their cherished haunts. Borax, powdered and put into the crevices where the cockroaches abide, will finally cause them to disappear, but we have found concentrated lye, melted into a sort of paste and applied with a knife, a more expeditious mode of destroying these noxious insects. Scalding alum water is also certain death to cockroaches.

Black shoes may be bronzed by a strong solution of aniline in alcohol.

Farm and Garden.

A Word to Farmer's.—Never keep your cattle short. You can't afford it. If you starve them they will starve you; besides it's wicked. Be merciful to your beast.

Never hoe a great field for a little crop, or mow twenty acres for five loads of hay; you can't afford it.

Enrich your land and it will pay you richly.

Take care of your tools, spades, shovels, rakes, hoes, pitchforks, etc., keep them housed when not in use.

Above all things cultivate your heart as well as your soil; "whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

Keep notes of remarkable events.

Never build a spacious barn till you have something to put in it.

Good fences make good neighbors.

Cows well fed in the winter give more milk in the summer.

What to do with the boys on the farm is shown by a correspondent of the Agricultural Gazette in a way that is plain, and will be undoubtedly satisfactory wherever it may be tried. In this case there were thirty calves to be fed by the pail. They were put in charge of a boy who had never before had to do with these wayward creatures, but who was tractable and fond of animals. He was promised the sum of $2 as a small but satisfactory inducement in case of success. The calves were put in pairs in wattled pens. The boy became fond of his charge, and worried greatly about their well-doing, feeding them with regularity and so successfully as to agreeably astonish his employer. Now, if one boy will act thus under the stimulus of a responsibility and a small reward—and the former was probably more effective than the latter—why should not other boys go and do likewise? It is reasonable and proper that all young stock on the farm should be made the special charge of the boys with a proprietary interest in their welfare.

Currant Worms.—A correspondent of the Congregationalist gives directions how to prevent currant bushes from being destroyed by worms. The eggs are deposited on the under side of a tender leaf about the time the suckers of a currant bush are a foot high. When the eggs begin to hatch, the young feed on the juice of the leaf until they can crawl. Then they drop down and scatter. Soon after the egg is deposited the leaf will turn a purple reddish color. Such leaves should be plucked as fast as they appear, and hundreds of little creatures will be found. The microscope reveals them plainly. The leaves should be cut so carefully that none of the destructive insects will be scattered.

Cut out the following and paste it in your scrap book. It is worth a year's subscription to any reader of this paper:

The leaves of the elder, if strewn among corn or other grain when it is put into the bin, will effectually preserve it from the ravages of the weevil. The juice will also kill bedbugs and maggots. Insects never touch elder bushes. The leaves of elder scattered over cabbage, cucumbers, squashes and other plants subject to the ravages of the insects, effectually shields them. The plum and other fruits may be saved by placing on the branches and among them bunches of the elder leaves.

Levington's Key to Masonry.

This is Rev. Mr. Levington's last, and in the judgment of its author, best work on Masonry. The contents of the first chapter are as follows: "Commencement and growth of Speculative or Symbolic Freemasonry—A table showing the thing at a glance—The use that the Atheists made of it—Identical with Illuminism—Its connection with the French Revolution, and with the Irish Rebellion—The action of the British Parliament with regard to it—Proofs of its diabolical purposes—Its Introduction, doings, progress and designs in the United States."

The contents of the Eleventh chapter are thus startling:

"Knights of the Golden Circle—Graphic account of them by a seceding Knight, and remarks thereon, showing the identity of the order with Masonry—Quotations from Sir Walter Scott."

This work is thrilling in statement, and powerful in argument. 425 pages,

Capt. Wm. Morgan was Mr. Greene's neighbor in Batavia, N. Y., and a member of the same lodge with him at the time of the great excitement in 1826. The titles to these chapters are sufficiently exciting to give the book a large sale:—"The Storm Gathering;" "Abduction of Morgan;" "Attempted Abduction of Miller and his Rescne;" "What became of Morgan;" "What Morgan Actually Revealed;" "Confession of the Murderer;" "Allegations against Freemasonry, etc."

History of The Abduction and Murder of Cap't. Wm. Morgan,

As prepared by Seven Committees of Citizens, appointed to ascertain the fate of Morgan.

This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons, abdncted and Murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offence than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife, and no candid person after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable FREEMASONS, in the Empire State, with others were concerned in this crime.

Postage on the Cynosure.

THE POSTAGE ON THE CYNOSURE MUST BE PAID AT CHICAGO. It is twenty cents a year.

The cost of postage now depends entirely on the size and weight, and therefore some smaller papers charge but fifteen cents; and others about the size of the Cynosure charge twenty-five cents a year for postage.

If the subscription price of the CYNOSURE was $2.50 or $3.00 a year, the price of many religious papers containing no more reading matter, we might afford to pay the postage ourselves, but at $2.00 a year we cannot do this with our present Subscription list.

Therefore let all send the postage, 20 cents a year, 10 cents for half a year with their renewals.

The commission on one new subscription for a year will pay the postage on your own and the new subscriber's paper. We would rather have the postage paid by commissions than in any other way.

When postage is not paid we shall have to shorten the time of subscription sufficiently to pay it.

TERMS FOR THE CYNOSURE.

$2.00 per annum, in advance.
20c " " " " for postage.

All who canvass for the CYNOSURE are allowed a cash commission of twenty per cent. or twenty-five per cent in books at retail prices, one-half this percentage on renewals, and any one sending $100. for the CYNOSURE during three months, will be entitled to an extra five per cent.

All responsible persons who desire to promote this reform are authorized to act as agents.

CLUB RATES.

No commission is allowed on club rates. Club rates are intended for those who wish to give the commission to subscribers.

Subscriptions may all be sent at one time, or at different times, and in all cases the sender should keep an account of the names and amounts sent.
